Hogs on the farm are likely to be infested with worms during the hot summer months. These may easily be expelled with a simple remedy recommended by the veterinary section of the Iowa experiment station at Ames. The formula is santonin, 5 grains; areca nut, 3 drams; calomel, 3 grains, and sodium bicarbonate, 1 dram.

This amount constitutes a dose for a 100 pound pig. Twice as much is recommended for a 200 pound pig and 2½ times as much for a 300 pound animal. When this remedy is used by the animal husbandry men at the Iowa station, feed is withheld for at least 18 hours before feeding the mixture. The dose is repeated in 8 or 10 days to make sure that all of the worms have been expelled.

Where all the ingredients cannot be ... santonin and ... can be used for each pig of 100 pounds can be used.

TAKING THE HOME PAPER

Do you know of a person in this whole community who would be willing to go through life month by month and year by year without a knowledge of the news features of the township in which he resides? Would you like to be that person? It is difficult to convince the average reader of the real value of his home paper unless he has at some time or other been forced to do without it. Then it is that its value is brought home to them. Most people subscribe for the home paper, read it, enjoy it, and absorb the news it contains as a matter of course, giving scarcely a thought to the vast amount of labor entailed in the production of the paper. And yet that issue means a tremendous concentration of thought, of energy and perseverance ... of the editor and his ... No longer is it regarded as good management to count uniform pieces one by one in manufacturing plants. Scales especially constructed for the purpose are now being employed for counting material of like units. Not only is the weighing machine more accurate because it substitutes simple manual operation and the highest degree of mechanical precision for the complicated mental figuring and inaccuracies of other systems, but it counts from 100 to 1,000 per cent faster than the time worn methods.

The splitting up of the Rothschild family of Frankfort into British, French and other branches has been an interesting though not remarkable phenomenon of the last 150 years of finance, and was recently instanced by the fact that a small French cruiser, that recently removed Germans from a Spanish liner, was formerly a Rothschild yacht.

Ida Grove, Ia., July 8.—Sheriff J. W. Chris, of Sac City, was here yesterday endeavoring to gain some information as to the whereabouts of Clay Freeney, an Ida Grove boy, for whom he had a warrant on a charge of assault and attempt to commit a statutory crime Freeney celebrated the Fourth of July at Lakewood park, and there formed the acquaintance of a young girl from Early. He induced her to accompany him to a part of the grounds unfrequented by the crowd, and there attempted an assault, striking the girls in the back of the head with a pop bottle after she had battled with him for her honor. Before he could accomplish his desire he was frightened away and in his endeavor to avoid discovery he ran into a barb wire fence, cutting a gash under his right ear.

He remained in hiding in Lake View for some hours and was picked up by an auto load of Ida Grove people who had been to the lake celebrating and brought to Ida Grove. From here he was taken to Cherokee in an automobile by a young friend, and all trace has been lost since he arrived in that town Freeney told the Ida Grove parties with whom he rode to this city, that he had become involved in a fight at the resort and did not want to get arrested, but to the young man who took him to Cherokee he told the truth after arriving in that town.

The girl was discovered in an unconscious condition about an hour after the attempted assault, and Sheriff Criss says that she has been practically unconscious ever since her discovery, and that but very little hope is entertained for recovery.

Freeney is a brother of the Charles Freeney, who made a state wide reputation in athletics during his time in the public schools of Ida Grove. He is small of stature, dark complexion, and would easily be taken for a mulatto, thick lipped, 21 years of age and has a deformed limb, walking with a limp. A reward has been offered for his apprehension or for information leading to his capture.

MAN IN GRADERS' CAMP HELD ON MURDER CHARGE

Jefferson, Ia., July 8.—A man named McCullough was arrested at a road graders' camp several miles northwest of here and placed in jail charged with the murder of a workman named Jones. Little is known concerning details of the alleged murder. McCullough, a man about 65 years of age, has a contract with this (Greene) county for the construction of roads, and it is said that fences, who had formerly been in his employ, came to the camp Wednesday night. It also is reported that he had been drinking and that in the trouble which followed the shooting took place. Friends of McCullough are said to exonerate him. It is claimed that he shot in self defense. The sheriff, deputy and County Attorney Quillan spent most of the night at the camp and are still there working on the case, and it is rumored that other arrests may be made.

DES MOINES WOMAN EXPIRES AFTER GIVING TESTIMONY

Des Moines, Ia., July 8.—Mrs George A Butcher, 815 East Ninth street, attended the wife desertion case brought in the municipal court against B. W. Faust, a painter, by his wife, Mrs. Elsie M. Faust

Mrs. Butcher gave her testimony, stepped from the witness stand in Judge Carlson's court, was seized with a fit of coughing, followed by a hemorrhage and a few minutes later died in one of the anterooms before the arrival of a physician.

The case on trial was the one prosecuted by the city in the criminal division of the municipal court against B. W. Faust, charged with deserting his wife and four children.

Mrs. Butcher was the principal witness in the case.

DENISON—The automobile garage of Kosmehl and Green at Charter Oak was burned to the ground on Wednesday morning. An employe was at work on some repairs on a gasoline tank when his burning torch set the tank on fire. In the hurry and excitement a gas can with five gallons in was overturned and with this the entire building was on fire and nothing was saved. Four good automobiles were lost. The garage was worth some $2,000 and no insurance.

DENISON—The following are the delegates to the democratic state convention from this county: M O'Conner, J J McDermott, G. L. Caswell, Theo. Rohwer; Chas. Smith, P. S. Dunham, Chas. Speck, P. J. NASHVILLE TREASURY LOOTED BY OFFICERS

Nashville, Tenn., July 7.—The treasury of the city of Nashville was looted of $71,187.79 by former city officials from 1909 to 1914, according to the final report to the city commission today by James Cameron, an expert accountant, who has been auditing the city's financial books.

The committee did not intimate what action it would take on the reports.

BIG CITY CABARETS LEAD TO ARREST OF CEDAR RAPIDS GIRL

Chicago, July 8.—Miss Helen Becker, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., is under arrest.

She is 19 years old and, although her career in Chicago was of short duration, the police say it was spectacular.

According to the police, the young woman recently was sent by her family to St. Mary's school, near South Bend, Ind. Dissatisfied with her surroundings there, she came to Chicago.

At a cabaret, she says, she made the acquaintance of a young woman who gave the name of Miss Reta Gordon, but who, the police say, is the wife of Attorney Harry J. Meyerovitz.

Miss Gordon lives at 918 Galt avenue. She took Miss Becker to live with her and last Saturday she was left in charge of the house while Miss Gordon went with friends for an automobile ride.

When she returned, Miss Becker was missing. She notified the police that clothing and jewelry worth $200 had also disappeared.

Miss Becker was arrested at the Union station yesterday and later Miss Gordon identified some of the missing articles as being her property.

"Yes, that's my white fox scarf," said Miss Gordon when she confronted Miss Becker at the police station.

She said she would notify the young woman's parents of her plight and intimated that she will not be prosecuted.

BROTHER AND SISTER WED; HE'S HELD IN CITY JAIL

Shenandoah, Ia., July 8.—Robert M. England, who has been employed on the James McMahon farm, was arrested on a charge of incest and placed in the city jail. The information was filed by Frank Branson, foster father of Miss Marguerite Branson, whose real name is Miss Margie Ellen England.

She and England are said to have been married at Red Oak Saturday by a Lutheran minister. They are brother and sister. They claim they did not know their relationship. A sister of their father arrived from Chicago and identified the two as her niece and nephew. The young woman recently returned from Milwaukee, where she lived with her mother, coming back to be with her foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Branson.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS CENSURE HARDING; FAVOR MEREDITH

Richland, Ia., July 8.—The Christian Workers assembly of the Friends church of Iowa, in session at Richland, Ia., June 26 to 29, expressed themselves on the moral welfare of the state in the following resolution:

Be it resolved, That whereas, the office of governor of Iowa involves vast consequences to the public welfare, and whereas, W. L. Harding, one of the candidates for this office, while a member of the general assembly of Iowa during the 32d, 33d and 34th terms, also, while he was filling the office of lieutenant governor of the state, failed to give his support to some of the great reform measures which were introduced into our legislature during the time above stated, and whereas, Mr. Harding is known to be in sympathy with the liquor interests, we cannot conscientiously give our support to his election.

And whereas, E. T. Meredith is a man of clean life, and is a man full of courage and masterful executive ability, and is fearless in his advocacy of state and national prohibition of the liquor traffic, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is our profound conviction that it is the duty of every citizen of the state of Iowa to work for Mr. Meredith's election next November, and to this end we pledge our support.

A. J. Hanson,
C T. Moore,
D T. Collins,
Committee on Resolutions.
R. R. Newby, President of Assembly.

CONFESSED MURDERER CLAIMS FAMOUS KIN

Oakland, Cal., July 8.—Compton Vaughan, who claims to be the son of the late Mrs. Kate Compton Vaughan, a New Orleans writer, and Franklin Vaughan, an attorney of Monroe, La., confessed to the police here early today that he shot and killed George Barnet, a foreman in charge of the construction of a dam near Sunol, Cal., during a brawl over a card game yesterday. Vaughan was employed as a laborer on the dam.

TOURISTS ARE ROBBED BY LONE HIGHWAYMAN

Yosemite Valley, Cal., July 8.—Five stage loads of tourists entering the Yosemite valley were held up yesterday at Wawona by a highwayman who operated singly and took his departure on a motorcycle. He collected about $400.

The victims included several tourists from eastern cities.

Except that the bandit rode a motorcycle and the stage coaches were all motor driven vehicles, the holdup was not unlike the performances of early mining days or scenes staged for moving pictures.

The bandit stopped the first car by means of a log rolled across the roadway. As the car stopped he stepped out from the brush and with a sawed-off shotgun assumed charge of the situation. He waited until the five coaches had reached his blockade. He then ordered everybody out into the road, took only their cash and rode away.

James Ogram, age 84, of Beaver Dam, Wis., although shaved twice a weekly regularly, had his first shave in a barber shop a few days ago. He told the barber who shaved him that he had used the same razor for 40 years.

SEEKS INFORMATION ABOUT CARE OF GUARDS

Washington, July 6.—A resolution was introduced in the House by Representative Moore, of Pennsylvania, today calling on the secretary of war for a report on how national guardsmen mustered into the federal service have been fed, equipped, armed and transported. It would ask if men have been sent to the border in cars lacking sleeping accomodations and light.

MORE COMPENSATION FOR INJURED WORKER MAY BE RECOMMENDED

Commissioner Funk Also Will Favor State Insurance Fund.

Des Moines, Ia., July 7.—A state fund insurance in connection with the Workmen's Compensattion law may be recommended to the next session of the Iowa legislature by A. B. Funk, Iowa industrial commissioner, in his next annual report, it has been learned here.

The commissioner also is considering suggesting to the state legislators that the compensation granted injured workmen be increased from 50 per cent to 60 per cent of the weekly wage. This, it is believed, will be a greater benefit for the small wage earner in case of injury, and, according to the commissioner, the smaller wage a man earns the more protection he is entitled to.

The present law provides for medical attendance not to exceed $100 for two weeks treatment for injured workmen. The commissioner believes that this period of medical treatment should be increased to four weeks. He has found that sometimes the injured wage earner needs attention for longer than two weeks but that physicians will, in some cases make sufficient extra visits to bring the charges $100 for the two weeks treatment, and no allowance is made for further care.

Action should be taken, according to Commissioner Funk to prevent attorneys charging workmen exorbitant fees. In arbitration cases the commissioner has found the majority of lawyers to be very fair but in some cases it is reported that attorneys have demanded half the amount of compensation awarded. Where the wage earner appeals to the commissioner to fix compensation allowed attorneys, he may limit the amount to be paid for legal services. However, unless the injured workman especially asks that this be done, the commissioner is without authority.

SOME GIDDY NAMES SEEN ON ROSTER OF MILITIA

Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Ia., July 7.—United States army officers, checking the muster rolls at the mobilization camp of the Iowa national guard, whiled away time on an unpleasant, laborious task by picking out peculiar names from among members of the guard.

The prize names so far have been those of Musician Puff, who plays the biggest horn in the band, and Private Marcher, who reported at sick call with corns

One peculiar thing noticed in preparation of the muster roll was the comparative scarcity of Smiths in the guard

The seasons were well represented on the rolls. Springer, Sommers and Winters are privates Cyrus Fall is a corporal

Private Walker walks approximately seven hours a day at drill. Waters was put on kitchen police. Surgeons professed to find something significant in the fact that in one company there were a Legg, Head Tow Jowl and Brow Another company had a Hart, Wood, Cole, Irons, Steele, Ferro and Tinn appeared on the rolls. Richman and Poorman were present, but in different companies Sergeant Slacker took the oath. Private Wedlack appeared on the list as a single man.

VISITS SONS IN WAR CAMP; MOTHER DIES ON WAY HOME

Ottumwa, Ia., July 7.—Mrs. H. R. Fiedler, 45, was instantly killed early yesterday morning when a car in which she was returning to Ottumwa from a visit with her sons at Camp Dodge, plunged over an embankment north of Fremont, 20 miles from here The woman's head struck a fence and her neck was broken.

Mrs. Fiedler had two sons, Oliver and Clarence in company G, Third infantry and when she left Ottumwa was in happy spirits at the prospect of getting to visit her soldier boys. Reaching Camp Dodge she spent the entire day with her sons and when the time for departure came kissed them goodby and reluctantly left the camp.

LOOSE HOME DESTROYED; MAJESTIC THEATER SAVED

Dubuque, Ia., July 7.—Fire last evening at 6 o'clock gutted the four-story building recently purchased by the loose lodge for a home and lodge rooms. The fire is thought to have resulted from spontaneous combustion on the fourth floor in the varnish room of the Homan Furniture company, which occupied half of the building

The loss on building will be $25,999, with probably half that amount on the furniture stock, both of which are partially insured. One half of the ground floor was occupied by a shooting gallery, where the loss was small. The rooms over the gallery were vacant.

The Majestic theater, next to the loose building, was saved from destruction only because it is protected by 24-inch walls, and is of cement construction throughout, even to the roof.

WITH GAS PIPE FOR GUN, WATERLOO MAN MEETS DEATH

Waterloo, Ia., July 7.—Edward Knapp, aged 35, was instantly killed at Waverly yesterday while celebrating. He used a gas pipe as a cannon and a piece of metal severed his jugular artery.

MARINE CORPS CALLS BEEF "CANNED WILLIE"

In an "Encyclopedia of Military Terms," just published by Canadian troops serving in France, an old staple army article, corned beef, is given the name of "bully."

Members of the United States marine corps, who publish no encyclopedia, call the same thing "canned Willie," and they point out that troops all over the world have different and expressive terms describing the tinned corned beef product.

Our marines given no reason for their "canned Willie" version of the corned beef affair, other than that they try to be original in all things, and that, in going about the world in performance of duty, they learn what the other fellow is doing in a nicknaming way and are thus able to keep right up to the minute.

He Knew.

We were at the supper table when 4-year-old Dorothy suddenly asked: 'Mamma, what is a stork?" Seven-year-old Gordon, who has had to help a god deal in caring for the two littlest ones, promptly replied: "A pest."

Compensation For the Unborn.

In a recent action under the Pennsylvania workmen's compensation law, the referee decided that the provisions of the law, by which a widow is given an award for herself and for each of her children, included a child unborn at the date of the accident to the father.

IOWA DELEGATE DIES WITH COLORADO GIRL; LEAVES SMALL FAMILY

W. B. Mills of Sanborn, Attending Convention, Dies Mysteriously.

Sanborn, Ia., July 6.—On Thursday will take place the funeral of W. B. Mills, aged 30, whose death in Denver with a 19-year-old girl, has brought more than grief to the widow and child who survive him. Mills was drowned at Lakeside, near Denver, while boating with Emma Dye, of that city.

Mills went to Denver to attend the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. He was president of the Sanborn union. The Denver story states that he presented a letter of introduction to Mrs. Abbie Thayer. During his call there Miss Dye dropped in for a visit with Mrs. Thayer and was introduced to Mills. The railroad man suggested a visit to the moving picture theaters or to one of the parks. Miss Dye accompanied him. The two did not return that night and the police were called.

Two days later some boys in a boat noticed a few strands of hair floating in the lake. They seized the hair and brought a woman's body to the surface. A short distance away was the body of a man. The bodies were identified as those of Miss Dye and Mr. Mills

At the Thayer home it was stated that Mrs. Thayer had no knowledge that Mr. Mills was a married man.

DEPUTY SHERIFF BEATEN IN TAKING SMITH BROTHERS

Fort Dodge, Ia., July 8.—Twin Lakes, 20 miles from here was the scene of a midnight fight, attack on sheriff, escape and capture of prisoners as exciting and thrilling as any movie melodrama.

As a result Deputy Sheriff Leslie Mollody, of Calhoun county, is at Mercy hospital in Fort Dodge with a broken jaw and a badly smashed face and Frank and Chester Smith, laborers, are in the Calhoun county jail.

Frank and Chester Smith, while under the influence of liquor, started a fight at Twin Lakes. After attempts to separate them failed, B. F. Burns the proprietor of the hotel sent for the sheriff.

They submitted to the arrest, but when waiting for an automobile to take them to Rockwell City they made a sudden break for freedom. They both jumped on Mollody the deputy sheriff, threw him down and beat him with their heavy boots. In spite of the efforts made to stop them they got away.

Frank Smith was captured later on the west side of the lake. His brother started for the open country and was picked up by an automobile. The driver in ignorance of the affair took him to the Call Ridge farm two miles from the lakes. He had been working there this summer. He was not located until early this morning. Mellody was brought to Fort Dodge at midnight. His injuries were not as serious as first feared. Talks of lynching were heard in the excitement of the chase.

AFTER DINNER SWIMMING FATAL TO YOUNG MAN

Fort Dodge, Ia., July 6.—Bernard McCreary, the 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. James McCreary, living near Gilmore City, was drowned yesterday when swimming in the Des Moines river near Bradgate. While the circumstances of his drowning are not known, it is thought that he went swimming shortly after dinner Sunday. It is supposed he was taken with a cramp from going into the water so soon after eating and from the hot weather. The body was discovered this morning a short distance from the spot where he was last seen.

BOLD ROBBERY.

Waterloo, Ia., July 6.—Two armed men held up and robbed the East Side Great Western railroad station about 2 o'clock this morning and escaped with between $400 and $500.

MARSHALLTOWN—Judge Willett has called a special session of the grand jury to investigate the mystery surrounding the murder of Henry Alexander, of Ferguson, last April, for which Elmo C. Thompkins, Barney Houghkirk, Floyd "Curly" and Mark Frye are in jail. The preliminary hearing of the prisoners has been dispensed with and the cases will go directly before the grand jury.

DUBUQUE—Fred C. Robinson, grand secretary, and Rev. John Dysart, grand chaplain of the Elks, has gone to attend the 62d grand lodge session of the order at Baltimore. Mr. Robinson is serving his 11th term as grand secretary and will be elected to the 12th term, as he has no opposition.

FORT DODGE—Frank Farrell, one of the veteran lawyers of this community, had the distinction of receiving from his alma mater, the University of Vermont, the honorary degree of LL. D. This honor was conferred upon him at the commencement exercises held June 28, at Burlington, Vt. Mr. Farrell went to his old college to celebrate the 50th anniversary of his class, and a reunion of his fraternity, Delta Psi. He is the only one of his class living.

FORT DODGE—E. F. Mitchell was elected chairman of the democratic county central committee at a meeting yesterday afternoon. He succeeds Frank W. Collins, who has held the office for 10 years. B. B. Burnquist was elected chairman of the republican central committee. D. E. Phelan was elected secretary.

FORT DODGE—New officers were elected at the meeting of the Commercial club last evening. L. E. Armstrong was chosen president; J. R. Mulroney, vice president; C. D. Case, treasurer, and R. O. Green, secretary. The retiring secretary, Floyd Douglas, goes to Mason City.

Poor Old Paw.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Willie: Paw, what is a domestic?

Paw: A domestic is a servant girl, my son.

Willie: Well, what is the difference between imported and domestic?

Paw: Anything that comes from a foreign country is imported, and anything that is raised or produced here is domestic, my son.

Willie: Well, our servant girl came here from a foreign country, so how can she be a domestic?

His Only Error.

From the Youth's Companion.

The sad looking man was talking to the drug clerk about his experiences.

"Did you ever make a serious mistake in a prescription?" he asked.

"Only once," answered the drug clerk. "Then I charged a customer 50 cents for a prescription instead of 50."

VILLISTAS UNDER BANDIT HERO RAID

El Paso, Tex., July 8.—The Villista forces have evacuated Jiminez and railway communication has been restored with Mexico City, according to a message received today by General Gonzales at Juarez from General Trevino at Chihuahua City General Trevino reported that Carranza cavalry now is in pursuit of the bandits.

During their raid on Jiminez, the Villista troops captured the Carranza pay train, which was on its way north from Mexico City filled with paper money for the army and civil government of northern Mexico, said a mining man arriving from Chihuahua. While the Villistas are rich in the new "uncounterfeitable" paper the military and civil employes must go without their June pay, he said

"Paper money is an important factor in the present campaign of Villa," he continued. "The peons of Chihuahua hold large sums of Villa paper which they hope Villa will redeem Therefore, they pray for his success. Furthermore, Villa belongs to the northern people and the Carranza forces in the north come from eastern and central Mexico.

"No doubt now remains among the people of Chihuahua that Villa is alive and directing operations.

"General Trevino has been rushing his troops back to the relief of Jiminez His concentration in the north left the Villa territory around the Florida river quite clear of Carranza forces. This gave Villa his opportunity and he used it."

San Antonio, Tex., July 7.—General Funston's advices from the border today indicated no change in the military situation. General Pershing's report that a rumor had reached him of Villa's reappearance south of Parral placed the reported estimate of Villa's men at from 800 to 2,000.

Trains bearing guardsmen to border stations were moving in fewer numbers today The greater part of the National Guard that was prepared to respond to the call for service already has reached the border.

GERMAN BUREAUS IN FOOD FIGHT

The Hague, (via London), July 8.—Information reaches the Hague that for several weeks there has been continuous friction between the authorities of various large German cities and the central purchasing bureau. The municipalities claim the right to buy their own food and household articles without asking permission of the central bureau.

There was an outburst last week in the Hanover city council, several members of which accused the central bureau of boycotting the city which was unable to procure butter, sausage and hams notwithstanding the fact that some places in the vicinity were sufficiently supplied. It was argued that it was physically impossible for one bureau to control all municipalities.

Cologne, Dresden, Chemnitz and other cities already are purchasing supplies independently, having representatives in Holland for that purpose. As potatoes are scarce in Germany, while the supply of rye is sufficient, Adolph von Batocki, head of the food regulation board has decided it will not be necessary to mix potato meal in war bread.

A census of rubber stocks has revealed large quantities in the frontier districts, which are supposed to have been smuggled into the country. The central bureau has seized all this rubber, paying for it at the rate of 5 marks a kilogram. The bureau for the protection of German mercantile credits abroad has issued lists of certified German claims on foreign debtors and admitted foreign claims on German firms for the facilitiating of settlements of balances. These lists are free to approved neutral firms.

BRITISH EXPORTS SHOW AN ENORMOUS INCREASE

London, July 7.—The board of trade figures for June show that imports increased 11,027,000 pounds and that exports increased 14,041,000 pounds. Exports were higher than in any month since January, 1914, and 7,000,000 pounds in excess of July, 1914, the last month before the beginning of the war

The principal increases in imports were.

Food, 5,000,000 pounds sterling wood, oils, fats and chemicals, 6,000,000. The increase in exports was principally in manufactured goods, of which 3,500,000 pounds was cotton textiles; 1,250,000 pounds woolens and 2,000,000 pounds iron and steel.

German Leaders Organize to Inaugurate Peace Movement

Berlin, July 7, (via London).—Numerous scientists, industrialists, and representatives of commerce and agriculture have formed a German national committee under the chairmanship of Prince von Wedel, says the Koelnische Zeitung, with the aim of "awakening a uniform understanding" of the German people for an honorable conclusion of peace, which shall guarantee a secure future empire.

In doing this, says the Koelische Zeitung, all onesidedness is to be avoided.

Half Million Men Wiped Out By Armies of Russia

Petrograd Declares 235,000 Have Been Made Prisoners While From 200,000 to 220,000 Have Been Killed or Wounded—Austrians Are Greatest Sufferers.

Petrograd, (via London), July 8.—Nearly 500,000 Austrians and Germans have been put out of commission since General Brussiloff began his great advance a month ago yesterday. The grand total of prisoners to date is in round numbers 2,235,000, of which 4,500 are officers.

Without the actual figures regarding the dead and wounded, careful estimates, say military experts, based on the best information places the latter at 200,000 to 220,000. The Austrians predominate overwhelmingly among the prisoners, but among the dead and wounded it is said that a fairly large percentage are Germans. The German losses in stopping the Russian advance on Koval and in counter attacks made in solid ranks were enormous.

The booty captured reaches incalculable figures. It is figured that 250 guns of various sizes and upward of 700 machine guns is a conservative estimate In addition vast quantities of munitions, supplies and transports have fallen into the hands of the Russians.

The success of General Letschizky's advance west of Kolomea, where he has cut the railroad into Hungary at Milkuiczyn is emphasized as a new body blow to the Austrian defense of East Galicia. Northwest of Kolomea his troops are within 10 miles of Nabaworna, well to the rear of the Austrian right flank facing Tarnopol between the Stripa and Zlota Lipa rivers.

On the extreme right flank of Brussiloff's front the Russians are viciously attacking the Germans at Czartorysk and Kolki. They have broken through several lines of the enemy's fortifications here, threatening the flank of the German positions before Lutsk. These successes have considerably lessened the pressure on the Russian center in that district.

Another interesting situation is developing at Baranovichi, where the advance of the Russian offensive has brought their heavy guns within reach of that important railway junction.

Russo-Japanese Alliance Affecting Orient Formed; Aim to Keep Germany Out

Petrograd, (via London), July 8.—A Russo-Japanese political convention of two articles was signed today by the Russian minister of foreign affairs, Sergius Sazonoff, and the Japanese ambassador, Baron Ichiro Motone. The object of the convention is to unify the efforts of the two countries to maintain a lasting and constant peace in the far east.

Tokio, July 8 —The Japanese foreign office today announced as the substance of the Russo-Japanese convention signed at Petrograd on July 30, the following

First—Japan will take part in no arrangement or political combination directed against Russia. Russia will take part in no arrangement or political combination directed against Japan

Second—In case the territorial rights or special interests in the far east of one of the contracting parties which are recognized by the other contracting party are menaced, Japan and Russia will consult with each other on measures to be adopted with a view to supporting or extending assistance for the safeguarding and defense of these rights and interests.

Won't Affect U. S.

To a question from the Associated Press representative as to what effect the alliance would have on the open door and the integrity of China, the foreign office replied

"The convention is effectually an emphasis upon and an extension of the Anglo-Japanese alliance based upon territorial integrity of China, whose open door and integrity are now endangered American trade and interests are in no wise affected."

The foreign office denied affirmations in Japanese newspapers that the convention contained secret clauses, declaring that while the summary given out was the substance of the convention it also was virtually the text of that document.

The accord, which is virtually an alliance, is regarded here as of historic importance as concerns the future development of the far east and world politics generally. It ends a long period of hostility between the two empires which culminated in the Russo-Japanese war and strengthens the position of Japan as a first class power.

Now that Japan and Russia are pooling their interests in the far east, they will free themselves from the necessity of regarding each other as possible enemies in the future and from the maintenance of large bodies of troops on their respective frontiers.

The impression in Tokio is that the convention is framed to meet attempts at the extension of German influence in the far east, believed to be undesirable while the hands of both powers are strengthened in dealing with the situation in China.

Englishmen and Frenchmen claim that the accord will check efforts at German aggrandizement after the war and prevent China becoming the cause of a new international turmoil.

The Japanese are elated over the conclusion of the convention and the signing of the document will be commemorated at a ministerial banquet and probably by a popular lantern procession.

Extends Japan's Sphere.

The newspapers welcomed the extension of Japan's influence. The Orient Times says:

"England, France, Russia and Japan banded together can thwart all German intrigue for a subsequent war. Furthermore, the maintenance of peace in the far east must fall more heavily than ever upon the shoulders of Japan and Russia.

"It is learned that the entente has decided upon the exclusion in future of Genmany from the quintuple coalition regulating China, and that it has been decided to sound American financiers regarding the active participation of America in a loan for China in the reorganization of the republic."

London, July 7.—The Times, comeast.

menting on the Russo-Japanese convention says:

"The agreement is tantamount to a formal alliance, the main objects of which are the maintenance of peace and the safeguarding of the special Japanese and Russian rights and interests in the far east.

"The publication of the text is expected shortly. The respective allies of Russia and Japan have been informed of the agreement and have expressed their satisfaction with it."

STORM LOSS MAY TOTAL MILLIONS

Seventeen Negroes Lose Lives In Southern Hurricane—Traffic Along Gulf Is Badly Demoralized.

Washington, July 8.—A tropical storm which struck the gulf coast, Wednesday, with a yet uncounted toll of lives and property, is now over northern Mississippi and moving northeastward with diminished energy. The weather bureau today reported that the wind velocity at Mobile, Ala., during the height of the storm was 106 miles an hour, and at Pensacola, Fla., its velocity was 80 miles. There are indications the rain may reach the Ohio valley Saturday. Reports of the damage done by the storm along the gulf coast and in Mississippi and Alabama were still meager today, but enough had been established to make it certain the porperty loss would amount to several millions. Seventeen negroes lost their lives near Beloit, Ala., last night. Crops suffered greatly from the heavy rain. Traffic on the more important railroads was almost completely tied up and wire communication with gulf points impossible or badly crippled.

PAYS $50,000 FOR HORSE.

New York, July 7.—Light Brigade a famous English race horse, was aboard the Atlantic transport liner Minnehaha which reached here today from London. He has been purchased by J. M. Camden at a price said to be $50,000. Light Brigade is a 6-year-old stallion by Picton, out of Bridge of Sighs and was bred and owned by Lord Derby. This famous running horse won 11 races as a 3-year-old and three races as a 4-year-old.

22 CHILDREN ARE SCOURGE VICTIMS

New York, July 8.—With city, state and federal authorities fighting the disease, the epidemic of infantile paralysis has showed little signs of abatement today. During the 24 hours ending at 10 o'clock this morning 22 more children died. Nineteen of this number succumbed in Brooklyn. There were 87 new cases reported.

Washington, July 8.—Six experts of the United States public health service were ordered to New York today to cooperate with the state and city health authorities in suppressing the epidemic of infantile paralysis there.

Washington, July 8.—The general service board of the United States public health service met in conference today to discuss ways and means of combatting the epidemic of infantile paralysis in New York and determine what part it shall take in aiding New York state and city authorities.

Baltimore, Md., July 7.—A 2-year-old child died of infantile paralysis at a hospital here today. So far as is known, this is the only case of the disease in Baltimore.

EX-MINISTER IS ILL.

Chicago, July 7.—William J. Calhoun, former minister to China, is suffering from a stroke of paralysis. His physicians regard his condition as serious.

FURIOUS STRUGGLE RAGING ON WESTERN FRONT

London, July 7.—A wireless dispatch from Rome says word has been received there from Petrograd that in consequence of their triple defeat in the sectors of Riga, Kolki and Baranovichi. the Germans have begun to move their whole front toward the west.

Berlin, July 7.—(via London)—A salient of the German line in Volyhenia projecting toward Scartoysk has been abandoned under superior pressure by the Russians and a new line of defense selected, it was announced today by the war office.

London, July 7.—The British have resumed the offensive in France after consolidating their gains, and have advanced at several points. Furious fighting is in progress on their line.

The French have repulsed furious German counter attacks, mowing down the Germans with machine guns and the deadly "75's", maintaining all of their recent gains. The road to Peronne is opened, and another blow by General Foch is imminent.

Thus on all fronts, excepting in Macedonia, the great allied offensive is growing in extent and intensity, menacing the German lines at many points on both fronts. Dispatches from all fronts emphasize the preponderance of the allied artillery and machine gun fire, the overwhelming numbers of infantry and the apparent superiority in reserves.

In none of the allied capitals is the task of breaking the German lines under estimated. The Germans everywhere are fighting with great valor and dogged resistence. Strictly speaking the allied gains, except in Galicia, and Bukowina, have been by no means decisive. Whether the Germans long can withstand such terrible pressure remains to be determined.

Furious Battle In West.

The second phase of the great battle on the western front has now begun in earnest. The artillery has been brought up to new positions and is again battering the German defenses. The bombardment extends as far northward at La Bassee, and Armentieres and according to the latest unofficial advices is particularly intense. British long range guns are shelling the German positions and the roads in their rear and until the infantry again leaves the trenches, it will be uncertain where the next attacks are to be launched. In addition to inflicting losses on the Germans in men, guns and territory the Anglo-French offensive is reported to have compelled them to withdraw some of their forces from the Verdun front. Consequently it is said in London that the army which for five months withstood the German attacks in that region will have some relief from continual fighting.

Russ Strike at Many Points.

On the eastern front the Russians who now apparently have even a better supply of guns and ammunition than their adversaries, seem to pass from one phase to the next without intermission. General Letchitzky's army, which conquered Bukowina and cut the railway between Delatyn and Kosmezo is advancing in an effort completely to overcome the Austrian forces on that front. General Kaledines is continuing to deliver heavy strokes against the Austrians and Germans who are endeavoring to keep him from Kovel. With these operations in full swing the Russians to the north have inaugurated an offensive from Riga to Baranovichi.

Along the northern end of the line from Riga to Dvinsk a great bombardment is in progress, while from a point east of Vilna to Baranovichi preparation was followed by infantry attacks in which the Russians report they made many prisoners, repulsing German counter attacks. Near Smorgen the Russians and Germans also are engaged in a severe struggle.

Rumania Waits to Get In.

Rumania, it is said here, is awaiting some move by the entente forces at Saloniki. The near east is interested in the battlyes throughout the Caucasus and Mesopotamia. The Russian army which was advancing toward Bagdad has fallen back some 80 miles under pressure from great forces which were brought against it, but elsewhere from the Black sea to the Persian frontier the Russians, according to their own statements, are more than holding their own. No news has been received recently from the British army in Mesopotamia, but it is believed inactivity has been enforced by the great heat.

BEAT OFF COUNTER ATTACKS; ROAD TO PERONNE IS OPEN

Paris, July 7.—The soliditary of the French conquest in Pickardy at last has been put to the test and military men here say it has come out of the ordeal with flying colors thus again demonstrating the soundness of the Brusiloff method.

The Germans who managed to gather considerable forces partly apparently from the British front where the pressure was lessening during the day and partly from depots, delivered a series of violent attacks on two points. The first of these was between Hem and Maricourt on the Clery road. The second was on the extreme right between Estrees and Belloy, their object being to drive a wedge between the French center and right where the French line crosses the Somme river from Hem to Feuillers and between the extreme right and the rest of the French front.

The success of these maneuvers would have forced the eventual retirement of the whole French line.

Reaction Too Late.

The French had time thoroughly to strengthen their line, to advance and place in position heavy artillery and to bring up plentiful stocks of munitions. Consequently the attacking wave was caught in a whirlwind of machine gun fire from the trenches and was shot to pieces by the "seventy-fives" while the German supports following and reserves far in the rear were shattered by salvos from medium and heavy batteries.

The German infantry plodded forward again and again but nowhere, French reports say made an impression upon the French lines. Rarely even did they get to grips with the occupants of the trenches, which accounts for the small number of prisoners taken. The Germans, say the reports, had striven the whole day without effecting the slightest modification of the situation.

The French remain two and a half miles from Peronne on the south side of the Somme and four miles from that city on the north side of the river and there are no formidable natural obstacles in the way of their occupation of the city, when the French commander judges that the time is ripe to go on.

PROVE ALLIES CAN RETAIN GAINS AS WELL AS ADVANCE

Paris, July 7.—Yesterday's defensive fighting has given almost as much satisfaction to the French as the previous day's captures, for they say that it is clearly shown that the entente allies not only are able to win positions from the Germans wherever they like, but also are able to hold those positions when won.

The first German counter attack was launched in the night in the Hem section, north of the Canalized Somme river. The Germans succeeded in carrying two small woods situated south of the Clery-Mericourt road a few hundred yards from the sugar works bordering that road.

The French troops there being more or less in the air, fell back on the village and swinging their left wing slightly, captured another small wood at the northeastern end of the village close to the Hem brick field and along the edge of the road from Clery to Hem and Curlu. This was the only change in the situation throughout the 24 hours during which the counter offensive lasted.

Great Force Involved.

At the beginning of the battle there were behind the front assigned to the French attack 27 German battalions drawn from the 121st division and from regiments of the 17th army corps.

Between July 1 and July 5, the German commanders sent up to the Peronne front four reserve divisions of which two already are declared to be virtually out of commission. The other reserves brought up from different points between Rheims and the Somme were of a most heterogeneous nature. One battalion of the guard which was annihilated has been formed of companies from several different battalions.

The French officers say there can be no doubt that the rapidity of the French advance if not the advance itself took the Germans by surprise. This they assert is shown by their not having provided adequate supply of reserves for such a contingency.

How Weather Makes Us Work

The ideal climate is said to be found in many parts of the world, but no one knows exactly what it is. The whole matter depends on our definition of "ideal." If we are looking simply for rest and pleasure a warm and sunny climate is probably the best If we want to go fishing something different is preferable. The most essential fact in the lives of the majority of mankind is work. Therefore the climate which is best for work is ideal from that point of view.

If we take efficiency in the daily work of our life as our standard it is possible to measure what people actually do under different climatic conditions, and thus to form an estimate of the best kind of climate. From the work of about five hundred factory operatives in southern Connecticut and of about eighteen hundred students at West Point and Annapolis I have prepared curves showing the relative efficiency under different conditions of temperature, humidity and storminess These curves, based on investigations among a large number of individuals, agree with similar curves prepared on the basis of a smaller number of people by two Danish psychologists—Lehmann and Pedersen, in Copenhagen. The two sets of data show that the physical activity of the races of western Europe is greatest when the average temperature is about 60 degrees—that is, on days when the thermometer goes down to perhaps 50 or 55 degrees at night and rises to about 65 or 70 degrees by day Mental activity, on the other hand, is greatest when the average is a little below 40 degrees—that is, on days which may have a frost at night.

Since life consists of both mental and physical activity, and each is essential to success, the most favorable conditions would seem to be those where the temperature never falls far below the most propitious point for mental work or rises above the optimum for physical work. In other words, if the mean temperature were the only thing to be considered, the best climate would be one where the average in winter is about 40 and the average in summer about 60 degrees. Only a few parts of the world are blessed with such conditions.

The most important of these, both in area and in population, is England. Next comes the northern Pacific coast of the United States, from Oregon to the southern part of British Columbia. Here, unfortunately, the mountains rise above the sea, and so prevent the favorable conditions from penetrating far inland. A third highly favored area is found in New Zealand, especially the southern island This, like its two predecessors, is recognized as one of the highly advanced parts of the earth The fourth and last of the places where the mean temperature is particularly favorable is not generally so recognized. It lies in Patagonia and the corresponding part of Chili between latitudes 45° and 50° S Few people live here, and we are apt to think of it as of relatively slight value. It differs from the other three regions in having a deficient rainfall except in the western part, which is extremely mountainous

From what has just been said it must not be inferred that the climates of England, the northern Pacific coast of the United States, New Zealand and Patagonia are necessarily ideal Mean temperature is by no means the only important condition In the first place, not only a deficiency of moisture, as in a large part of Patagonia, but an excess, as in the mountains of southern Chili or in Ireland, which otherwise is almost as favored as England may hamper a country Such conditions produce not only an adverse economic effect by making agriculture difficult, but also a direct effect upon people's capacity for work A moderate degree of dampness—that is, a relative humidity of from 65 per cent. in summer to 90 per cent in winter—is favorable, but when the summers are wet or the winters very dry people do not work so well.—Ellsworth Huntington, in Harper's Magazine.

FIRE GONG SAVES PIGGIE

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ed Welch and Arthur Spotswood, pipemen at Station No. 11, still enjoy a semblance of a reputation as foot racers. They enjoy it yet because they have a good alibi for not catching the pig.

To start at the beginning so the pig can be identified, be it said that the pig was a prize pig. He was won in some sort of a contest and was healthy enough to break out of his pen near the owner's home.

The owner was a woman and she called up the fire station and sent an alarm of pigs astray.

Welch and Spotswood had outdone the speedy track athletes of the St. Paul fire department and were detailed to catch the pig.

The pig gave them an awful chase. It turned into a hurdle race because the pig turned under several fences. The fireman had just got the porcine fugitive in a corner and were closing in for the capture when they heard a fire gong. They had to let the pig go and answer the fire alarm from the De La Salle Institute. The pig is still at large.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours; tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three time during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

"Where A Dollar Does It's Duty"

MASON CITY, IOWA

SINCE Hercules diverted the river to renovate the Augean stables "Clean Up" has had its place in the world's vernacular. With spring the desire to refurbish comes subconsciously into the hearts of men and women, and communities. But without direction and sustained effort the expression of that desire, in the form of the ordinary "Clean Up Day" or "Week," is apt to result in a superficial sally against filth.

Years ago Allen W. Clark, a St. Louis editor, made up his mind that this natural "Clean Up" instinct could be tamed to account, that it could be developed into a real campaign working toward definite ideals and accomplishing permanent results. And so, in May, 1912, Mr. Clark founded the National "Clean Up and Paint Up" Campaign Bureau, with headquarters in St. Louis. He hoped that a thorough-going movement, national in its scope and practical in its principles, might take the place of the "annual bath" idea as expressed in the old-time "clean up day" or "week."

A National Civic Movement.

For four years the scope of the National Bureau's service has rapidly extended until this year it is co-operating with more than 6,000 local communities in the organization and direction of real "Clean Up and Paint Up" campaigns, not "days," or "weeks." Continuous campaigns for homes and hometowns beautiful, sanitary and safe, conducted by permanent committees, and involving the co-operation of city and town officials, club women, commercial organizations, the children, fire prevention interests, all business men and property owners, is the goal aimed at by all of the National Bureau's propaganda.

Mr. Clark declares that the bane of any community is the citizen who lacks even a semblance of interest in the community, and that, strange as it may seem in a democracy, absence of this interest seems to be pretty generally prevalent in the average American community. Such a citizen would have "The Town" or "The City," whatever those names may signify when the body of citizens is eliminated, keep the streets and alleys clean, preserve the public and individual health, eliminate nuisances, make everything in town spick and span and satisfactory—while the citizen sits back and looks on.

The real "Clean Up and Paint Up" campaign, organized on the plans of the National Bureau, gives everyone something definite to do to help make their hometown beautiful, sanitary and safe. And the campaign's educational influence should work steadily the year 'round and year after year, automatically eliminating many nuisances caused formerly by carelessness or thoughtlessness of property owners and tenants.

A Suggestion For Our Town.

The methods for accomplishing all of this suggested by the National Bureau are well illustrated by a brief description of the local campaign organization in St. Louis. With various adaptations this St. Louis plan has been found practicable in any city, no matter how large or small.

The entire campaign is under the direction of the Continuous St. Louis "Clean Up and Paint Up" Campaign Committee, of which Charles M Talbert, director of streets and sewers, is chairman. On this committee are various civic and business leaders, including the leading club women of the city.

Each member of the general committee is chairman of a subcommittee responsible for some definite department of the campaign's activity. The Director of Streets and Sewers is chairman of the committee on "Refuse Clean-up," the chief of the Fire Department is chairman of the committee on fire prevention and the head of the Health Department is chairman of the committee on housing reform.

Committees For the Work.

Street Department—Household waste, permanent plan, improvement of districts which will be center of interest in coming National Democratic Convention, smooth paving, signs on public buildings, rubbish boxes.

Vacant Lots—Reported by Boy Scouts, flower and vegetable gardens by school children and Real Estate Exchange, weed cutting, bird boxes.

Street Drinking Fountains—General and on downtown corners.

Smoke Abatement.

Publicity—Billboards, posters, street cars, circulars for children, buttons, newspapers, moving pictures.

Speakers—On general subject, also on special phases of campaign.

District Organization—Report nuisances, see property owners and urge to clean up and paint up and plant trees.

The chairmen of these various committees should be the city or town officials or civic leaders who are most interested in the work to be done by the committee.

THE COST OF LIVING

Living! Fifteen dollars a week will support a husband, wife and three children in New York City. This is what the officials of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities have found out.

The other day a New England newspaper told how a woman had supported her little family on a dollar a day and did it for years decently and respectably.

On the same day a New York judge was asked to permit a young heiress to draw $25,000 a year from an estate which she had inherited, as this amount was necessary to meet her expenses.

All this goes to show that the cost of living is a personal matter It depends not on what one needs, but on what one wants, or thinks he wants.

We hear a great deal of talk from those who are demanding a minimum wage, regarding the high cost of living. In the good old fashioned days of our forefathers, and more recently in the days of the simple life, it would have been regarded as an impertinence to discuss with a neighbor the question of how much he spent to live.

The necessaries of life furnish a sufficient living for some, while for others luxuries are so common that they have become necessities. In the olden days we lived on what we had What a sturdy race of independent, courageous, progressive, God fearing people was brought forth!

These were ones that did the pioneer work, that crossed the plains, plowed the prairies, opened the mines, bored for oil, and planted the district school and church wherever they went.

These strudy, strong true hearted Americans were never troubled about the cost of living. They lived on what they earned and produced They breathed the free air of independence They believed in the traditions of the elders. They respected parental authority. They regarded the constitution with reverence They obeyed the laws and saw that every man who violated them was called to strict account

These worthy ancestors would have spurned the thought of pensions for their widows, of bread lines, of bundle days and soup houses for their children as they spurned the thought of the poor house

Are we breeding any better people in the time of fads and fancies, of cod dling and pensioning, of patronizing and petting, than we bred in the good old days when we had faith in man and an abiding faith in God?—Leslie.

JUST A LITTLE FAVOR.

"So you're goin' back to New York to morrow, eh?" said Uncle Eb Cobb to the city boarder.

Yes; got to go. My playtime has come to an end. Got to go back and go to work."

"Yes, I reckon. Well, I wonder if you'd be willin' to do me a little favor when you git to New York"

'Certainly, certainly. Glad to oblige you. What can I do for you?

"Well, I got a nephew there named Jones. His mother was my sister. His name is Ed Jones an' he lives somewhere in New York, but I ain't got his address. Had it, but don't seem able to find it now. My wife an' me thought it would be nice to send Ed an' his wife a few things right from the farm, an' I was wonderin' if you would be willin' to take him a pair o' chickens an' a dozen ears o' corn an' a few of our fall pippins an' a dozen or two o' eggs an' a green tomater pie like he used to be so fond of when he was a boy here in the country. We'd like to send him a bottle o' maple sirup an' another ripe gooseberry jam an' a little jar o' sweet pickle an' a bottle o' ketchup such as I bet he can't buy there in the city, if it'd be convenient to carry them. His full name is Edward Everett Jones. I reckon you'd find him in the city directory I'll fetch the things over to the hotel this evenin' in a carpetbag that was Ed's great-grandfather's, an' mebbe he would like to have it as well as what's in it. Much obliged to you for the favor o' takin' those things to Ed I reckon he'll be some s'prised when he gits em. THE CHAMPIONSHIP GAME.

(A la Thomas Hood.)

I remember, I remember,
The field whence I was borne,
The crowded stands, the shouting mob,
The raucous auto horn.
The side-lines running down the field,
Amain from goal to goal,
Were thronged with blanketed recruits
That would each play extol.

I remember, I remember,
The flags of varied hue,
The death-like stillness in the air
Before the whistle blew;
And callow youth and winsome maid—
The 'Old 'Grad"—back again—
The favored minions of the "Press,"
The "fav'rite colors" men.

I remember, I remember,
The tossing of a coin,
The oval sailing high in air,—
A kick anent the groin;
A jab, a gouge, a jolt, a crunch,—
A whizzing, whirring roar,—
The plaudits of the multitude,—
A bucketful of gore.

I remember, I remember,
A fierce and bloody fray,—
The surgeon's corps, the ambulance
That carried me away;
A broken nose, a splintered arm,
Two eyes of darkest jet,
Some fractured ribs, a missing ear,—
The rest,—oh, I forget!

HIS REVENGE.

"I tell ye, the editor of the Weekly Plaindealer is a vindictive cuss!" said shrewd old Farmer Hornbeak, upon his return from an afternoon's stay in the county seat.

"What makes ye think so, 'Ezry?" asked his wife.

"Why, I heard, while I was in town, that he had hired the village band to serenade, night before last, a grass-widow who had horsewhipped him a short time before."

The Daring Divers of Thursday Island

Diving for shell, and incidentally for the little treasure of pearl—it has been estimated that one shell in a thousand contains a pearl—is carried on in deeper water off Thursday Island than anywhere else. Other productive beds lie comparatively shallow—the Persian Gulf, the Sulu Seas, the Gulf of Manaar. The greatest depth at which a diver in helmet and dress can perform any sort of useful labor is held to be one hundred and eighty-two feet. At that depth a Spanish diver raised 9,000 pounds in silver bars from a wreck off Finisterre. At one hundred and fifty feet an English diver saved 50,000 from a wreck off Leuconna Reef of the Chinese coast.

The maximum depth to which the sponge-fishers of the Mediterranean successfully descend is one hundred and fifty feet. In the Torres Strait, with the depletion of the beds, the divers have moved from the shallow water of from four to six fathoms to depths of one hundred and twenty feet, where the operation is of distressful and perilous one. A paternal law prohibits diving beyond a specified depth of safety; but as the courts have held that a diver must be actually seen at that depth, if anybody is to be held amenable, and as the reefs are remote from any practical scheme of supervision, it is a law of small consequence after all, and the perilously deep diving goes on, no doubt, much as before, with its occasional issue of sudden death. Subjected to a hazardous degree of atmospheric pressure—at one hundred feet it is sixty pounds to the square inch—the divers are attacked by various characteristic disturbances, pains in the muscles and joints for example ("the bends"), and deafness, spells of fainting, and paralysis, otherwise known as "diver's palsy." The effects appear when the diver ascends too rapidly from deep water and the pressure is removed It is then that the cases of sudden death occur—the diver found dead in his helmet or expiring on the deck when the helmet is removed.

It is a short life (they say) and a bitter one, fit only for the yellow and brown men—the Japanese and Papuans and Manila-ment and island boys; the Japanese, especially, who are tough fellows, sullenly reckless of their days, and thinking of life only in terms of hard labor and brief periods of violent pleasure.—Norman Duncan, in Harper's Magazine.

Mistaken Ideas

"I don't know whether I will sit with you fellows or not," said Dubbs to the group in the smoker. "The minister is dining at our house tonight, and I will not be in the proper mood if I asosciate with you fellows."

"There's where you are wrong," said Smudger, shifting his cigar to the other corner of his mouth. "The minister won't want any hifalutin' talk from you. He gets all of that he requires, and besides he can furnish it for himself Go right ahead and be your usual breezy and open-faced self, and the minister will pass the time much more pleasantly.

"Don't make the mistake that Billings made. Billings got word that some of his wife's relatives were coming from the country and he said to his son: 'My boy, you and I must change our mode of life. These country bumpkins are in the habit of going to bed at nine o'clock and they won't know a thing but crops and chickens and cows. We'll have to bone up on the poultry journals so you can talk to the girl about milking and feeding chickens, and I'll have to talk to the old man about the weevil and how to cure it.'

"That's where he was wrong. He didn't know much about farmers. He didn't realize that they had a phone in that farmhouse connected with the city, that they had two mails a day, and that the girl was a civic reformer.

"The consequence was that the girl who wanted to talk civics and how to cure the evils of the city and who was cognizant of every crooked deal that had been put over by the administration for the last two years; thought the boy a regular boor; and the old man, who knew the batting average of every player in the league, thought the city man the worst mossback he had ever seen.

"So, if you don't want to get off on the wrong foot, refrain from springing solemn talk on the minister. He'd see through you right away."

"I rise to report," said the young man of the party, "that the aforementioned remarks are correct. The girl of the present day, town or country, will not listen to tennis talk, style or poetry or the dulcet guitar. She is interested in clubs and reforms. The slums are the thing.

"If you start anything about balls or bridge she will look at you as if you were Old Man Methuselah."

"I am convinced," said Dubbs, settling himself in the smoker with his cronies. "I will steep myself in low-brow talk for the sake of being agreeable to the minister."

Comforting

A certain youngster was one day suffering greatly by reason of an aching tooth. His mother was endeavoring to calm him against a visit to the dentist.

"You'll have it out, won't you, dear?" the mother pleaded. "It won't hurt much and then the ache will be all over."

But the unhappy child continued to howl with pain. His brother, a year older, was likewise distressed and added his pleadings to those of the mother.

"Do have it out, dear," repeated the mother.

"Yes, Dick, have it out," added the brother. "It will be one less to clean you know."

Humor in Catechism

There must have been some curious specimens of Scottish humor brought out at the examinations that the ministers of the flock conducted before administering the communion, says the Youth's Companion. Thus, a clergyman asked one parishioner, "What kind of man was Adam?"

"Ou, just like other fouk" he replied.

The minister insisted on a more accurate description. "Weel," said the catechumen, "he was just like Jos Simmons, the horse couper."

"How so?" asked the minister.

"Weel, naebody got anything by him and mony dost."

A lad had come for examination previous to receiving his first communion. The pastor knowing that his young friend was not very profound in his theology, and not wishing to discourage him or keep him from the table unless compelled to do so, began by asking what he thought a safe question. So he took the old Testament and asked him how many commandments there were. After a little thought the lad put his answer in the modest form of a supposition, and replied cautiously "Perhaps a hunner." The clergyman was vexed, and told him such ignorance was intolerable, and that the youth must come back for another examination when he had learned more.

As he went away he met a friend, and on learning that he too, was going to the minister for examination, the young fellow asked:

"Weel, what will ye say if the minister speers hoo mony commandments there are?"

"Say? Why, I shall say ten, to be sure!"

To which the other rejoined with great triumph: "Ten! Try ye him wi' ten! I tried him wi' a hunner, and he wasna satisfied."

A better example of an answer to catethetical examination was offered in the very conclusive reply made by an old body to the minister who proposed the question of the shorter catechism. "What are decrees of God?"

Wisely the old man replied: "Dead, sir, He kens that best himself."

Another answer from a little girl was shrewd and reflective. The question was, "Why did the Israelites make a golden calf?" and she replied:

"They hadna as muckle siller as wad mak a coo."

His Fat Friend.

The greatest dandy and fop of modern times was George Brummel, known as Beau Brummel. He lived a life delicate and leisured; and since he was poor his living depended upon the favor of the court. The court at that tie was represented in the set where the Beau's influence was felt by the Prince of Wales, who was, if truth must be told, not a slender man. It happened that the Prince and the Beau quarreled.

To be a dandy is not generally considered the first mark of being a brave man, but Beau Brummel gave instant proof that he was not only a great dandy but a great man as well. The details of the story are somewhat vague, but the main facts are certain. Brummel knew that his quarrel with the Prince would mean an end of his prestige, but he refused to yield, and on the day following the quarrel went walking with a friend said to have been Sheridan.

The news of the rupture between the Prince and the dictator of fashions had spread and there were not a few who gathered in the hope of seeing a passage at arms between them.

It happened that Sheridan and Brummel met the Prince and his party. With princely ostentation the royal personage called Sheridan aside and spoke to him, pointedly ignoring Brummel, who stood by. Brummel did not flinch. In the crisis he was the only person who seemed to be indifferent. Then Sheridan returned.

With a gesture of indifference Brummel lifted his glasses to his eyes and, indicating with a slight wave of his hand the person to whom he referred, he asked in a clear but languid voice the famous question.

"Sherry, who's your fat friend?"

Brummel spent the greater part of the remainder of his life at Calais, an outcast, a broken man. But with the memory of his great rebuke, it can hardly be said that in the crisis he was found wanting.

The Reason Why.

Old Doctor—"Now when you patient asks you for a tonic, what are you going to do about it?"

Old Doctor—"Wrong! No success in that method. Whenever your patient has diagnosed her own case and tells you she needs a tonic, you prescribe a tonic every time!"

Young Doctor—"Why?"

Old Doctor—"Don't you guess why? Because she will then have to see that you know almost if not quite as much about medicine as she does."—Judge.

A Cautious Answer

The caution of the New Englander in giving a direct answer to a direct question is proverbial. Two natives of a New Hampshire town met after the funeral, and the first asked: "Was not your father's death very sudden?"

Slowly drawing one hand from his pocket and pulling down his beard, the other replied thoughtfully:

"Wal, rather sudden for him."

SHE HAD GUESSED THE ANSWER

"Johnnie, has you father decided to accept the call to the city church?"

"I don't know. Pa's still playing for light, but mother has about finished packing the goods."

A PLEA FOR REINCARNATION.

"He must believe in the reincarnation of the soul."

"What makes you think so?"

"Because he says the world owes him a living, and I cannot see how it became so indebted to him, unless for services rendered in some previous incarnation."

A TERRIBLE MOMENT.

Farewell, Melinda, farewell! I goes ter me doom, but the memory of yer devotion will be with me in me darkest hour.

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

Richmond, Va.—"After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the Change of Life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2812 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

Duane shot him. He fell forward, his gun exploding as it hit the floor, and dropped loose from stretching fingers. Duane stood over him, stooped to turn him on his back. Bland looked up with clouded gaze, then gasped his last.

"Duane, you've killed him!" cried Kate Bland, huskily. "I knew you'd have to!"

She staggered against the wall, her eyes dilating, her strong hands clinching, her face slowly whitening. She appeared shocked, half stunned, but showed no grief

"Jennie!" called Duane, sharply.

"Oh—Duane!" came a halting reply. "Yes Come out. Hurry!"

She came out with uneven steps, seeing only him, and she stumbled over Bland's body Duane caught her arm, swung her behind him He feared the woman when she realized how she had been duped His action was protective, and his movement toward the door equally as significant.

"Duane!" cried Mrs. Bland.

It was no time for talk. Duane edged on keeping Jennie behind him. At that moment there was a pounding of iron-shod hoofs out in the lane. Kate Bland bounded to the door When she turned back her amazement was changing to realization

"Get out of my way," replied Duane. His look perhaps, without speech, was enough for her In an instant she was transformed into a fury

"You hound! All the time you were fooling me! You made love to me! You let me believe—you swore you loved me! Now I see what was queer about you All for that girl! But you can't have her You'll never leave here alive Give me that girl! Let me—get at her! She'll never win any more men in this camp!"

She was a powerful woman, and it took all Duane's strength to ward off her onslaughts She clawed at Jennie over his upflung arm Every second her fury increased

"Help me! help!" she shrieked in a voice that must have penetrated to the remotest cabin in the valley

"Let go! Let go!" cride Duane, low and sharp He still held his gun in his right hand and it began to be hard for him to ward the woman off His coolness had gone with her shriek for help. "Let go!" he repeated and he shoved her fiercely

Suddenly she snatched a rifle off the wall and bore it away her strong hands fumbling at the lever As she jerked it down throwing a shell into the chamber and cocking the weapon, Duane leaped upon her He struck up the rifle as it went off the powder burning his face

Jennie, run out Get on a horse!" he said

Jennie flashed out of the door.

With an iron grasp Duane held to the rifle barrel He had grasped it with his left hand and he gave such a pull that he swung the crazed woman off the floor But he could not loose her grip She was as strong as he

"Kate! Let go!"

He tried to intimidate her She did not see his gun thrust in her face or reason had given way to such an extent to possess that she did not care She cursed Her husband had used the same curses and from her lips they seemed strange unsexed, more deadly Like a tigress she fought him, her face no longer resembled a woman's The evil of that outlaw life, the wildness and rage, the meaning to kill, were even in such a moment terribly impressed upon Duane

He heard a cry from outside—a man's cry hoarse and alarming

It made him think of loss of time. This demon of a woman might yet block his plan

"Let go!" he whispered and felt his lips stiff In the grimness of that instant he relaxed his hold on the rifle barrel

With sudden, redoubled, irresistible strength she wrenched the rifle down and discharged it Duane felt a blow—a shock—a burning agony tearing through his breast. Then in a frenzy he jerked so powerfully upon the rifle that he threw the woman against the wall She fell and seemed stunned.

Duane leaped back, whirled, flew out of the door to the porch The sharp cracking of a gun halted him. He saw Jennie holding to the bridle of his bay horse. Euchre was astride the other, and he had a colt leveled and he was firing down the lane. Then came a single shot, heavier, and Euchre's ceased He fell from the horse.

A swift glance back showed to Duane a man coming down the lane. Chess Alloway! His gun was smoking He broke into a run Then in an instant he saw Duane, and tried to check his pace as he swung up his arm. But that slight pause was fatal Duane shot, and Alloway was falling when his gun went off His bullet whistled close to Duane and thudded into the cabin.

Duane bounded down to the horses. Jennie was trying to hold the plunging bay Euchre lay flat on his back, dead, a bullet hole in his shirt, his face set hard and his hands twisted around gun and bridle

"Jennie, you've nerve, all right!" cried Duane, as he dragged down the horse she was holding. "Up with you now! There! Never mind—long stirrups! Hang on somehow!"

He caught the bridle out of Euchre's clutching grip and leaped astride. The frightened horses jumped into a run and thundered down the lane into the road. Duane saw men running from cabins He heard shouts. But there were no shots fired. Jennie seemed able to stay on her horse, but without stirrups she was thrown about so much that Duane rode closer and reached out to grasp her arm.

Thus they rode through the valley to the trail that led up over the steep and broken Rim Rock. As they began to climb, Duane looked back. No pursuers were in sight.

She was gazing horror stricken at his breast, as in turning to look back he faced her.

With her words Duane became aware of two things—the hand he instinctively placed to his breast still held his gun, and he had sustained a terrible wound

Duane had been shot through the breast far enough down to give him grave apprehension of his life. The clean cut hole made by the bullet bled freely both at its entrance and where it had come out, but with no signs of hemorrhage. He did not bleed at the mouth; however, he began to cough up a reddish tinged foam.

As they rode on, Jennie, with pale face and mute lips, looked at him.

"I'm badly hurt, Jennie," he said, "but I guess I'll stick it out."

"The woman—did she shoot you?"

"Yes. She was a devil. Euchre told me to look out for her. I wasn't quick enough."

"You didn't have to—to—" shivered the girl.

"No! no!" he replied.

They did not stop climbing while Duane tore a scarf and made compresses, which he bound tightly over his wounds. The fresh horses made fast time up the rough trail. From open places Duane looked down. When they surmounted the steep ascent and stood on top of the Rim Rock, with no signs of pursuit down in the valley and with the wild, broken fastnesses before them, Duane turned to the girl and assured her that they now had every chance of escape.

"But—your—wound!" she faltered, with dark, troubled eyes. "I see—the blood—dripping from your back!"

"Jennie, I'll take a lot of killing," he said.

Then he became silent and attended to the uneven trail. He was aware presently that he had not come into Bland's camp by this route. But that did not matter, any trail leading out beyond the Rim Rock was safe enough. What he wanted was to get far away into some wild retreat where he could hide until he recovered from his wound. He seemed to feel a fire inside his breast, and his throat burned so that it was necessary for him to take a swallow of water every little while. He began to suffer considerable pain, which increased as the hours went by and then gave way to a numbness. From that time on he had need of his great strength and endurance. Gradually he lost his steadiness and his keen sight, and he realized that if he were to meet foes, or if pursuing outlaws should come up with him, he could make only a poor stand So he turned off on a trail that appeared seldom traveled

Soon after this move he became conscious of a further thickening of his sense He felt able to hold on to his saddle for a while longer, but he was failing Then he thought he ought to advise Jennie, so in case she was left alone she would have some idea of what to do.

Jennie, I'll give out soon," he said "No—I don't mean—what you think. But I'll drop soon. My strength's going. If I die—you ride back to the main trail Hide and rest by day Ride at night That trail goes to water I believe you could get across the Nueces, where some rancher will take you in."

Duane could not get the meaning of her incoherent reply He rode on, and soon he could not see the trail or hear his horse He did not know whether they traveled a mile or many times that far But he was conscious when the horse stopped, and had a vague sense of talking and feeling Jennie's arms before all became dark to him

When consciousness returned he found himself lying in a little hut of mesquite branches. It was well built and evidently some years old There were two doors or openings, one in front and the other at the back Duane imagined it had been built by a fugitive—one who meant to keep an eye both ways and not to be surprised Duane felt weak and had no desire to move Where was he, anyway? A strange, intangible sense of time, distance, of something far behind weighed upon him Sight of the two packs Euchre had made brought his thought to Jennie What had become of her? There was evidence of her work in a smoldering fire and a little blackened coffee pot. Probably she was outside looking after the horses or getting water He thought he heard a step and listened, but he felt tired, and presently his eyes closed and he fell into a doze

Awakening from this, he saw Jennie sitting beside him In some way she seemed to have changed. When he spoke she gave a start and turned eagerly to him

"Duane!" she cried.

"Hello How 're you, Jennie, and how am I?" he said, finding it a little difficult to talk

"Oh, I'm all right," she replied "And you've come to—your wounds healed, but you've been sick. Fever, I guess. I did all I could.

Duane saw now that the difference in her was a whiteness and tightness of skin, a hallowness of eye, a look of strain

"Fever? How long have we been here?" he asked.

She took some pebbles from the crown of his sombrero and counted them

"Nine. Nine days," she answered

"Nine days!" he exclaimed, incredulously But another look at her assured him that she meant what she said. "I've been sick all the time? You nursed me?"

"Yes."

"Bland's men didn't come along here?"

"No."

"Where are the horses?"

"I keep them grazing down in a gorge back of here. There's good grass and water."

"Have you slept any?"

"A little. Lately I couldn't keep awake."

"Good Lord! I should think not. You've had a time of it sitting here day and night nursing me, watching for the outlaws. Come, tell me all about it."

"There's nothing much to tell."

"I want to know, anyway, just what you did—how you felt."

"I can't remember very well," she replied, simply. "We must have ridden 40 miles that day we got away. You bled all the time. Toward evening you lay on your horse's neck. When we came to this place you fell out of the saddle. I dragged you in here and stopped your bleeding. I thought you'd die that night. But in the morning I had a little hope. I had forgotten the horses. But luckily they didn't stray far. I caught them and kept them down in the gorge. When your wounds closed and you began to breathe stronger I thought you'd get well quick. It was fever that put you back. You raved a lot, and that worried me, because I couldn't stop you. Anybody trailing us could have heard you a good ways. I don't know whether I was scared most then or when you were quiet, and it was so dark and lonely and still all around. Every day I put a stone in your hat."

"Jennie, you saved my life," said Duane.

"I don't know. Maybe. I did all I know how to do," she replied. "You saved mine—more than my life."

Their eyes met in a long gaze, and then their hands in a close clasp.

"Jennie, we're going to get away," he said, with gladness. "I'll be well in a few days. You don't know how strong I am. We'll hide by day and travel by night. I can get you across the river."

"And then?" she asked.

"We'll find some honest rancher."

"And then?" she persisted.

"Why," he began, slowly, "that's as far as my thoughts ever got. It was pretty hard, I tell you, to assure myself of so much. It means your safety. You'll tell your story. You'll be sent to some village or town and taken care of until a relative or friend is notified."

Duane kept silent.

"What will you do?" she went on.

"Jennie, I'll go back to the brakes. I daren't show my face among respectable people. I'm an outlaw."

"Jennie, oh this border the little difference between an outlaw and a criminal doesn't count for much."

"You won't go back among those terrible men? You, with your gentleness and, sweetness—all that's good about you? Oh, Duane, don't—don't go!"

"I can't go back to the outlaws, at least not Blande's band. No, I'll go alone. I'll lone-wolf it, as they say on the border. What else can I do, Jennie?"

"Oh, I don't know. Couldn't you hide? Couldn't you slip out of Texas—go far away?"

"I could never get out of Texas without being arrested. I could hide, but a man must live. Never mind about me, Jennie."

In three days Duane was able with great difficulty to mount his horse. During daylight, by short relays, he and Jennie rode back to the main trail, where they hid again till he had rested. Then in the dark they rode out of the canons and gullies of the Rim Rock, and early in the morning halted at the first water to camp.

From that point they traveled after nightfall and went into hiding during the day. Once across the Neuces river, Duane was assured of safety for her and great danger for himself They had crossed into a country he did not know. Somewhere east of the river there were scattered ranches. But he was as liable to find the rancher in touch with the outlaws as he was likely to find him honest. Duane hoped his good fortune would not desert him in this last service to Jennie. Next to the worry of that was realization of his condition. He had gotten up too soon, he had ridden too far and hard, and now he felt that any moment he might fall from his saddle At last, far ahead over a barren mesquite dotted stretch of dusty ground, he espied a patch of green and a little flat, red ranch-house He headed his horse for it and turned a face he tried to make cheerful for Jennie's sake. She seemed both happy and sorry.

When near at hand he saw that the rancher was a thrifty farmer And thrift spoke for honesty There were fields of alfalfa, fruit-trees, corrals, windmill pumps, irrigation ditches, all surrounding a neat little adobe house. Some children were playing in the yard. The way they ran at sight of Duane hinted of both the loneliness and the fear of their isolated lives. Duane saw a woman come to the door, then a man. The latter looked keenly, then stepped outside He was a sandy-haired, freckled Texan.

Howdy, stranger," he called, as Duane halted. "Get down, you an your woman Say, now, air you sick or shot or what? Let me—"

Duane, reeling in his saddle, bent searching eyes upon the rancher He thought he saw good will, kindness, honesty He risked all on that one sharp glance Then he almost plunged from the saddle.

The rancher caught him, helped him to a bench

"Martha, come out here!" he called. "This man's sick No he's shot, or I don't know blood stains!"

Jennie had slipped off her horse and to Duane's side. Duane appeared about to faint

"Air you his wife?" asked the rancher

"No. I'm only a girl he saved from outlaws Oh, he's so pale! Duane, Duane!"

"Buck Duane!" exclaimed the rancher, excitedly "The man who killed Bland an' Alloway? Say, I owe him a good turn, an' I'll pay it, young woman!"

The rancher's wife came out, and with a manner at once kind and practical essayed to make Duane drink from a flask He was not so far gone that he could not recognize its contents, which he refused, and weakly asked for water When that was given him he found his voice.

"Yes, I'm Duane. I've only overdone myself—just all in The wounds I got at Bland's are healing Will you take this girl in—hide her awhile till the excitement's over among the outlaws?"

"I shore will," replied the Texan.

"Thanks. I'll remember you—I'll square it."

"What 're you goin' to do?"

"I'll rest a bit—then go back to the brakes."

"Young man, you ain't in any shape to travel See here—any hustlers on your trail?"

"I think we gave Bland's gang the slip."

"Good. I'll tell you what. I'll take you in along with the girl, an' hide both of you till you get well It 'll be safe. My nearest neighbor is five miles off. We don't have much company"

"You risk a great deal. Both outlaws and rangers are hunting me," said Duane.

"Never seen a ranger yet in these parts. An' have always got along with outlaws, mebbe exceptin' Bland. I tell you I owe you a good turn."

"My horses might betray you," added Duane.

"I'll hide them in a place where there's water an' grass. Nobody goes to it. Come now, let me help you indoors."

Duane's last fading sensations of that hard day were the strange feel of a bed, a relief at the removal of his heavy boots, and of Jennie's soft, cool hands on his hot face.

He lay ill for three weeks before he began to mend, and it was another week then before he could walk out a little in the dusk of the evenings. After that his strength returned rapidly. And it was only at the end of this long siege that he recovered his spirits. During most of his illness he had been silent, moody.

"Jennie, I'll be riding off soon," he said, one evening. "I can't impose on this good man Andrews much longer. I'll never forget his kindness. His wife, too—she's been so good to us. Yes, Jennie, you and I will have to say goodby very soon."

"Don't hurry away," she replied.

Lately Jennie had appeared strange to him. She had changed from the girl he used to see at Mrs. Bland's house. He took her reluctance to say goodby as another indication of her regret that he must go back to the brakes. Yet somehow it made him observe her more closely. She wore a plain, white dress made from material Mrs. Andrews had given her. Sleep and good food had improved her. If she had been pretty out there in the outlaw den, now she was more than that. But she had the same paleness, the same strained look, the same dark eyes full of haunting shadows. After Duane's realization of the change in her he watched her more, with a growing certainty that he would be sorry not to see her again.

"It's likely we won't ever see each other again," he said. "That's strange to think of. We've been through some hard days, and I seem to have known you a long time."

Jennie appeared shy, almost sad, so Duane changed the subject to something less personal.

"Duane, everybody's talkin' about how you cleaned up the Bland outfit," he said, important and full of news. "It's some exaggerated, accordin' to what you told me; but you've shore made friends on this side of the Nueces. I reckon ther ain't a town where you wouldn't find people to welcome you. Huntsville, you know, is some divided in its ideas. Half the people are crooked. Likely enough, all them who was so loud in praise of you are the crookedest. For instance, met King Fisher, the boss outlaw of these parts. Well, King thinks he's a decent citizen. He was tellin' me what a grand job yours was for the border an' honest cattlemen. Now that Bland and Alloway are done for, King Fisher will find rustlin' easier. There's talk of Hardin movin' his camp over to Bland's. But I don't know how true it is. I reckon ther ain't much to it. In the past when a big outlaw chief went under, his band almost always broke up an' scattered. There's no one left who could run thet outfit."

"Did you hear of any outlaws hunting me?" asked Duane.

"Nobody from Bland's outfit is huntin' you, thet's shore," replied Andrews. "Fisher said there never was a hoss straddled to go on your trail. Nobody had any use for Bland. Anyhow, his men would be afraid to trail you. An' you could go right in to Huntsville, where you'd be some popular. Reckon you'd be safe, too, except when some of them fool saloon loafers or bad cowpunchers would try to shoot you for the glory in it. Them kind of men will bob up everywhere you go, Duane."

"I'll be able to ride and take care of myself in a day or two," went on Duane. "Then I'll go—I'd like to talk to you about Jennie."

"Thank you, Andrews. You're a kind man. But I want Jennie to get farther away from the Rio Grande. She'd never be safe here. Besides, she may be able to find relatives. She has some, though she doesn't know where they are."

"All right, Duane. Whatever you think best. I reckon now you'd better take her to some town. Go north an' strike for Shelbyville or Crockett. Them's both good towns. I'll tell Jennie the names of men who'll help her. You needn't ride into town at all."

"Which place is nearer, and how far is it?"

"Shelbyville. I reckon about two days' ride. Poor stock country, so you ain't liable to meet rustlers. All the same, better hit the train at night an' go careful."

At sunset two days later Duane and Jennie mounted their horses and said goodby to the rancher and his wife. Andrews would not listen to Duane's thanks

"I tell you I'm beholden to you yet," he declared.

"Well, what can I do for you?" asked Duane. "I may come along here again some day."

"Get down an' come in, then, or you're no friend of mine. I reckon there ain't nothin' I can think of—I just happen to remember—" Here he led Duane out of earshot of the women and went on in a whisper. "Buck, I used to be well to do. Got skinned by a man named Brown—Rodney Brown He lives in Huntsville, an' he's my enemy. I never was much on fightin', or I'd fixed him. Brown ruined me—stole all I had. He's a hoss an' cattle thief, an' he has pull enough at home to protect him. I reckon I needn't say any more."

"Shore, he's the same. I heard thet story Brown swears he plugged Stevens through the middle. But the outlaw rode off, an' nobody ever knew for shore."

"Luke Stevens died of that shot. I buried him," said Duane.

Andrews made no further comment, and the two men returned to the women.

"The main road for about three miles, then where it forks take the left hand road and keep on straight. That what you said, Andrews?"

"Shore. An' good luck to you both!"

Duane and Jennie trotted away into the gathering twilight. At the moment an insistent thought bothered Duane. Both Luke Stevens and the rancher Andrews had hinted to Duane to kill a man named Brown. Duane wished with all his heart they had not mentioned it, let alone taken for granted the execution of the deed. What a bloody place Texas was! Men who robbed and men who were robbed both wanted murder. It was in the spirit of the country. Duane certainly meant to avoid ever meeting this Rodney Brown. And that very determination showed Duane how dangerous he really was—to men and to himself. Sometimes he had a feeling of how little stood between his sane and better self and a self utterly wild and terrible. He reasoned that only intelligence could save him—only a thoughtful understanding of his danger and a hold upon some ideal.

Then he fell into low conversation with Jennie, holding out hopeful views of her future, and presently darkness set in. The sky was overcast with heavy clouds; there was no air moving; the heat and oppression threatened storm. By and by Duane could not see a rod in front of him, though his horse had no difficulty in keeping to the road. Duane was bothered by the blackness of the night. Traveling fast was impossible, and any moment he might miss the road that led off to the left. So he was compelled to give all his attention to peering into the thick shadows ahead. As good luck would have it he, came to higher ground where there was less mesquite, and therefore not such impenetrable darkness; and at this point he came to where the road split.

Once headed in the right direction, he felt easier in mind. To his annoyance, however, a fine, misty rain set in. Jennie was not well dressed for wet weather; and, for that matter, neither was he. His coat, which in that dry climate he seldom needed, was tied behind his saddle, and he put it on Jennie.

They traveled on. The rain fell steadily; if anything, growing thicker. Duane grew uncomfortably wet and chilly. Jennie, however, fared somewhat better by reason of the heavy coat. The night passed quickly despite the discomfort, and soon a gray, dismal, rainy dawn greeted the travelers.

KOREAN WOLVES KILL 120 PEOPLE IN YE

Seoul, Korea—Accustomed as Ko...ans are to the attacks of wild an... in the mountains, they have been ...tonished to learn that during th... year 120 people were killed by ... and that over 3,000 domestic an... were either killed or injured. ...havoc was wrought by tigers, leopar... bears, and Korean wolves, but it wa... the wolf, according to official statistics, that did the greatest harm. It is estimated that these ferocious creatures slew 113 persons and injured 50, besides killing or injuring 517 cattle and 1,519 domestic animals.

The Korean wolf, which is locally known as the neuktai, is a powerful animal of the canine species, a little larger, but longer and thinner, than the native Korean dog. In color, it is brown and gray. It possesses piercing eyes and, in face of danger or while capturing prey, shows wonderful agility, hiding itself in underbrush, jumping over high cliffs, or swiftly swimming across rivers and lakes. In attacking a pony or cow, it will leap upon the victim's flank and kill instantly by tearing open some vital part. In attacking a man, it will follow him for a time and occasionally leap over his head, seeking to unnerve him and cause him to fall to the ground, when it will immediately attack and kill. Oftentimes it will summon its mates to assist in attacking. There are instances of where a wolf has carried off a big boy, for a considerable distance, and where it has jumped over a high wall with a pig in its mouth.

The Korean authorities are exerting every effort to exterminate the animal and rewards are offered for each wolf that is killed.

GETTING GOOD MILK.

The high cost of living is boosting the prices of all kinds of food everywhere almost. The exception is the price of milk in Riverside, Cal. We are interested in learning how the exception came to be.

In 1910 eight dairies were selling milk in Riverside. Eight wagons were used and double daily deliveries were made. Practically every block was covered by each of the eight wagons. Milk sold at 8 1-3 cents a quart in July. In November the price was boosted to 10 cents. A cooperative pasteurizing plant and delivery system was organized by the eight dairymen. They invested $31,000 in real estate, buildings, machinery, and other improvements. The capital stock pays 7 per cent interest. Milk is now selling at 6 2-3 cents a quart.

The milk is aerated and cooled on the farm. It is then carried immediately to the pasteurizing plant. Here it is pasteurized at 147 to 160 degrees F. for 10 minutes, bottled, reduced to a temperature of between 30 and 40 degrees F. and held at that temperature until it is delivered. It is a safer, better milk than that which it replaced.

Three wagons now do the business which in the natural course 15 wagons would have done since the community is developing, the consumption of milk is increasing and 15 dairymen are now in the business. Cream and milk are sold in the nearby towns. Ten men are employed—three as dairymen, three as deliverymen, and three as workmen in the plant and one as bookkeeper.

Dr. Rucker, the health commissioner, says that the experiment has fostered the dairy business, increased the earnings of the producer, given the consumer a better product at less cost and safeguards the public health.

The same number of the bulletin of the state board of health as that which contained the story of good milk at a low price in Riverside contained notice that the state of California would from now on require that milk shall be sold by grades. The grades are: Guaranteed milk, raw; guaranteed milk, pasteurized. These grades correspond to certified milk: Grade A milk, raw; grade A milk, pasteurized; grade B milk, pasteurized, and a cooking milk sold as "not suitable for human consumption."

These are the grades established by the milk commission and in rather general use in the east except that the last grade is called grade C, or cooking milk."

A Boy's Right to Whistle.

From the Hartford Courant.

As to the office boys, messenger boys, grocery boys and boys of many other merchandises that are delivered at our houses every day—well, of course they all whistle. The man who never whistles is not unknown, but no possible reward could bring to light a specimen of the genus boy who doesn't. It's an inalienable right of boyhood to whistle; it is handed down to him with his disposition, his freckles, his pugnacity and all those other things that so remind unkind people, on occasions, of his father. When father was a boy he whistled; and, now that the boy has taken the old man's place, why, the boy whistles. It's perfectly logical that the boy should whistle—and of course a boy never is anything but logical.

So let us all figure the same way the poet did when he requested the boy who whistled at his work. For otherwise no boy would be there to do the work. And let's spread that mantle of charity along the years so as to take in the men who whistle, too. Don't sneer at them; don't strangle the soul of music as it strives to attain expression from their puckered lips. Don't—but what's the use of saying "don't try to stop them?" It can't be done, anyway.

HIRED HELP.

By Walt Mason.

If you should have in your employ a useless sort of man or boy, and you're convinced he won't improve, but plug along the same old groove, just take him by the shoulder blade, and tell him, quietly, to fade. Don't jaw or argue by the day, but shoo the worthless wight away. If you would make your business win, you'll hire the man behind the grin, who finds a pleasure in his work, and strives to be the model clerk. You must have teamwork in your shop, or you will hear some object drop, and you can't work that splendid scheme, unless all hands are full of steam. One lazy grouch around your place, one frost with gloom upon his face, one kicker who is always sore, will give his microbes to a score; and, by his anarchist harangue, will chill the spirits of the gang. So when he makes his maudlin moan, just take him by the collarbone, and push him gently from your door, and tell him to return no more.

Ideas for Women.

To protect furs from moths, first thoroughly beat the furs with a thin rattan and air them for several hours; then carefully comb them with a clean comb; wrap them in newspapers, perfectly tight, and put them away in an airtight chest, lined with tin or cedar wood. Take them out and examine them in the sun at least once a month, thoroughly beating them. The printing ink of the newspapers is very distasteful to moths. Among woolens strew camphor.

Black crepe de chine four-in-hand ties are finished at the ends with quarter-inch hemstitched hems of colored taffeta; they are designed for wear with the black and white shirts so popular with the light tweed touring suits. The shaded chiffon veils, white or delicate gray over the face and shading toward the ends into the color of the suit, are finished with narrow hemstitched silk hems like the ties.

Select a ham of about 10 pounds, sugar cured. Scrub and wash it thoroughly, bring to the boil and pour off the first water. Cover with boiling water and allow to simmer gently for two and one-half hours, or until it feels tender. Cool in the water in which it was boiled, remove skin from the fat side. Rub a handful of brown sugar and bread crumbs into the fat, stick with cloves and brown in the oven.

Distinction should always be made between gravy and fat. Gravy for serving with roast beef should not be perceptibly thickened, while for pork and lamb it can have a sufficient thickening of flour to make it about the consistency of cream. Chicken and duck gravies may be slightly thickened, but not as much as those for other meats.

A good furniture polish can be made in the following manner To six ounces of the best refined kerosene add one ounce of the best yellow resin, one dram of vermilion to color, and 10 ounces of turpentine. Mix these ingredients at a gentle heat for at least an hour Then strain and stir constantly until cold.

A little arrowroot inclosed in a muslin rag and placed in the water in which handkerchiefs are boiled will give the latter a faint and agreeable scent after being ironed If borax is added to the water in which they are finally rinsed, they will assume the right degree of stiffness without being hard, as if they were actually starched.

Furniture upholstered in leather cloth will last much longer if the covering is occasionally revived with the following mixture Take one part of best vinegar and two parts of boiled linseed oil, and shake well together. Apply a little on a soft rag and afterward polish with a silk duster or an old chamois leather

Steel fireirons which have become dull should first be wrapped for a day or two in rags soaked in paraffin and then well rubbed with fine emery paper. After that a course of daily rubbing with the hands will gradually bring them back to their original brightness.

By the use of a bread mixer the labor of bread making is reduced to a minimum and, if directions are followed in using the mixer, you will have fine grained, sweet and wholesome bread

Ribbon suspenders are quite prominent on many afternoon frocks of taffeta. The idea is good because it takes away the shirtwaist and skirt idea that otherwise would exist.

New Cure For Nervousness.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

There must have been merit in the "birch tea" of childhood for the same remedy is proscribed in sanitariums nowadays for invalids. In other words, it is considered that a healthy reaction may be gained from a "spanking."

In the mechano therap departments of up-to-date institutions, the "whipping post," a mechanical device for therapeutic paddling, is an accredited healing machine.

You are whipped by straps of heavy cloth or leather attached to two rapidly revolving posts. When you take the treatment you step backward into the flying whips and receive their blows upon your legs, back, abdomen or chest, depending upon the malady from which you are suffering. The impact of the straps is just sufficient to set the blood in circulation. There is no smarting, stinging sensation because the straps are broad enough to eliminate any possibility of a cutting blow. You are paddled rather than lashed.

The "whipping post" is valuable in many type of nervousness. It is also valuable in increasing blood circulation and relieving numbness. Certain forms of paralysis, though not responsive to other treatment, are benefited.

Cavalryman Not an Aviator.

From London Tit-Bits.

A certain officer of the royal horse artillery, having his battery divided into half batteries, which were garrisoned over 40 miles apart by road, applied that he might have an allowance granted him for an extra charger, it being his duty to frequently visit both portions. The war office ruled that this allowance was inadmissible, saying: "Measured by the ordnance map, as the crow flies, the distance is found to be only 33 miles and a half." For a time the officer was nonplused, but an idea struck him and he seized his pen and wrote: "There would appear to be some misunderstanding regarding my application. I am asking for an allowance for an additional charger, not an additional crow. I do not ride a crow; I ride a horse!" He got it.

THE JERUSALEM OF RUSSIA—KIEF

Kief is the wealthiest, most important and largest city in the immediat path of the Teutonic invaders, and one of the oldest and most important of Russia's towns. A statement given out by the National Geographic Society at Washington describes this place, the famed "mother of Russian cities," which is now threatened by the southward sweep of the Austro-German armies from Kovel and Lutsk, and by the eastward advance of the Austrians in Galicia.

"Kief is beautifully situated on the broad Dnieper among a cluster of golden hills. There are other cities in Russia to dispute its claim of being the cradle of the modern empire, but it is the undisputed cradle of orthodoxy, the birthplace of Russia's church, and it is as well a first religious center. Holy Kief is known as the Russian Jerusalem. It is a city of many churches, monasteries, sacred relics and of numerous saints. More than 250,000 pilgrims have regularly visited the holy city each year during times of peace. As a place of pilgrimage, Russian Kief ranks with Mecca, with Jerusalem and with Rome.

Old Streets Are Broad.

"It is a prosperous city, a modern and a progressive one. In its newer parts, the streets are broad and straight, and are built up with fine homes and public buildings. In the old quarter, there are modern buildings from three to six stories high, which is a rare thing in Russia. The Krostchatik is a splendid thoroughfare, cut upon the most approved of western city plans. However, like Petrograd, the wide, regular streets of the southern metropolis are a heritage from the founders.

"Take away the churches, with their turnip, pineapple and pearshaped domes, take away the pilgrims and the visiting peasants, and Kief has little that is typically Russian With the growth of its industry and commerce, it has adopted the modern city habit, a habit which is the same the world around.

"Despite its obtrusive newness, Kief is an ancient city. Its fortunes have been intimately connected with the fortunes of Russia. It was founded about the beginning of the Seventh century, and its authentic history begins with the arrival of the two Scandinavian knights, Askold and Dyr, who left Novogorod to take possession of it.

Christianized In Early Day.

"Kief early became Christian, and the Greek faith was carried to the rest of the Russians from there. In the Eleventh century, there are said to have been 400 churches within its walls. The relations between Byzantium and Kief were close, and much of the Greek culture that has mixed itself with Russian life entered the empire by way of this city.

Kief has been badly battered in more than 1,000 years of wars and internal disorders, but it has had a saving way of quickly covering up its wounds and beginning afresh with redoubled courage. At one time it was the capital of the Russian state. It was subject for more than two generations to the Mongols, when it fell to the possession of the Lithuanian principality for 239 years For 85 years it was under the sway of Poland and was finally united to Russia in 1686. It is by far the most important city in the Ukraine and one of the most beautiful in Russia.

The city lies on the right or west bank of the Dnieper in the midst of a fruitful region, which, during recent years has been making rapid progress. It is 623 miles southwest of Moscow by rail and 406 miles by rail south-northeast of Odessa.

Manufacturing Center, Too.

"That part of the city built along the riverside is flat, while behind the streets run up and down the hills through picturesque gullies.

"Kief ranks next to Petrograd and Moscow in educational and scientific institutions. Its university is famous and has more than 3,000 students. The city is also the Magdeburg of Russia, the center of the empire's beet sugar industry. This industry has been steadily gaining in importance. In 1910 10,000,000 tons of beet sugar were produced in the czar's realm, while just before the war its production had risen to more than 140,000,000 tons. There are innumerable rich refineries in Kief Further, there is a considerable manufacture of machinery, chemicals, hardware, paper and tobacco. The conserved fruits of Kief have a European reputation, and during recent years they have been successfully competing with English conserves. Kief has a population of nearly 350,000 and has been rapidly adding numbers through the last 10 years. The city lies 270 miles from Odessa and the Black Sea on a line as the bird flies."

Jap Invented Wall Paper.

From the St Paul Pioneer Press.

Hundreds of years ago there was no paper! We couldn't get on without it in these days, could we? We are always wanting it—to write upon, to wrap things up in; and last, but not least, to print our books and newspapers on.

It was a clever little Japanese gentleman who first invented it. This little man was a merchant, and as he had over so many parcels to send out from his shop every week, he found the silk in which he always wrapped them a rather expensive item.

One days while he was walking in his garden he came across a wasps's nest, and he noticed how wonderfully it was made—how the clever wasps had used some kind of wood, softened it into a thin paste with their jaws, and, after carefully shaping it, had left it to dry.

"If wasps can do a thing like that," of wood, and form it into a pulp by means of river water, wouldn't the result be something like the fabric of the wasps' nest? I'll try, anyway, and see what I can do. It would save myself and other people quite a lot of money if my experiment succeeded."

Income Records Secret.

The government does not tell who the 11,000,000 income receivers are, or even in what states they live. Some time after June 30 of each year the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington reports the total number of persons for the preceding calendar year who have paid taxes on incomes of $1,000,000 or more, $500,000 to $1,000,000, $400,000 to $500,000, and so on down the list. He also makes public the number of taxpayers in each state, but gives only one faint clew to their identity; namely, the number of persons with incomes of $500,000 or more in each state and collection district.

To pry loose by bribery or theft anything beyond these meager official facts would subject the guilty treasury employes to the terrors of the Spanish Inquisition. The penalties for divulging information and the specifications as to what information must not be divulged are incredibly definite, sweeping and complete. The collector of a downtown New York city district even refused, courteously but firmly, to tell me whether a single millionaire had filed an income tax return in that district, although everybody knows that millionaires and multis swarm like flies through the golden precincts of Wall street.

TERRITORIAL CROPS YIELD WILL BE GREAT

Percentage In Small Grains Decreases, But More Harvesters Needed.

Although the acreage of small grains and corn in South Dakota, Nebraska and Iowa has decreased this season a greater number of men will be required in the harvest fields and it is estimated the yield will be far in excess of any crop in recent years. Members of the Sioux City board of trade declare the reports from South Dakota are the most optimistic in the history of the state.

Figures compiled by M. King, of the board of trade, show that from reports from 296 towns the acreage of spring wheat has decreased 2.3 per cent; winter wheat has decreased in acreage 4.8 per cent and corn has decreased 5 per cent. In Iowa the decrease of spring wheat has been 4.2 per cent; of winter wheat 18 per cent, but corn has increased in acreage 1.8 per cent. Nebraska has 2.6 per cent less of spring wheat, 13 per cent less of winter wheat and 11.2 per cent more of corn.

Harvesting Late.

Harvesting operations in South Dakota are from 10 days to two weeks late and work will begin probably in three weeks. Wheat is heading out and is said to be in perfect condition throughout the state. Careful estimates say that at least 25,000 men will be required to handle the crop of that state.

Corn, which is becoming one of the chief crops of the state, is gaining the lost ground due to wet and cold weather and with another week of heat it is said it will be up to normal condition

ARRESTED GROWTH.

A boy who is not so tall as he wants to be, and who has not grown for three years, although he is only 19 years old, wants to know if there is any possibility that he will or can grow taller, and, if there is, what he can do to help on the process.

Osborne and Mendel have recently studied the possibilities of causing a resumption of arrested growth. They took young white rats and stopped their growth by changing their food. In some growth was stopped by feeding insufficient food. In others the food given was not a quality which promotes growth. After these animals had been thoroughly runted and had been kept there for a long time—that is, a long time in the growing life of a rat—feeding them properly caused them to grow to full size. A rat usually attains its growth within the first 300 days of life. One of their stunted rats resumed growth and grew until he was 550 days old.

"It is reasonable to ask whether the capacity to grow can ever be lost unless it is exercised." They found that animals in whom growth had been arrested when fed right and given a chance to grow grew rapidly until they reached their growth. This was true regardless of the size and age of the animals when growth was stopped or how long it had been stopped. In some cases the renewed growth was more rapid than the normal growth. They concluded that the stunting from insufficient food or improper food can be wholly overcome.

The foods best suited to produce growth were good fresh milk, butter, eggs, meat and bread, vegetables and fruit. These foods rank in value in the order named. Funk and MacCallum say that proteins, carbohydrates, fats, and salts are necessary for growth, and that in addition, certain accessory substances, one water soluble and one fat soluble, are necessary. Years and butter on bread, meat, and sugars will stimulate growth, but good fresh milk is best of all.

Now, what does this mean? It means that when growth has been stopped because of lack of food or poor food proper food will cause it to resume. And that is all that it means. If a boy has stopped growing from any other cause, change in food, in quality or in quantity, will not cause him to begin growing again. If a boy stops growing at five feet five inches because some ancestor was short, he cannot change his food and thereby increase his stature. And it is inheritance that determines stature in most cases. The ancestor that the boy takes after may not be his father or mother. It may be a grandparent or perhaps even a greatgrandparent. There is not much that a boy can do to increase his height who stops growing because it is in his stock for him to stop. He should get plenty of exercise in the open air and eat abundantly. He should eat plenty of good fresh milk and butter and plenty of meat. Perhaps he should eat some dried yeast. This policy may help some, but the chance is against it.

Town Built on Potash.

From the Omaha World-Herald.

Hoffland, Neb., from a little railroad siding a year ago, with two or three cars standing on the track, has grown until it has been placed on the railroad map as a full-fledged town, shipping out 30 cars a day. Hoffland promises to grow still more.

It is on account of potash and its by-products. The fields at Hoffland are the only ones in the United States where the almost pure article is found. In Utah and southern California, where the mineral is taken from kelp beds, the cost of reducing the pure potash from the vegetable matter makes the marketable produce expensive.

Here is found an almost pure article that necessitates nothing but pumping, boiling and drying, when it is ready for the refinery, where it brings the heretofore unknown price of $500 a ton. A Chicago packing company has contracted for the town's entire output for five years.

These Superfluous Platforms.

From the Kansas City Star.

When the convention "demonstration" is abolished—the demonstration that lasts anywhere from 23 to 43 minutes by the stop watch—there is another convention institution that ought to go with it namely the platform. Not in whole, perhaps, but it ought to be chipped down to two or three planks. The rest are piffle and bunc.

Usually there are two or three issues that the party really stands for—preparedness, for instance, and the protective tariff, and a Mexican policy. On these vital issues the position ought to be set forth clearly But there always are an innumerable number of planks introduced that nobody knows or cares anything about. The convention attempts to settle offhand all the problems of the universe, including predestination, free will and total depravity. The consequence is that every party unloads a lot of declarations on the country which it has no notion of ever carrying out.

President Wilson reversed his party declaration on Panama canal tolls and the single term for president. A few years ago, voting contrary to his platform on the lumber duty, Senator Bailey of Texas told the Senate that he did not propose to have a few delegates meeting in committee in a hotel bedroom for a few hours and passing on all sorts of problems, tell him what to do on important legislative matters.

The circumstances under which platforms are made preclude them from amounting to anything as expressions of policy, except on the most important issues.

Fifty-Fifty Deal.

A number of politicians were attending a convention in Chicago a short time ago when one of the number was approached by an old acquaintance who was plainly down in his luck. Sliding up to the politician he said:

"Say, Jack, lend me ten, will you? I'm short."

The big fellow went down into his pocket, flashed out a big roll and handed a five-dollar bill to the down-and-outer.

"Say, Jack," said he of the "touch," "I said ten."

"I know you did," replied the politician, "but I think this way is fairer. You lose five and I lose five."

Seals Can Drown.

It is a curious fact that the fur seal was once a land animal. The baby seals are actually afraid of water; they would drown if thrown into it, and have to learn to swim by repeated efforts. When once they have been taught to swim, however, they soon forget to walk.

There are in existence only two important herds of fur seals, one of which has its breeding ground in the Commander islands, belonging to Russia, the other in the Pribilof islands, belonging to the United States. Of these the latter is much the larger. The Pribilof islands are government property, and thus it happens that the United States government finds itself the owner of by far the most valuable herd of fur seals in the world.

Son Wanted to Prove It.

Father sat in his study one afternoon writing out a speech, when his son called shrilly from the garden:

"Dad! Look out of the window!"

"What a nuisance children are at times!" grumbled the parent as he put down his pen and advanced to the window. With a half smile he raised the sash and stuck forth his head "Well, Harry, what is it?" he asked.

The boy from a group of youngsters, called out, "Dad, Tommy Perkins didn't believe that you had no hair on the top of your head."

A New Use For This Word
They're distinguished by the tiny bubbles found on each flake and they carry the full, rich flavour of choice, white Indian corn — not found in corn flakes of the past.
And unlike common corn flakes, they are not "chaff" in the package and don't grow mushy in milk or cream.
Note carefully the tiny bubbles—then try a handful dry to test the flavour. In comparison, other corn flakes are as "chaff."

One thing farmers should pay attention to these days is the proper shocking of grain in the field or stack. There is a large loss from damaged grain each season in Iowa that could be avoided if the shocks and stacks were built in the proper way.

On account of the extremely hot weather our press rollers went down on us this week and the paper presents a very mucky looking appearance. We hope to have some new rollers by next week and then will be able to give you a more readable paper.

We men are quite in the habit of smiling over feminine scraps over the back fence, but we apparently overlook entirely our own propensity to "chew the rag" in the public street. Of the two we are inclined to the belief that woman has the best of the deal.

Was there an item of news concerning yourself or your family that did not get in the last issue of the paper? If so it was omitted because we did not learn of it and you did not tell us. We want every ligitimate piece of news in this community, and we ask YOU to tell us what YOU know.

We now have the Pure Bred Jack, Mazatlon, No. 6608 with state certificate No. 545. Any mares leaving the county after breeding, service fee will be due at once and collected. Gibbs Bros.

Mrs. Ben Swalve received the sad news Saturday, that her mother had passed away at her home at Little Rock, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Swalve left the same day to attend the funeral services. The deceased was known by a number of our people as she had visited here on numerous occasions. She was about 80 years old and had always enjoyed good health. The bereaved have the sympathy of their many friends.

[illegible] even in such a moment terribly impressed upon Duane

He heard a cry from outside—a man's cry hoarse and alarming

It made him think of loss of time. This demon of a woman might yet block his plan

"Let go!" he whispered, and felt his lips stiff In the grimness of that instant he relaxed his hold on the rifle barrel

With sudden, redoubled irresistible strength she wrenched the rifle down and discharged it Duane felt a blow—a shock—a burning agony tearing through his breast. Then in a frenzy he jerked so powerfully upon the rifle that he threw the woman against the wall She fell and seemed stunned.

The national campaign is well under way, but because of the universal interest in the border situation many people are giving the respective candidates scarcely a passing thought. Newspapers are neglecting them and their doings to the inside pages, while the full force of the limelight is focused upon Mexico and the troops on our own side of the border. It is hard lines for the politicians, but the people, no doubt, will live through the distressing ordeal without loss of sleep or flesh.

George Sweet's Big Tent Show held forth here Saturday evening presenting the play, "The Girl From Wyoming". They were greeted by a packed tent and we have yet to hear the first word of adverse comment. Sweet always presents a good bill but the one this year was one of the cleanest western comedy dramas that we have ever had the pleasure of witnessing. Mr. Sweet aims to always stay two or three nights but on account of the Fourth, his time last week was pretty well split uy and he was unable to play Klemme but one night but promises to give us at least two nights when they pay us a visit next year.

Have you noticed the peculiarities beneath the surface in the mobilization of the National Guard of the United States and its dispatch to the border? Serving in the ranks of many of the organizations are millionaires from the highest social and financial families. In the same commands are janitors, farmers, clerks, and common laborers, all good men and true. Each is serving his country to the best of his ability, but the most noticeable feature is the fact that social castle is utterly unknown, The millionaire and the laborer groom their horses or dig ditches side by side and joke as though they had been fast friends all their lives. They are comrades in a common cause, and as comrades they think, act and do.

Some times the editor "sees it" and some times he don't, but he writes right along just the same, for he is expected to see everything and know everything and tell everything he both sees and knows. But he don't. If he were to publish everything he sees and spread everything he knows a cyclone would be mild in comparison to the storm that would sweep over the community. And yet our fair bailiwick is no worse than the normal community the world over. But few people ever realize the amount of patience and discretion the average publisher must observe, He hears and sees many things. Their publications could serve no legitimate purpose, could result in no good whatever to the community, could be of benefit to no human being, but on the contrary would bring grief and suffering to many innocent people. It is in such matters that the humane publisher tempers his actions with mercy and adulterates it with the milk of human kindness. Yet but little of this consideration is ever extended to the publishers themselves.

FAILING IN THE TEST

The railroads of the country have been put to the test in the handling of troops and have failed, and we have learned yet another lesson in the school of unpreparedness.

Regiments of soldiers who were scheduled by the roads to start at a certain hour have been delayed for days through lack of cars, and in a number of instances the troops have lain on the ground at the stations all night long waiting for the cars to take them to the border.

The excuse of the roads is a shortage of cars, but if that be the case what would we do if we were suddenly required to transport a great army instead of a few thousand men.

The citizen depends upon the army to protect him in his rights of person and property, and the army depends upon the railroads to get it to the front.

When the roads fall down on an insignificant movement, what are we to expect when an emergency arises?

The question demands an answer.

MEN WHO LIVE IN MEMORY

Every town (and ours is no exception) has two distinct classes of citizens—those who live in the memory of their fellow men, and those who are promptly forgotten.

The man who is energetic, persevering, and keeps always in mind the welfare of the community in which he lives will never need a marble slab to keep his memory green.

The fellow who kicks and villifies his own home town will die unmourned and his neighbors will not even think of him long enough to forget him.

Say a good word for your town—and say it again.

PERSPIRATION STAINS.

I have a blue cotton striped voile dress that has turned purple under the arms from perspiration. Is there anything I can do with it so that it won't look so bad that I can wear it? It is new. I have worn it only twice. I had shields in it, but they were cheap ones and no protection.

Try sponging it with pure choloform. Then with household ammonia. The first should neutralize the acid of the perspiration and restore the color. Neither can do any harm.

MONEY AND MARRIAGE.

What is the smallest income upon which a couple should venture to get married? This is a rather old question which is being debated afresh of late.

There is absolutely no answer. Couples without either incomes or jobs have married and actually "lived happily ever after." Other couples with unlimited resources in money have quarreled from the altar to the divorce court.

Hancock County Short Course Feb. 14 to 19

A big event is coming soon—an event of significance to every farmer, farmer's wife, son and daughter in Hancock county.

It is an event that will bring "pay dirt" to every person who is big sighted enough to take advantage of it.

It is the Hancock county winter short course and farmers' week at Klemme, February 14th to 19th.

During that week the town will be turned over to the service of the farmers. The biggest men in agriculture in the country will be here to tell the farmers of their life long work and experience in their special lines.

Best methods of farming, backed up by experience, told in plain, understandable English—that's what every farmer wants to hear. That's exactly what he will get at Klemme, February 14-19. But that's not all.

There will be a chance to meet fellow farmers, talk things over with them heart to heart, and learn first hand what they are doing.

Work on the farm is not heavy at this time of year. A more remunerative vacation could not be taken than this week of learning. Plans ought to be made now. The farmer who comes to Klemme will return home a better farmer, a bigger producer and a wiser man.

Tickets are now being offered for sale, purchase one or more when you have the opportunity.

Remember—February 14th to 19th.

SEED CORN STILL UNSOLVED

Situation Serious, Says Mr. Bliss, Who Advises Farmers to Get Busy and Organize in Northern Counties

"Farmers who trust to luck to obtain their 1916 supply of seed corn will have only hard luck," asserts B. K. Bliss, head of the agricultural extension department, Ames, Iowa, which is conducting seed corn campaigns in five northern Iowa counties.

"Every northern county in Iowa should organize to locate and distribute their seed corn" says Mr. Bliss, "If not for their own benefit, then to help their less fortunate neighboring counties. For instance, such counties as Osceola, O'Brien and Pocahontas where there is undoubtekly an abundance of seed corn if it could only be located, could be of enormous assistance to such counties as Worth and Chickasaw, where conditions are anything but favorable. Since 2,000,000 bushels of seed corn, or about 20,000 bushles to each county, are needed for Iowa in 1916 and only a few counties have that amount the sooner the farmers realize taht they should get busy and locate their next year's supply, the better."

The counties now organized to locate and distribute seed corn are Cerro Gordo, Chickasaw, Worth, Floyd and Pocahontas. Emmet and Sodix counties will soon follow.

That the campaigns in these counties are proving of enormous benefit to the farmers is shown by a report sent in from Cero Gordo county by the seed corn agent there, who reports he has located 100,000 bushels of old corn, which will be sufficient for the whole county if tested and saved.

It has been shown by some 12 year tests at the college that imported seed corn does not give satisfaction. "If seed must be imported, be sure that it comes from the north, east or west and not from the south," warns Mr. Bliss.

THE POOR BABY

They are telling about another fellow who lives less than a mile from the Times Office. Some of the boys had been having a quiet little game, and he didn't get home till about 1 a. m. so he slipped into the house with his shoes in his hand. He tiptoed into the sitting room and switched on the light. Just then he heard a noise in the bedroom. He didn't want to be caught by his wife at that hour. He spied the baby's cradle in the corner and a brilliant thought came to him. He quietly set down his shoes, took off his hat and coat and began rocking the cradle. The missus came into the room.

"Sh!" he whispered. "The baby was fretting when I came in at 10:30 and I've been rocking him for over two hours. Don't wake him!"

"Isn't that strange!" she said, and her tones were villainously sweet. "The baby has been in bed with me all evening—and is there now, sound asleep."

WHAT DID SHE TELL HIM

A young man of one of our neighboring towns called on a young lady for the evening and after arriving could not find words to say. Among the forest resources of Brazil one of considerable value and importance is the fiber "piassava," a product of certain palm trees, which is used in the manufacture of brooms, brushes, ropes, baskets and hats. The trees also produce a very hard nut, called in Portuguese "coquilho," (coquilla), from which excellent buttons are manufactured. The leaves are employed for making fans, and in the country districts, for roofing adobe houses. For making brooms and brushes, especially, no other material is more extensively employed in Brazil, and large quantities are required annually for domestic consumption as well as for exportation to Europe

LeMars, Ia., Jan. 8.—Fire at Craig, 14 miles northwest of here, destroyed two business houses Wednesday night. The first broke out in the Craig pharmacy, supposedly from an overheated stove, and spread to the German Savings bank, adjoining. The drug store building was valued at $1,500 and the stock, owned by N. W Haskill, at $1,800 Both were a total loss. The books and papers were saved from the bank building which was burned to the ground. It was valued at $1,000. The losses are partly covered by insurance. The Eilers garage caught fire several time but the damage to that building was slight

The farmhouse of J. J Hickey, two miles north of here, was destroyed by fire Mrs. Hickey was at home with two litle children, Mr Hickey having gone to town with produce The house was totally destroyed and the family lost nearly all their furniture and clothing The estimated loss is $3,500, with $1,400 insurance. Whitley of this city, president of the Iowa State Federation of Women's clubs, has started a movement to place the endorsement of 17,000 Iowa club women on a bill to be presented in the United States Senate by Senator W. S. Kenyon, of Iowa, for the preservation of the natural scenery in northeast Iowa along the Mississippi river about the town of McGregor

Senator Kenyon writes Mrs. Whitley that the endorsement of Iowa club women will give the greatest possible encouragement to his bill. Mrs. Whitley has laid plans to present this matter in each one of the 11 district meetings of the federated clubs in Iowa. She has created a special committee on the conservation of Iowa's natural scenery, of which Mrs. Charles M. McNeider, of Mason City, is the chairman

Every federated club in the state is being asked to endorse the Kenyon bill and to also write the congressman from its district. The plan is to create public sentiment favorable to the bill and to spread some knowledged of the real value of the natural scenery within the proposed park said by many who know to be the equal of much of the best known scenery in famed Switzerland The bluffs along the river are high and rugged and the landscape in general among the most magnificent in America It is on the highest bluff near McGregor that Colonel Pike an early explorer first raised the stars and stripes in Iowa

COUNTY FARM IS LOSER; NEW SYSTEM LAUNCHED

Atalntic, Ia., Jan 8.—The Cass county board of supervisors at its session yesterday voted to cease operation of the county farm as a general farming proposition and operate it henceforth as a dairy farm The board will sell the present equipment and stock on the place and will advertise for bids on the work of managing the farm as a dairy farm. For a great many years the county farm has been a financial loss to Cass county and there have been many people who have favored selling it, so the board decided upon this method as one way to try and solve the problem.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY BOARD CHANGES SUPERVISOR DISTRICTS

LeMars, Ia., Jan. 7.—At its meeting this week the Plymouth county board of supervisors rearranged the supervisor districts, the change to become effective at the next election. The change now blocks off the districts in compact groups of six townships except in the northeastern part, where LeMars and America townships are a separate district Under the present system the districts are somewhat out of proportion. They were made years ago under the "Gerrymander" system.

DESERTED WIFE SUES PARENTS OF HUSBAND FOR $10,000 DAMAGES

Alleged They Induced Abandonment By False Statements and Communications.

Nevada, Ia., Jan. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. William B. Frey, of Ames, have been sued by Mrs. Fannie E. Frey, wife of their son, S. B. Frey, for the sum of $10,000, which she claims is justly due her from the defendants because of their alleged influence upon her husband in which they have caused him to abandon his wife and child and leave them without a home or means of support.

In her petition, which was filed by her attorney, the latter part of the week, she states that she was married to S. B. Frey, the only son of the defendants, on May 10, 1911, and that they lived together in peace and happiness for some time, one child being born to them

She alleges that he was urged to leave her and through false and defamatory communications of slanderous matter, maliciously made by them, he was influenced against her. That such matter excited his hatred toward her and caused her abandonment. She further states that they threatened to disinherit their son should he continue to live with her, causing him to abandon her and her child and leave them at the mercy of friends, destitute and without a home and with no means of support.

She states further that at the time of their marriage her husband was the owner of a quarter section of land in Milford township and that by misrepresentation the wrongfully and unlawfully secured legal title to the land; that he has absconded and that while they are acquainted with his whereabouts they conceal them, and she has no way of communicating with him. Her husband is easily influenced by his people, she alleges, and that they have branded her as unfit to live with him and should he continue to do so they refuse him admission to their home.

SUIT INSTITUTED TO TEST BOOZE DELIVERIES

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 8.—John B. Hammond, vice crusader, today filed suit in district court for an injunction to prevent the American Express company from shipping liquor into Iowa from "wet" states. The action is a test case begun when a local detective bought four quarts of whisky in answer to a circular letter from Henry Miller of Omaha. The liquor was delivered by the express company

Hammond claims both the solicitation and delivery were illegal

KENYON SUPPORTS MOVE FOR IOWA NATIONAL PARK

Ames, Ia Jan 8 Senator Kenyon has pledged his support to the movement by prominent and influential Iowans to have the national government acquire land near McGregor along the Mississippi river and establish a national park, where the people of Iowa and adjacent states can enjoy and show to tourists some of the beautiful riparian scenery of east Iowa

Dr. L. H Pammel, chief botanist of Iowa State college, one of the prime boosters of the Iowa national park idea, declares "There is scenery along this part of the Mississippi that is equal to any that may be found on either the beauty-famed Hudson or even the Rhine."

The present tract under consideration for the national park is about 2,000 acres south of McGregor.

WOMAN MAKES RUSH TRIP AND PREVENTS WEDDING

Des Moines, Ia., Jan 8.—When Mrs. Genevieve Gregory, wife of Roy Gregory, a traveling salesman residing at 1013 Twenty-first street, learned yesterday afternoon that her daughter, Genevieve, a student in high school, was about to wed Carleton Pyle, son of Henry Pyle, well known insurance man, Mrs. Gregory procured an automobile and after a wild ride to the courthouse, arrived there in time to prevent the clerk from issuing the license.

Mrs. Gregory blocked the wedding of her daughter by swearing to an affidavit that she is only 17 years old.

When the irate mother arrived at the courthouse, the groom-to-be and his father were standing at the clerk's desk demanding the license Both insisted that the prospective bride was 18 years old

HEAVY USE OF SERUM SAVES SMALL CHILD FROM LOCKJAW

Council Bluffs, Ia., Jan 8.—A case wherein a child under 3 years of age was administered 66,000 units of tetanus antitoxin serum is interesting the medical fraternity of this section The child, a daughter of Mr and Mrs. Henry Deitchler, jr., of Mineola, Ia. was in convulsions when the physician was called Two other physicians called in consultation agreed that the serum use was the only thing that would save the girl's life A large quantity of the serum was secured from Council Bluffs and used with good effect but it was not sufficient to effect a cure and there was a lapse in the treatment while another supply was being secured by messenger. The convulsions returned, but finally became less and less frequent and less severe, until after four days' treatment the little girl was declared out of danger and is now able to sit up in bed

LITTLE PROSPECT OF IOWA CHECKING RAISE IN PASSENGER RATES

Authority From Interstate Commerce Commission Cannot Be Overturned.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 7.—While the state department of justice has not reached a definite conclusion, the attorneys have begun to lose hope that the state of Iowa will be able to prevent the railroads putting the 2.4 cents per mile interestate passenger rate into effect in this territory. The roads have not yet announced when the tariffs providing for the increased rates will be ready for filing.

The Interstate Commerce commission authorized the railroads to increase the interstate passenger fare from 2 cents to 2.4 cents per mile. Clifford Thorne, chairman of the Iowa railroad commission, called a conference at Omaha a few weeks ago of the attorneys general and railroad commissioners of Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, North Dakota and South Dakota and Oklahoma.

He urged that the states file action in the federal courts asking for an injunctin to prevent the roads from raising the passenger fares.

The Iowa department of justice has been making a careful investigation, and is inclined to believe that there is no ground on which the state of Iowa can start action against the railroads to enjoin the rates. The attorneys say that the law gives the interstate commerce commission power to make passenger and freight rates and does not provide for an appeal to the courts from the decision of the commission.

It is pointed out that a railroad can go into the federal court to ask for an injunction to prevent a rate from going into effect, on the ground that the rate is confiscatory and, therefore, contrary to the constitution.

The attorneys, however, say that the state cannot go into the federal court to ask for an injunction against a rate, after the Interstate Commerce commission, having absolute power, has fixed the schedule. The state cannot claim confiscation, they say.

The department of justice has not yet given up the search for points which might sustain the action proposed by the railroad commission, but so far the attorneys have met with no success.

Unless something develops, there will be no action by the state, it was reported at the state house yesterday. Outside attorneys who have looked into the matter are reporting that they found nothing in the law which would sustain the proposed action

The increased interstate passenger rates will add a burden of $2,000,000 annually to the traveling public of Iowa.

After the railroads put the 2.4 cents rate into effect, they are expected to ask the Interstate Commerce commission to increase the intrastate passenger fares to correspond with the interstate rates. This would add another $2,000,000 burden to the travelers of Iowa

RELATIVES NOT SATISFIED WITH SUICIDE VERDICT

Shenandoah, Ia., Jan 7.—Alex McNerny, prosperous farmer, was found dead in a small creek here, a bullet wound in his throat. The coroner's jury held he had committed suicide.

McNerny, 54 years old and single called his brother Robert to his home and talked with him a few minutes. Then he left the house and soon afterward a revolver shot was heard. When the brother went to investigate he found the barn on McNerny's place in flames and supposed that McNerny's body was in the flaming building

McNerny lived with his aged mother, who is near death as a result of the death of her son He was a sort of recluse, and though he lived within two miles of Coin is said not to have been in that town for the last seven years.

Relatives are not wholly satisfied that he came to his death through suicide and an investigation is being made

CONSUL M'NEELY'S FIANCE IS RESIDENT OF IOWA

West Liberty, Ia., Jan. 7.—There is one Iowa girl, with a breaking heart but a hope that will not die, who is watching every bulletin that records the list of dead on the English liner Persia, torpedoed in the Mediterranean sea She is Miss Wilma Whitacre, of West Liberty, and the name that she fears will be contained in the lists of killed is that of Robert N McNeely, United States consul to Aden and her fiance

Miss Whitacre is now at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Whitacre here. She has received several messages from the state department at Washington since the sinking of the Persia, but none of these bore any favorable news.

GRINNELL COLLEGE GETS $150,000 FROM KANSAS CITY

Grinnell, Ia., Jan 7.—A gift of $150,000 worth of Kansas City property was made to Grinnell college by Dr. Leroy Dibble, prominent Kansas City physician.

Dr Dibble's wife, then Martha Cleveland was a graduate of Grinnell college in the class of 1867

The bulk of Dr Dibble's estate, probably $250,000 in all, will also go to Grinnell, the doctor stated upon his death, and that of Mrs. Dibble, the money will go toward the establishment of what will be known as the Dibble foundation.

LITTLE AUBURN GIRL PLAYS HEROINE ROLE; SAVES FRIEND

Auburn, Ia., Jan. 7.—Laverne M. Impson, 6 years old, yesterday afternoon saved the life of her 7-year-old playmate, Clayton Brooks, when he plunged through the weak ice on the Coon river here. The little girl crawled out upon the quivering ice and grasped one of the boy's hands. She aided him until he could get a grip upon firmer ice and pull himself to safety.

CEDAR RAPIDS—Prof. "Bob" Black, well known over Iowa as a phrenologist, is dead at his home in Vinton. For many years he made regular trips to Iowa towns, examining heads. He had the distinction of reading the heads of Grover Cleveland, Chauncey Depew, W. J. Bryan and Senators Cummins and Kenyon. He was born in Ohio in 1860 and had made Vinton his home practically all of his life.

GERMANY OFFERS TO SETTLE LUSITANIA CLAIMS AND PUT CURB ON HER SUBMARINES

Berlin Submits New Proposal to Settle Dispute With United United States and Also Agrees to Stop U-Boats From Torpedoing All Privately Owned Steamers, Whether Engaged in Passenger or Freight Traffic Before Proper Warning Is Given Those on Board.

CASE OF PERSIA MAY NEVER BE CLEARED UP

Cabinet Meeting Today Fails to Take Up Latest Crisis—American Diplomatic Representatives Unable to Confirm That Liner Was Torpedoed, Though It Is Stated She Had No Warning of Disaster—High Officials Fear Continued Loss Will Cause Break.

Washington, Jan. 7.—Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, presented to Secretary Lansing today a proposal to pay indemnity for Americans lost in the Lusitania disaster and thereby conclude that controversy and give assurances that any German submarines in the Mediterranean would not attack noncombatant ships without warning or destroy them without opportunity for noncombatants to reach a place of safety.

While offering to pay indemnity in the Lusitania case, Germany makes the reservation that it is done without admission of wrongdoing. No official indication was given as to the acceptability of the proposal, but one set of American officials took the view that it would end the controversy.

The assurances regarding submarine warfare in the Mediterranean are of broader scope than those given after the Arabic disaster and covering the warfare in the North sea. The latter guaranteed only the safety of liners. Those for the Mediterranean cover all noncombatant ships.

Secretary Lansing said he expected to confer with Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, late today over the Lusitania negotiations. An early settlement has been indicated.

It was also stated with authority today that Germany virtually had agreed with the position of the United States in regard to small boats not being under all conditions a place of safety for passengers aboard a ship about to be destroyed. These last concessions are understood to have been contained in the last note from Germany regarding the sinking of the ship William P. Frye.

The communication reached the state department several weeks ago, but has been withheld from publication on the ground that it had certain bearing upon the Lusitania negotiations. Germany is understood to have fully agreed with the American point of view

The assurances regarding the conduct of submarine warfare in the Mediterranean convey the first information that German submarines were operating there. In excluding all ships except liners from the assurances covering submarine warfare in the North sea, the German government was represented as considering that no Americans could possibly be aboard ships other than liners in regular passenger carrying service.

It has been known for some time that Count von Bernstorff had devised a plan which he believed would satisfactorily end the Lusitania controversy. He is understood to have submitted the proposition to the Berlin officials before Christmas. There was some delay because of adverse sentiment created by the request of the dismissal of the German naval and military attaches, and the demands in the first American note to Austria Hungary on the sinking of the Italian liner, Ancona.

As for the disavowal asked by the United States the German government was represented as considering the most effective form of disavowal was assurances that such acts should not be committed in the future. The assurances regarding the conduct of the German submarine in the Mediterranean were understood to be identical with those contained in Austria's reply to the last American note on the Ancona.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7.—The submarine crisis, still uncertain in status because of lack of details, was placed by President Wilson before the cabinet today in its first meeting since his return from Hot Springs, Va. The Senate foreign relations committee also met to consider the situation, but as Senator Stone was detained at the White House, adjourned without action.

Although more than a week has passed since the steamship Persia was sunk in the Mediterranean with the loss of American life, officials today were still uninformed as to whether the vessel was torpedoed, and if so, the nationality of the submarine. Developments today continued to indicate that the American government would withhold action pending official advices determining these points.

No New Facts.

Overnight developments included the receipt of dispatches from Ambassador Penfield at Vienna, asserting that the Austrian government was without information concerning the incident up to the night of January 4, and from Consul Garrels at Alexandria, Egypt, stating that he had obtained affidavits from 21 survivors and that all confirmed previous statements "that no warning was given and no vessel was seen."

Ambassador Penfield's dispatch added that Baron Burian, the Austrian foreign minister, has asked what information concerning the incident was in possession of the United States.

Officers and crew of the Persia, Consul Garrels reported, have left Alexandria for England. Their affidavits will be sought upon their arrival there.

May Never Get Truth.

As the cabinet assembled, it was made plain that the members agreed with the president that in the case of the Persia nothing could be done until all the facts were at hand. Some members expressed the opinion that it might never be learned whether the Persia was sunk by a submarine and if so, what nation was responsible.

Regardless of the outcome of the case, the majority of the members are represented as believing that the time has come for making certain that no further attacks on merchant ships carrying Americans will be made.

The administration leaders are said to feel that continued loss of American lives will lead the United States into hostilities.

The Persia incident was taken up only briefly at the cabinet meeting because Secretary Lansing had no definite recommendations to make in the absence of specific facts regarding the sinking of the ship.

All cabinet members said the mention of the foreign situation at the meeting was "only superficial."

State department officials had hoped that inquiries of the Vienna foreign office would result in information which might clear up the doubt regarding the circumstances of the disaster.

It was considered still possible that the Austro-Hungarian government might obtain the desired information later as a submarine operating where the Persia was sunk, might have been so far from its base that its commander would be unable to report promptly.

It was disclosed today after the official text of Austria's reply to the second American note in the Ancona case had been made public, that no response would be made until the facts in the case of the Persia are cleared up or it is found impossible to do so.

Consul Garrels, at Alexandria, Egypt, today advised the state department that he had secured affidavits from 21 survivors of the Persia, including Charles H. Grant, an American citizen, and that all confirmed previous statements that no warning was given, and that no vessel was seen.

The Austro-Hungarian government, until yesterday, was without information concerning the sinking of the Persia, according to a dispatch received today by the state department from Ambassador Penfield at Vienna.

Ambassador Penfield's dispatch was dated yesterday and contained only informal information in response to his inquiry as to whether the Austro-Hungarian government had knowledge of the sinking of the Persia, and if so what the circumstances were.

Officers and crew of the Persia, Consul Garrels advised, have left Alexandria for England, where their affidavits probably will be obtained on arrival.

Consul Garrels had been instructed to forward summaries of the affidavits he has obtained

ATTACKS GERMANS IN HOUSE; FLAYED

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7.—Representative Gardner was vigorously assailed today in the House by two republican colleagues, Stafford and Cooper, of Wisconsin, when he made a speech criticising German-Americans and the German nation.

"The remarks we have just heard were as violent as would have been made in the British parliament," shouted Mr. Cooper, who is the ranking member of the foreign relations committee.

In an impassioned address Mr. Stafford declared Mr. Gardner to be "more British than American," criticising him for the nature of his remarks, "when every member should weigh his words carefully," and strongly defended German-Americans. Mr. Stafford took particular exception to the declaration that German-Americans were destroying American ammunition factories with their "gold and dynamite."

"Those charges cannot be made against the 8,000,000 German-Americans who are in this country," he declared. "I am not advocating the German cause, but I know that in my own districts munitions factories surrounded by thousands of German-Americans are running daily, without interference. I therefore rise to resent this baseless charge, which is unworthy of any man."

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7.—Representative Gardner, republican, made a long prepared speech in the House today on the war conditions involving the United States. He approved the administration's stand that it would be unneutral to put an embargo on war munitions, and declared that a peace in Europe now would be inconclusive and would mean another war. He assailed the pacifists, the hyphenated Americans and the cotton interests.

MARK AT LOW PRICE.

Berne, Switzerland, Jan. 4, (delayed).—German exchange touched the lowest point reached since the beginning of the war today when the mark was quoted at 92 centimes.

BRITISH COMMONS PASS COMPULSION BILL; DEFY LABOR

House of Commons By Majority of 298 Adopts Compulsion Measure on First Reading, 403 to 105.

LABOR MINISTERS RESIGN

Britain Fears Premier Asquith Will Be Compelled to Go Through Ordeal of General Election.

London, Jan. 7.—There seems little doubt that a general election will be the very last measure resorted to by the government to obtain the desired consent "to the establishment of the attenuated form of compulsion provided for in the military service bill." That such consent would be obtained by an appeal to the country was admitted by virtually every one, but the belief is expressed in many quarters that it can be won without such an upheaval. The Westminster Gazette emphasizes the fact that only 45 members of the house of commons representing constituencies in Great Britain which is alone affected by the bill, opposed the measure.

London, Jan. 8.—The British house of commons, by a vote of 403 to 105, a majority of 298, has passed the first reading of Premier Asquith's conscription bill, under which the single men of military age and widowers without children dependants, may be drafted into the army. But the coalition cabinet has been smashed in the process and the government faces the probability of a general election.

The vote which seems to presage the passage of the bill came despite the antagonism against it as shown by the labor committee, which yesterday, by a vote of 1,998,000 to 783,000, demanded the withdrawal of the compulsory service bill. More than 1,000 delegates, representing 400 unions and 3,000,000 workers, attended the congress.

Three Cabinet Members Out.

The first net result of the stand of the laborites was to force the resignation from the coalition cabinet of the labor party members, Arthur Henderson, president of the board of education; William Brace, under secretary for home affairs, and George H. Roberts, lord commissioner of the treasury. An analysis of the vote showed that the government had held the great bulk of liberal and conservative votes. The Irish nationalists had voted against the bill, but the Irish unionists supported the bill, and the O'Brienites took no part in the division. The compulsion bill was supported by about half of the 35 labor party members of parliament, despite instructions.

The minority showed a sprinkling of liberal members, the most noteworthy being John Burns, the former cabinet member. A number of labor members also voted with the opposition.

Fear General Election.

The question on every tongue at the political rendezvous clubs today was whether the momentous events of the day had brought an election in sight. An appeal to the country and a break up of both the coalition government and the labor party are contingencies of the near future and while the government has secured what in ordinary circumstances would be regarded as a satisfactory majority, 298, on the bill, the defection of a large section of the labor party, with the loss of four members of the government, admittedly places the government in a critical position, and many doubts are expressed that it will succeed in weathering the storm.

No cabinet council has yet been summoned and a majority of the members of the house of commons are adverse to a general election, but an appeal to the country may come about in either of two ways. First, the house of lords, should, without the consent of the government, bring the life of the parliament to an end by simply declining to proceed with the parliament and reg-istration bill, which prolongs the life of the parliament eight months. On the other hand, it may still be found that Reginald McKenna, chancellor of the exchequer, and Walter Runciman, president of the board of trade, are quitting the cabinet, though nothing yet is known of their position, in which case it would not be improbable that the government would seek an exit from their difficulties by resigning and appealing to the country.

RECIPIENT RIOTING BY STEEL STRIKERS

Loyal Workers Not Permitted to Enter Plant—Stoned and Driven Away.

Youngstown, Ohio, Jan. 7.—Incipient rioting occurred here last night and early today in connection with the strike at the plant of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube company in East Youngstown, Ohio. One man was injured.

The strike forces had grown today to 8,000. There are 9,000 employed at the plant. Strike pickets during the night and early today refused to permit workmen to enter the plant. Those who attempted it were greeted with showers of cobblestones, bricks and clubs.

Street cars were stopped, workmen on board dragged off, placed on cars going in opposite directions, and driven away. Stones were thrown through many car windows.

WILL DELAY PLACING SUGAR ON FREE LIST

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7.—The first legislative step in the administration plan to postpone placing sugar on the free list, was taken today in the introduction of a joint resolution by Senator Broussard, democrat, of Louisiana, providing for the suspension of the tariff law provision which would admit sugar without duty May 1 next. The resolution went to the Senate finance committee.

VERDICT NEAR IN NEW HAVEN CASES

Eleven Former Directors of Looted Railroad Expect to Know Their Fate Late Today.

New York, Jan. 8.—The case against William Rockefeller and 10 other former directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, charged with commercial conspiracy under the Sherman law, was submitted to the jury today.

New York, Jan. 8.—The 11 former directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad who have been on trial for nearly three months, charged with combined violation of the Sherman antitrust law, expect to know their fate today.

All that remained before the final submission of the case to the jury was the delivery this forenoon of Judge Hunt's charge. This was expected to occupy at least two hours.

The 11 defendants are William Rockefeller and Lewis Case Ledyard, New York; Edward D. Robbins, New Haven, Conn.; Charles F. Brocker, Ansonia, Conn.; D. Newton Barney, Hartford, Conn.; Robert W. Taft, Providence, R. I.; Charles M. Pratt, Brooklyn; Henry K. McHarg, Stamford, Conn.; James S. Hemingway, A. Seaton Roberts and Frederick Brewster, New Haven, Conn.

They were specifically charged with conspiring to monopolize the entire transportation traffic of New England. Indicted in February, 1915, after an investigation by the department of justice, begun more than a year previous, they were put on trial October 13.

William Rockefeller was the only defendant not in court when Judge Hunt began his remarks. The charge against the defendants being a misdemeanor, his presence was not legally required.

The court, after describing the indictment, first instructed the jury that the case would be considered without regard to any testimony that would indicate "any attempts to influence legislation by bribery or corrupt means." The indictment contained no such charge, he said.

Discussing the Sherman act, he said that it did not prescribe a limit to acquisitions and that large enterprises may in a certain sense be permitted to monopolize commerce. Magnitude of business was not in itself a violation of a law.

"The criminal act," he said, "is in conspiring to restrain freedom of action and unduly restricting or suppressing competition."

The first question for the jury to decide, he said, was whether "back in 1890, or thereabouts, there existed a conspiracy to monopolize commerce. If the government does not satisfy you that a conspiracy existed at that time, then the whole case of the government fails."

Judge Hunt explained that the alleged conspiracy must have been a continuous one from 1890 into the three-year period covered by the statute of limitations.

The court held also that the charge could not be sustained unless the jury was satisfied that the defendants or any of them intended to enter an illegal combination.

The sound lines agreement of 1886, the court characterized as "obnoxious to the Sherman law" and said that it was for the jury to consider whether it was kept in force after 1890 in furtherance of the conspiracy. Discussing the testimony of Mr. Mellen, Judge Hunt said he had thought there would be no serious challenge as to the accuracy of his statements that the only dispute among counsel would arise from the inference to be drawn from them

GREAT OFFENSIVE IS LESS VIOLENT

Russians Apparently Slackening, But London Claims Their Advance Has Upset the Plans For Egypt.

London, Jan. 8.—According to official advices from Vienna, the fighting on the eastern front has decreased in violence, the Russians having ceased to attack with vigor between the Pripet and Bessarabian frontier

The only gain officially announced for the Russians yesterday was at Czartorysk, the scene of many sanguinary struggles, where it is said the Austrians were driven from the cemetery.

Any advance in this region will threaten Kovel, one of the strongest Austro-German positions. It is believed that even though no further gain should be made, Russian forces have attained a position which will give the nation a degree of power in Balkan affairs, it has not had since its armies were driven back from the Carpathians.

Austria Strengthens Line.

Although the situation around Czernowitz has not yet been cleared up officially, it appears from advices from Russian sources that the Austrians are hard pressed over a long line of defense and are throwing huge reinforcements into the district. The Russians here are expected to strike at the Kolomea-Stanislau-Halicz line, where powerful defensive works have been in preparation for some time by the Austro-Germans.

Meanwhile, the Russian position, 250 miles further north on the middle Styr river has been greatly strengthened by successful operations in the region of the great marshes, where the Russians are beginning to emerge from the marshes with prospects of being able to use the roads leading either northwest or southwest. Their advance here has not been the result of an isolated battle, but a series of engagements lasting over a considerable period. In the capitals of the entente allies the opinion is expressed that the Russian offensive has completely upset the plans of the central powers for an invasion of Saloniki and Egypt.

Turks May Attack.

The Teutonic allies still threaten to expel the French and British from their Macedonian positions, but no forward move has yet been detected thus far in that direction. Strong Turkish forces are said to be concentrating on the Thracian frontier of Greece, and it is suggested that the Turks may attempt to make good some of the territorial losses they suffered during the Balkan war.

The British public is still concerned chiefly with the cabinet crisis. Notwithstanding the heavy majority for the compulsion bill on first reading in the house of commons, the press is speculating on the possibility of a break up of the political truce, with a general election as the final chapter of the controversy.

TWO MORE SHIPS ARE ADDED TO U. S. FLEET

Galveston, Tex., Jan. 7.—Purchase of two steamships for service between Galveston and the Mexican ports of Tampico, Vera Cruz and Puerto Mexico, was announced today by the Gulf Coast Fruit & Steamship company. The ships are the Norwegian steamers Fort Gains and Fort Morgan. The new owners will change the ships to American registry.

Prospects for increased trade in Mexico prompted the company to purchase its own steamers.

BRITISH SUBMARINE SINKS; CREW SAVED

London, Jan. 8.—The sinking of a British submarine off the coast of Holland was officially announced this morning. The crew was saved.

The admiralty statement says that the submarine, the name of which is not given, was sunk yesterday of the island of Texel, the largest and most southwesterly of the Frisian group. The entire crew, numbering 33, was rescued by the Dutch cruiser Noord Brabant and brought into the Dutch port of Helder.

LATIN DELEGATES LIKE WILSON IDEA

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—President Wilson's address before the Pan-American scientific congress last night in which he outlined the government's plan for a Pan-American alliance guaranteeing absolute political independence and territorial integrity, was favorably commented on by delegates today.

The United States proposes, the president said, that all the American nations shall agree to settle all pending boundary disputes as soon as possible by amicable process and to dispose of all disputes in the future by arbitration. Furthermore, all countries under the plan would agree that no revolutionary expedition shall be outfitted against or supplies for revolutionists shipped to neighboring states.

Announcement of the selection of Lima, Peru, as the meeting place of the next congress in 1921 was regarded by the delegates as an evidence of the desire for closer relations among the American republics.

Sessions of the various sections of the congress today were brief. The congress will close tomorrow with a joint meeting, when resolutions and suggestions evolved in sectional meetings will be taken up

Sees Closer Relations.

After expressing regret at his inability to be present to greet the congress at its opening session, the president said:

"I have been told so much about the proceedings of this congress that I feel that I can congratulate you upon the increasing senses of comradeship and intimate intercourse which has marked its sessions from day to day, and it is a very happy circumstance in our view that this, perhaps the most vital and successful of the meetings of this congress, should have occurred in the capital of our own country, because we should wish to regard this as the universal place where ideas worth while are exchanged and shared. The drawing together of the Americas, ladies and gentlemen, has long been dreamed of and desired It is a matter of peculiar gratification, therefore, to see this great thing happen; to see the Americas drawing together and not drawing together upon any insubstantial foundation or mechanicsm.

"After all, even friendship must be based upon a perception of common sympathy of common interests, of common ideals, and of common purposes. Men cannot be friends unless they intend the same things, and the Americas have more and more realized that in all essential particulars they intend the same thing with regard to their thought and their life, and their activities. To be privileged, therefore, to see this drawing together in friendship and communion based upon these solid foundations, affords every one who looks on with open eyes peculiar satisfaction and joy, and it has seemed to me that the language of science, the language of impersonal thought, the language of those who think, not along the lines of individual interest, but along what are intended to be the direct and searching lines of truth itself, and a very fortunate language in which to express this community of interest and sympathy.

GERMANY TO IMPORT REINDEER FOR FOOD

Fixing of Maximum Prices Causes Reduction In Cost of Living.

Berlin, (via London), Jan. 7—Figures just published in the German capital show that the cost of living scored a reduction in the month of November. That month was the first since September, 1914, to show a decrease in prices generally and the reduction was caused chiefly by fixing maximum prices for pork and butter.

Although the latest market reports show a marked drop in cattle prices, the government is taking steps to enlarge the meat supplies. It was announced today that the imperial chancellor has consented to the importation of reindeer meat in whole carcasses, waiving the existing requirements that the heads must be attached.

A method of economizing in beef also has been introduced. It consists of mixing chopped beef with dried codfish, the codfish being so treated as to lose its fish taste.

Cattle and wholesale beef prices showed a big fall in Berlin in the final week of the year of from four to 14 marks for 110 pounds but retail prices mostly are still rising.

TAFT WILL BE ASKED TO ADDRESS IOWA EDITORS

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 7.—Messrs. Junkin, of Creston; Hull, of Leon, and Caswell, of Denison, are here today arranging a program for the Iowa Press association meeting in Des Moines February 10 and 11. It was decided to ask former President Taft to make the principal speech. The convention will be divided into sections, representing different departments of newspaper work

RUMORED MOOSERS WILL HOLD RIVAL MEET IN CHICAGO

Progressive National Convention May Get Up Steam and Prepare to Act If G. O. P. Misbehaves.

TEDDY WILL BE THERE

Auditorium and 800 Rooms Engaged—Perkins Said to Be the Henry Ford In Case—No Side Show.

New York, Jan. 7.—Next June 7 may witness the spectacle of two rival national political conventions in progress simultaneously at Chicago. Although Colonel Roosevelt denies vigorously that he is a presidential candidate, he has made it pretty clear that unless the republicans nominate somebody he can support he will have nothing to do with their party in the coming campaign.

It is understood that the progressives are planning to hold their convention at the same time the republicans hold theirs, have made all tentative plans and propose to go to Chicago, camp there and watch what transpires in the coliseum, remaining in continuous session and ready to act unless the republicans run things to suit them.

The colonel, if he has his way, will go there, in a sense unattached. He will not go as the candidate for the nomination by either party, but prepared for any emergency, with steam up in the boilers of his own party machinery and ready for an instant start in case the republicans fail to perform according to progressive ideas.

On top of this comes the information that the progressives, led by Geo. W. Perkins, chairman of the executive committee, do not intend to run their convention as a side show to the republican convention, the date of which has been set for June 7. It is now known definitely that the Florentine room and adjoining quarters in the Congress hotel at Chicago have been leased and that the Auditorium has been leased for the progressive convention. Aside from the coliseum, where the republicans will hold forth, the Auditorium is the largest convention hall in Chicago.

Mr Perkins is credited with being the Henry Ford of the party, which may be an error But one report has it that in all not less than 800 rooms will be at the disposal of the progressive convention, an accomplishment which requires sound financial backing.

It is said that much depends upon what action will be taken by the progressive national committee which meets in Chicago January 11 to set the date for the party convention. But unless there is a complete change of mind between now and January 11 the plan will be carried out to hold it in Chicago at the same time the republicans meet there to name their candidate for the presidency So many definite preparations for such an "emergency" have been made already that few doubt the result of the committee meeting

The progressives are to have 750 delegates at their national convention, not to mention cheering sections, bands and other paraphernalia to worry the republicans. The scenes in the Florentine room when Colonel Roosevelt fought for the republican nomination in 1912, are to be outdone. With Colonel Roosevelt as an "observer," the "big show" should prove an interesting attraction.

What will come of these specular doings and whether they will all end in the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt by the republicans, or a compromise nominee whom the progressives might see fit to support is a question political leaders of all parties are asking.

ASKS INVESTIGATION OF MAIL INTERFERENCE

Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, Calls For Information on Subject.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Investigation of foreign interference with United States mails on the high seas, or en route to destinations, is contemplated in a resolution introduced today by Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, calling upon Postmaster General Burleson to supply the Senate with all information in his possession bearing on the subject. The resolution was referred to the postal committee.

WHITE HOUSE SOCIAL SEASON OPENS TONIGHT

Washington, D. C., Jan. 7.—The White House social season will open tonight with a reception in honor of the delegates to the Pan-American scientific congress. More than 4,000 invitations have been issued and hundreds have been refused. The president and Mrs. Wilson will receive together in the blue room, assisted by members of the cabinet and their wives. The reception will be the first appearance of Mrs. Wilson at an affair of the kind.

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN EXCHANGE AT LOW EBB

New York, Jan. 7.—Further depreciation of German and Austrian exchange to new low records occurred yesterday, demand remittances to Berlin declining to 73½ cents and kronen to 12½ cents. This reduces the local value of the German mark, ordinarily quoted at 23¾ cents to 18¾ cents.

HOSPITAL FOR DOGS.

Berlin, Jan. 7, (by wireless to Sayville).—The dogs of army hospital service have had a hospital provided for them in Jena and already a number of dog patients have been treated there for wounds and various ailments The hospital was built by convalescent soldiers.

HAD NO REASON TO WORRY

Seeing That Jury Paid No Heed to Prosecutor's Remarks, Why Should the Defendant?

Claris Adams, deputy prosecuting attorney of Marion county, tells of the misgivings he had as he met for the first time after the trial a man whom it had been his official duty to try to send to the penitentiary. The crime charged was of the sort that gave the attorney abundant opportunity to score the defendant, and Adams accordingly "trimmed him up right" The defendant was lawless, murderous, bloodthirsty, as devoid of pity as the pirates of the Spanish main, and altogether lacking in every redeeming quality, according to the speech that was made, but despite these distressing facts the jury acquitted him.

The next day Adams met the defendant, now discharged and restored to full rights of citizenship. The latter approached Adams with a smile and extended his hand.

"Young man, I'm for you," he said.

"I am glad to hear you say that," responded Adams with a sigh of relief. "I thought you might take to heart some of the things I said about you."

"No," came the cheerful reply, "the jury did not pay any attention to them, so I don't see why I should."—Indianapolis News.

In Memoriam.

"Phwat does that mean?" Mike inquired.

"Now," says Gildersleeve, "Pat did not know, but he would not betray his ignorance. With true Irish aplomb he rose to the situation.

"Yer ignorance is horrible," he told Mike. "Take off your hat to the dead. Sure, his name was Miles, he was 42 years old, he lived in Baltimore, and they buried him where he was kilt."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Sorry He Spoke.

A senior of one of our large manufacturing concerns came through the store and noticed a boy sitting on a counter swinging his legs and whistling merrily. The senior eyed him severely, as he confronted him, and inquired: "Is that all you have to do?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very well; report to the cashier and tell him to pay you off. We don't need boys like you around here."

"But, sir," said the astonished boy, "I don't work for you. I have just bought some goods and am waiting for the bill."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Rather Discouraging.

"Well, Twobble, how are you getting along in politics?"

"Can't say that I'm making much progress."

"No?"

"I've climbed into half a dozen political bandwagons and every one of them broke down before I'd traveled far enough to reach an office."

Different From Her Ma.

PUZZLED

Hard, Sometimes, to Raise Children.

Children's taste is ofttimes more accurate, in selecting the right kind of food to fit the body, than that of adults. Nature works more accurately through the children.

A Brooklyn lady says: "Our little boy had long been troubled with weak digestion. We could never persuade him to take more than one taste of any kind of cereal food. He was a weak little chap and we were puzzled to know what to feed him on.

"One lucky day we tried Grape-Nuts. Well, you never saw a child eat with such a relish, and it did me good to see him. From that day on it seemed as though we could almost see him grow. He would eat Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper, and I think he would have liked the food for dinner.

"The difference in his appearance is something wonderful.

"My husband had never fancied cereal foods of any kind, but he became very fond of Grape-Nuts and has been much improved in health since using it.

"We are now a healthy family and naturally believe in Grape-Nuts.

"A friend has two children who were formerly afflicted with rickets. I was satisfied that the disease was caused by lack of proper nourishment. The children showed it. So I urged her to use Grape-Nuts as an experiment and the result was almost magical.

"They continued the food and today both children are as well and strong as any children in this city, and, of course, my friend is a firm believer in Grape-Nuts, for she has the evidence before her eyes every day." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become … in the tissues clogged … trouble, bladder … a general decline in health. When your kidneys feel like lumps of … your back hurts or the urine … obliged to seek relief two or three times … the night, if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid … or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by taking a good kidney flushing any time.

WESTERN CANADA'S GREAT HARVEST

Decidedly Encouraging From Every Standpoint.

Speaking of conditions generally in Canada, the most encouraging feature of the year from a trade and financial standpoint has been the bountiful harvest of the Northwest, where a greatly increased area under cultivation has given the highest average yield in the history of the country. It is estimated that the grain crop of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta has a market value to the producers of approximately four hundred million dollars, in the use of which we may anticipate not only the liquidation of much indebtedness but the stimulation of current trade.

The annual reports of the various banks throughout Canada are now being published. They savor of optimism all the way through and contrary to what is to be generally expected in war time business is good everywhere.

The General Manager of the Bank of Montreal at the recent annual meeting said: "The position of Canada is a highly favored one with an assured future of growth, development and general prosperity."

In the same report it is said that the Canada West has recovered to a marked extent from the economic dislocation of a year ago.

The season's wheat and other cereal crops have exceeded all previous records in quantity and quality and, despite the enormous yield, prices have been uncommonly well maintained.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of these results to the Prairie Provinces and the Dominion at large.

The prosperity of those engaged in mixed farming and ranching is most encouraging.

The flour mills in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are busy and are doing well. Their combined daily capacity is about 27,000 barrels.

The large advances of the Dominion Government to farmers in certain districts, principally in the form of seed, were made very opportunely and have been amply justified by the very large crop yield in those districts.

Business in many important lines is good and should continue to improve as returns from grain yet to be marketed are received.

The general business outlook has been transformed by the large crop.

The returns of the gross earnings of Canadian railroads for November show those of the Canadian Pacific increased $1,796,000 or 78 per cent for the last nine days of the month. Comparing with the corresponding period last year the increase no less than $5,291,000 or 97½ per cent against a decrease of 6½ per cent in October and a decrease of 11½ per cent in September.

H. V. Meredith in the financial review read at the annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal said that the position of Canada was a highly favored one with an assured future of growth, development and general prosperity.

FRUIT LAXATIVE
FOR SICK CHILD

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a spoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a spoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs" which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Adv.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

"I gathered from what she told me," said Swain, his face flushing with anger, "that she has been practilly a prisoner ever since the yogi arrived. Besides, even if she had succeeded in mailing the letter, it wouldn't have reached me until too late."

"In what way too late?"

"Her father seems to have had a sudden turn for the worse yesterday; he became almost violent in insisting that she consent to his plan. He told her that the life of his own soul, as well as that of hers, depended upon it. He threatened—I don't know what. The yogi talked to her afterwards. He, of course, believed, or pretended to believe, as her father did, moreover, he told her that her father would certainly suffer a serious mental shock if she refused, perhaps a fatal one. In despair, she finally agreed, on the condition that she be given three days in which to prepare herself. If she did not hear from me in that time, she had made up her mind to consent."

Swain stopped again, and I lay back in my chair, wondering if such things were possible in this Twentieth century, here within the boundaries of Greater New York! My brain reeled at the absurdity of it!

"Vaughan was undoubtedly suffering from mania," said Dr. Hinman, in a low voice. "The symptoms, as Mr. Swain describes them, are unmistakable."

"It was that argument I used," said Swain. "I told her that, since he was clearly mad, she must, in self defense, place herself beyond his reach. But she refused to leave him. Then, I argued, in kindness to him she must have him committed to some institution where he would be taken care of, and where he might, in time, regain his sanity. I told her that it would be criminal folly to permit him to remain longer under the influence of the yogi. She had to agree with me; and she finally consented to sign an affidavit to the facts as I have told them, and a petition asking that a commission be appointed to examine her father. You were to have drawn up the papers today, Mr. Lester and I was to have taken them to her for signature tonight."

"That would have settled the matter," said Godfrey, thoughtfully. "It's too bad it wasn't settled in that way. What else happened, Mr Swain?"

"Miss Vaughan had grown very nervous, with all this discussion, and at last she sprang to her feet and said she must go, or her father would discover her absence. We rose to leave the arbor, and at that instant, a white-robbed figure sprang to her side, seized her and tore her away from me. I was too startled for an instant to resist; then, as I started toward them, Marjorie pushed me back

"'Go! Go!' she cried. It is my fault!'

"But he stopped me. In a voice shaking and husky with rage, he warned me that if I entered the place again, my life would be forfeit. I can't repeat the horrible things he said, I could see his eyes gleaming like a wild beast's. He cursed me I had never been cursed before," and Swain smiled thinly, "and I confess it wasn't pleasant. Then he led his daughter away.

"I stood staring after them I didn't know what to do. I felt like a madman myself. I sat down and tried to collect my thoughts. I saw that some new plan must be made—that there was no hope of meeting Marjorie again. I was sick with fear for her; I thought of following to the house and compelling her to come with me at once. And then, suddenly, I saw two eyes gleaming at me. They were not human eyes—they were too close together—and they were swaying gently back and forth in the air, about a foot from the ground. I gazed at them, fascinated, and then I heard a soft, low whistle, followed by a faint hissing as the eyes fell forward.

"In a flash, I knew what it was—the cobra; I knew why it was there—Vaughan had said my life was forfeit. I sprang up with a shriek, dashed along the seat to the door and out into the darkness. I struck my head against something—a tree, I suppose; but I kept on, and reached the wall and got over it somehow—it is all confused, after that. I seem to remember hearing Marjorie scream, and finding her lying beside her father, who was dead—but I can't put things together," and he rubbed his head helplessly.

"I'll put them together for you," said Godfrey. "When you ran into the tree, you suffered a partial concussion. It's lucky it wasn't total, or Toto would have got you!"

"Toto?"

"That, I believe, is the cobra's name," explained Godfrey, with a smile; "unless, of course, there are two of them." And he told Swain in detail of the events which had followed.

Swain listened with staring eyes. I did not blame him. Indeed, I felt that my own eyes were staring a little, though I already knew the story. But Godfrey, with a gift or narration born of long newspaper experience, told it in a way that made its horror salient and left one gasping.

"There is one question I want to ask you, Swain," he said, in conclusion, "and I want you to think carefully before you answer it. During your altercation with Mr. Vaughan, did you at any time touch him?"

"Touch him? No, of course not," and Swain shook his head decidedly.

"You are sure of that?" asked Godfrey earnestly.

"Perfectly sure," said Swain, looking at him in astonishment. "I was never within three feet of him."

"I seem to need a cocktail," he said, in another tone. "Isn't that the prescription for all of us, doctor?"

"Yes," assented Hinman, smiling, "and, after that, complete change of subject!"

CHAPTER XII.

GUESSES AT THE RIDDLE.

We tried to follow Dr. Hinman's prescription, but not with any great success, for it is difficult to talk about one thing and think about another. So the doctor took himself off, before long, and Swain announced that he himself would have to return to the city. He had come out without so much as a tooth brush, he pointed out; his trousers were in a lamentable condition, and, while Godfrey's coat was welcome, it was far from a perfect fit.

Which reminds me," he added, "that I don't know what has become of my own coat and shirt."

I looked at Godfrey quickly

"No, I forgot them," he said. "They are over in the library at Elmhurst," he added to Swain. "You can get them tomorrow."

"I shall have to be there tomorrow, then?"

"Yes, at the inquest; I've promised to produce you there," I said

"At what time?"

"You'd better be there by 10."

"Very well that's all the more reason for getting back to my base of supplies. If I went on the stand looking like this, the jury would probably think I was the murderer!" he added, laughing

My answering smile was decidedly thin Godfrey did not even try to force one.

"Wait a few minutes," he suggested, "and I'll take you down in my car I'll try to get back, Lester," he added apologetically "I'm far from an ideal host—but you'll find some books on my desk that may interest you—I got them up today Take a look at them after dinner"

He went back to bring out his car, and Swain sat down again beside me.

"Mr Lester," he said, in a low voice, "I hope you haven't forgotten your promise."

"What promise?"

"No," I said, "I haven't forgotten. I am going to ask to see her after the inquest tomorrow. If she wishes us to represent her, we will."

"And to protect her," he added quickly. "She hasn't even a mad father now!"

"She's safe enough for the present," I pointed out. "Dr. Hinman has employed another nurse, so that one is with her all the time."

"I won't be satisfied," said Swain, "until you get her out of that house and away from those damned Hindus. One nurse, or even two, wouldn't stop them."

"Stop them from what?"

"I don't know," and he twisted his fingers helplessly.

"Well the police will stop them. There are three or four men on duty there with orders to let no one in or out"

"Ah that's better," he said. "I didn't know that. How long will they be there?"

"Till after the inquest, anyway"

"And you will see Miss Vaughan after the inquest?"

"Yes"

"And urge her to go to Mr and Mrs Royce?"

"Yes—but I don't think she'll need much urging I'll get a note from Mrs. Royce. I'll telephone to Mr Royce now, and you can stop and get the note as you come up in the morning"

"Thank you, Mr Lester," he said; and a moment later the car turned into the highway and passed from sight

Then I went in, got Mr. Royce on the 'phone, and gave him a brief outline of the incidents of the night before. He listened with an exclamation of astonishment from time to time, and assented heartily when I suggested that Miss Vaughan might be placed in Mrs. Royce's care temporarily.

"She's a beautiful girl," I concluded, "and very young. I agree with Swain that she mustn't be left alone in that house."

"Certainly she mustn't," said my partner. "I'll have Mrs. Royce write the note, and get a room ready for her."

"Of course," I said, "it's possible she won't come—though I believe she'll be glad to. Or there may be a family lawyer who will want to look after her. Only she didn't appear to know of any when she was talking to Swain."

"Well, bring her along if you can," said Mr. Royce. "We'll be glad to have her. And take your time about coming back, if you're needed up there. We're getting along all right."

I thanked him, and hung up, and, presently, Mrs. Hargis came to summon me to dinner. That meal over, I went in to Godfrey's desk to see what the books were he had suggested that I look at. There was quite a pile of them, and I saw that they all related to mysticism or to the religions of India. There was Sir Monier Williams' "Brahmanism and Hinduism," Hopkins' "The Religions of India," a work on crystallomancy, Mr. Lloyd Tuckey's standard work on "Hypnotism and Suggestion," and some half dozen others whose titles I have forgotten. And, as I looked at them, I began to understand one reason for Godfrey's success as a solver of mysteries—no detail of a subject ever escaped him.

I lit my pipe, sat down, and was soon deep in the lore of the east. I must confess that I did not make much of it In that maze of superstition, the most I could do was to pick up a thread here and there. The yogi had referred to the White Night of Siva, and I soon found out that Siva is one of the gods of Hinduism—one of a great trilogy—Brahma the creator, Vishnu the preserver, and Siva the destroyer. He had also spoken of the attributes of Kali, and, after a little further search, I discovered that Kali was Siva's wife—a most unprepossessing and fiendish female.

But when I passed on to Hinduism itself, and tried to understand its tenets and its sects, I soon found myself out of my depth. They were so jumbled, so multitudinous, and so diverse that I could get no clear idea of them. I read of the Vedas, the Upanishads, the Brahmanas; of metaphysical abstractions too tenuous to grasp; of karna or action, of maya or illusion, and I know not what "tangled jumble of ghosts and demons, demi-gods, and deified saints, household gods, village gods, tribal gods, universal gods, with their countless shrines and temples, and din of discordant rites." At last, in despair, I gave it up, and turned to the book on crystallomancy.

Here, at least, was something comprehensible, if not altogether believable, and I read with interest of the antiquity of crystal gazing as a means of inducing hallucination for the purpose of seeking information not to be gained by any normal means. I read of its use in China, in Assyria, in Egypt, in Arabia, in India, in Greece and Rome; of how its practitioners in the Middle Ages were looked upon as heretics and burnt at the stake or broken on the wheel; of the famous Dr. Dee, and so down to the present time. The scryers or seers sometimes used mirrors, sometimes vessels filled with water, but usually a polished stone, and beryl was especially esteemed.

The effect of gazing at these intently for a time was to abstract the mind from normal sensory impressions, and to induce a state of partial hypnosis, during which the scryer claimed he could perceive in the crystal dream pictures of great vividness, scenes at a distance, occurrences of the past, and of the future.

I was still deep in this, when I heard a step outside, the door opened, and Godfrey came in. He smiled when he saw what I was doing.

"How have you been getting along?" he asked.

"Not very well," and I threw the book back on the table. "The crystal gazing isn't so bad—one can understand that, but the jumble of abstractions which the Hindus call religion is too much for me. I didn't know it was so late" I added and looked at my watch but it was not yet 11 o'clock

"I'm earlier than usual," said Godfrey I cut loose as soon as I could, because I thought we'd better talk things over I saw Simmonds in town tonight."

"Ah," I said, "and what did he tell you?"

"Nothing I didn't know already The police have discovered nothing new—or, if they have, they're keeping it dark until tomorrow Simmonds did, however regale me with his theory of the case. He says the murder was done either by one of the Hindus or by young Swain."

"What do you think?" I asked

"I'm inclined to agree with Simmonds, said Godfrey grimly With the emphasis on the Hindus, he added, seeing the look on my face I don't believe Swain had any hand in it"

Neither do I," I agreed, heartily In fact such a theory is too absurd to discuss

"Just the same, said Godfrey, slowly, "I'm glad he didn't touch Vaughan If he had happened to seize him by the neck, while they were struggling together—in other words if those finger prints Goldberger found had happened to be Swain's—things would have looked bad for him. I'm hoping they'll turn out to belong to one of the Hindus—but, as I said to Goldberger, I'm afraid that's too good to be true."

"Which one of the Hindus?" I asked.

"Oh, the Thug, of course"

I sat bolt upright.

"The Thug?" I echoed.

"Didn't you get that far?" and Godfrey picked up one of the books and ran rapidly through the pages. "You remember we found him squatting on the floor with a rag and a tooth and a bone in front of him?"

"Yes."

"And do you remember how the yogi described them, when Goldberger asked him about them?"

"Very distinctly—he called them the attributes of Kali."

"Now listen to this 'The Thugs are a religious fraternity, committing murders in honor of Kali, the wife of Siva, who, they believe, assists them and protects them. Legend asserts that she presented her worshipers with three things, the hem of her lower garment to use as a noose, a rib to use as a knife and a tooth to use as a pick-ax in burying the victims.'" He glanced at me, and then went on "But the knife was little used, for the religious character of an assassination came to depend more and more upon its bloodless character and for this a nose was used. The aversion to bloodshed became in time so great that many sects of Thuggee consider it defiling to touch human blood" He closed the book and threw it on the table "Don't you think that proves the case?"

"Yes," I said, thoughtfully "And the yogi is he also a Thug?"

"Oh, no a White Priest of Siva could never be a Thug The worship of Siva and of Kali are the very opposites of each other. The Saivas are ascetics That is," he added, in another tone, if the fellow is really a Saiva, and not just a plain fraud"

"All these fellows are frauds, more or less, aren't they?" I questioned.

"No," was Godfrey's unexpected answer, "the real yogin are no doubt sincere but a real yogi wouldn't waste his time on a soft brained old man, and fire skyrockets off at midnight to impress him. My own opinion is that this fellow is a fakir—a juggler, a sleight of hand man—and, of course, a crook."

"Well?" I asked, as Godfrey stopped and failed to continue.

"Well' that's as far as I've got. Oh, yes—there's Toto. A cobra is one of a fakir's stock properties."

"But, Godfrey," I protested, "he is no ignorant roadside juggler. He's a cultivated man—an unusual man."

"Certainly he is—most unusual. But that doesn't disprove my guess; it only makes the problem harder. Even a roadside juggler doesn't do his tricks for nothing—what reward is it this fellow is working for? It must be a big one, or it wouldn't tempt him."

"I suppose Vaughan paid him well," I ventured.

"Yes, but did you look at him, Lester? You've called him unusual, but that word doesn't begin to express him. He's extraordinary. No doubt Vaughan did pay him well, but it would take something more than that to persuade such a man to spend six months in a place like that. And I think I can guess at the stake he's playing for."

They Who Know.

By Eric Fisher Wood, in the December Century

"Our politicians, in order to protect themselves from the exposure of their numerous administrative blunders, which they naturally commit when they attempt to perform duties for which they are utterly unqualified, have muzzled our officers, and thus the only men who are thoroughly competent to reveal the woeful inefficiencies of our army and navy are forced to keep silence and even compelled to bear the discredit for blunders for which they are in no way responsible, and from which they would protect us if they were allowed freedom of speech. Occasionally their devotion to their country impels them to risk everything and to break through this senseless barrier, thereby injuring the reputations and the political careers of some of our well known 'statesmen.' The recent fate of Admiral Fiske, who, when questioned before the congressional committee, dared to tell unpleasant truths about the present lack of organization in our navy, is the latest warning that indiscreet outbursts of truth and patriotism will promptly result in ruined careers. To muzzle our experts on national safety is almost as ridiculous as it would be to force the Drs. Mayo to keep silent on surgery, or to forbid Edison to speak about electricity."

How to avoid Operations

Hospitals are great and necessary institutions, but they should be the last resort for women who suffer with ills peculiar to their sex. Many letters on file in the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., prove that a great number of women after they have been recommended to submit to an operation have been made well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Here are three such letters. All sick women should read them.

Marinette, Wis.—"I went to the doctor and he told me I must have an operation for a female trouble, and I hated to have it done as I had been married only a short time. I would have terrible pains and my hands and feet were cold all the time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and was cured, and I feel better in every way. I give you permission to publish my name because I am so thankful that I feel well again." —Mrs. Fred Behnke, Marinette, Wis.

Detroit, Mich.—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was so run down with female troubles that I could not do anything, and our doctor said I would have to undergo an operation. I could hardly walk without help so when I read about the Vegetable Compound and what it had done for others I thought I would try it. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and a package of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and used them according to directions. They helped me and today I am able to do all my work and I am well." —Mrs. Thos. Dwyer, 989 Milwaukee Ave., East, Detroit, Mich.

Bellevue, Pa.—"I suffered more than tongue can tell with terrible bearing down pains and inflammation. I tried several doctors and they all told me the same story, that I never could get well without an operation and I just dreaded the thought of that. I also tried a good many other medicines that were recommended to me and none of them helped me until a friend advised me to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. The first bottle helped, I kept taking it and now I don't know what it is to be sick any more and I am picking up in weight. I am 20 years old and weigh 145 pounds. It will be the greatest pleasure to me if I can have the opportunity to recommend it to any other suffering woman."—Miss Irene Froelicher, 1923 Manhattan St., North Side, Bellevue, Pa.

If you would like special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Med. Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

STOP EATING MEAT IF KIDNEYS OR BACK HURT

Take a Glass of Salts to Clean Kidneys If Bladder Bothers You—Meat Forms Uric Acid.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.—Adv.

A New Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and all Uric Acid Troubles

Dr. Eberle and Dr. Braithwaite as well as Dr. Simon—all distinguished Authors—agree that whatever may be the disease, the urine seldom fails in furnishing us with a clue to the principles upon which it is to be treated, and accurate knowledge concerning the nature of disease can thus be obtained. If backache, scalding urine or frequent urination bother or distress you, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, gout or sciatica or you suspect kidney or bladder trouble just write Dr. Pierce at the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y.; send a sample of urine and describe symptoms. You will receive free medical advice after Dr. Pierce's chemist has examined the urine—this will be carefully done without charge, and you will be under no obligation. Dr. Pierce during many years of experimentation has discovered a new remedy which is thirty-seven times more powerful than lithia in removing uric acid from the system. If you are suffering from backache or the pains of rheumatism, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50 cent box of "Anuric" put up by Doctor Pierce, or send 10c for a large trial pck'g. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak women and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the blood have been favorably known for the past forty years and more. They are standard remedies to-day—as well as Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets for the liver and bowels. You can have a sample of any one of these remedies by writing Dr. Pierce, and sending 10c for trial package.

Look here you farmers. You can not afford to spread your manure by hand. The oats will lodge and you will tear the corn out by the roots either with your harrow or cultivator. This does not pay. Come in and buy a Flying Dutchman or Great Western manure spreader and do your work right and also make a big crop of both oats and corn. We will give you a good deal and the best spreader made. PRIZE WINNING HORSES AT THE SHORT COURSE

The live stock car in connection with the Short Course at Klemme, on February 14 to 19, will contain six fine draft horses, one Shetland stallion and eight head of barrows. Three Belgian mares furnished by the horse breeding farm of R. F. French of Independence. One of these mares won the grand championship at the Minnesota State Fair last year. She is the dam of the frist prize sucking colt at the Iowa State Fair and at the Minnesota State Fair, and she and her colt together won first place at both the Iowa State Fair and the Minnesota State Fair. This mare will be used in class work. Another one of the mares a three year old won first place at the Iowa State Fair this season, the other mare has not been shown, but has proved up with the other mares in type and quality. In addition to the [illegible] industry attractive and [illegible] to the [illegible] the Short Course.

In addition to the mares there are two splendid Roan Grab geldings, owned by Roy C. O'Donnell of Ames, weighing about a ton each. These two show, in a remarkable way, the type, size and bone of horses which are used in the large cities and which command the highest price. The Short Course student will place these horses and write their criticisms concerning them.

Four of the hogs are purebred Duroc Jersey barrows, and four are cross-bred Duroc Jersey and Hampshire barrows. These hogs are a fine lot, were topped out of about 300 head and [illegible] good class work for the Short Course students during the week.

The twiddling of one's thumbs is not exactly a useful accomplishment, but it is one of the few points of difference between the hands of the higher order of apes and those of man. The two hands have the same number of bones and are alike in a great many particulars, but the thumbs of the monkey tribe have no separate flexor or bending muscles. In the gorilla the thumb is short and does not reach much beyond the bottom of the first joint of the forefinger It is very much restricted in its movements, and the animal can neither twiddle his thumbs nor turn them around so that the tips describe a circle

BURIED WILL LATEST MYSTERY FEATURE TO COME FROM BEDFORD

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 15.—Taylor county, which recently startled Iowa with the arrest of four pioneers charged with the murder of a cattleman 50 years ago, in which a chest of buried money was involved, furnishes another sensational story in arguments presented to the Iowa supreme court in the case of Olive Daniels vs Ernest Lewis, appellant.

An ugly brick bearing an inscription giving directions for digging for a buried will of A. J Litteer, pioneer of Taylor county, a pickle jar which contained similar directions and an old earthen jar which was found buried and which contained a will giving the $60 000 Litteer estate to Ernest Lewis, were exhibited in court to emphasize the force of the attorneys' arguments.

According to the facts as presented to the supreme court, A. J Litteer, of Taylor county, died in 1910 He owned a 460 acre farm in Taylor county, 240 acres in Kansas and certain notes Ernest Lewis, claiming to be an adopted son of Litteer, laid claim to the entire estate.

Other heirs of Litteer filed action in the Taylor county district court asking that Lewis' claims be denied The lower court so ruled

Lewis appealed to the supreme court and the high court reversed the lower court's ruling The case went back for a decree in keeping with the opinion The lower court granted the heirs a new trial Lewis objected and has appealed to the supreme court to sustain him

A J Litteer was 80 years old when he died His estate was found in somewhat of a confused condition Ernest Lewis exhibited documents claiming to be the adopted son and a will giving him the property

After the lower court, on the original hearing had decided against Lewis, two mysterious notes appeared One was found on the porch of J A. Evans in the town of Bedford It directed the finder to look for a certain brick in the hedge at the Litteer place in Bedford. Evans paid no attention to the note.

A few days later a similar note appeared mysteriously in the office of G B Haddock It also called attention to the brick.

A search was then made for the brick It was found On it was the inscription

North 30 steps dig for will'

Ernest Lewis and others interested began prospecting the estate in response to the directions on the brick On May 29, 1913, a rod that was being used in the prospecting struck an object On digging, an old churn was found In it was an earthen jar and in the jar was a manuscript said to be the last will of A J Litteer There were other objects with the document This will gave the estate to Ernest Lewis

After finding the churn someone found a pickle bottle in the hedge and in it a paper, which read

Whoever finds this go 30 steps north and dig for will strait east of persimon tree, then take inside jar to court house before it is opened A J Litteer

A few days later certain notes belonging to the estate were found in a tin box in a buggy owned by H M Long who lived near the Litteer estate One of these notes was signed by Ernest Lewis for the sum of $ 50 On the back were the directions that the money received on payment of the note was to 'purchase a turnstone"

Both side claim fraud perjury forgery and conspiracy The attorneys say that the estate is worth $60 000 and that the high value is responsible for the hard legal fight being made over it

According to the record there was great excitement in Bedford when the jar was found A crowd of men followed the sheriff to the court house when he took possession of the jar All Bedford was anxious to know what it contained

Like the 50-year-old murder story, in which the James boys and the Youngers were said to have participated the Litteer mystery is claimed by the attorneys to be faked They say that the documents were buried after the death of Litteer

However attorneys for Lewis contend that the will that was unearthed would not affect the original will or adoption papers on which the estate was awarded to Lewis

WOMAN ASKS $3,000,000 ON FRAUD ALLEGATIONS

Davenport Ia Jan 15 The $3 000 000 suit of Mrs Elizabeth H Bettendorf against Joseph W Bettendorf, her brotherinlaw, and the Bettendorf company the biggest suit ever tried in Scott county and one that has brought out more legal talent than any other suit that can be remembered here is now up to Judge F D Letts for decision Which ever side wins this district court decision will have to fight an appeal to the higher court

The suit originated in the sale by Mrs Bettendorf of her share in the Bettendorf company to her brotherinlaw Joseph and a syndicate of other officers of the company She is the widow of W P Bettendorf founder of the Steel Car & Bolster company and inventor of many mechanical appliances which made the steel car a commercial success

Mrs Bettendorf says her brotherinlaw so misrepresented the value of the shares she held in the company that she sold out at a figure $3,000 000 less than she should have received She claims that then she placed the value of the Bettendorf plant at $2,300,000, although 18 months later the plant was appraised by the executive committee of Iowa at $8,000,000.

STATE IS INVESTIGATING RECENT FIRE AT OTTUMWA

Ottumwa, Ia., Jan 15.—Complying with a request from the Ottumwa city council and fire chief, Deputy State Fire Marshal H G Zimmerman, came to Ottumwa and is conducting an investigation into the three fires that occurred here early Tuesday morning The local officials made the request for his presence in response to a well defined demand on the part of the residents of Ottumwa.

The three fires Tuesday morning came almost simultaneously. One fire destroyed property worth nearly $500,000. The smaller fires caused little damage, but served to divert the attention of the firemen from the main blaze.

BURLINGTON—R H Simmons, one of the 19 Americans slain by Mexican bandits in northern Chihuahua this week, lived at Danville, Ia., near Burlington. He was the son of Mrs. Clara Simmons, widow, of Danville. Simmons had been engaged in engineering in Mexico for two years. He was 25 years old. His body will be brought to Danville for burial.

AUDITOR MAKES REPORT ON PLYMOUTH COUNTY PROPERTY

LeMars, Ia., Jan. 15.—County Auditor Hayes has filed his annual valuation and tax report with the auditor of state. The total actual value of all property in Plymouth county is reported as $57,004,858. Almost four-fifths of this is the value of 514,646.71 acres of land which is returned by the assessors as worth $42,274,892. The next largest item is personal property which is valued at $5,294,672. Railroad properties are valued at $3,823,182 and town lots at $3,685,312. Moneys and credits aggregate $1,661,650, telegraph and telephone lines $347,656, and express companies' property $13,832. The exemptions for soldiers and homesteads amount to $96,548 The net value of all property except moneys and credits is $55,343,208 and 25 per cent of this gives the total taxable value of the county, $13,853,802, upon which all direct taxes are

The amount raised by taxes in the county during 1915 will be $512,360 92

BOYS PLAY WAR, ONE SHOT IN EYE WITH AIR RIFLE

Marshalltown, Ia Jan 15.—While engaged in playing "war," and fighting as Teutons and allies from the trenches 10-year-old Jay Vickers, of New Sharon, Ia., shot his friend, the enemy, John Seary, aged 9 in the eye, and Seary may lose the sight of that optic as a result It was not a rapid fire machine gun that Vickers used, but an ordinary air rifle The effect on Seary's eye was the same however, and "war" is to be tabooed parentally in New Sharon

UNION BANK AT SHELDON TAKES OUT STATE CHARTER

Sheldon, Ia., Jan. 15.—Articles of incorporation will be filed this week for changing of Union bank, a private institution, into a state bank, under the name of the Union State bank. This bank has been in existence under different charters, but always in the same location, since the early history of the town Various men have been connected with the business, but the pioneer interests of the bank have been in the hands of the Sleepers and Mr. Sherwood A W Sleeper, who continues a large interest in the newly organized bank, first started in the banking business in 1878. The directors signing the articles, besides A W. Sleeper, are W P. Iverson, H. P. Mousel, F W. Miller and T. E. Diamond. The officers until the first annual meeting will be A. W. Sleeper, president, W B Iverson, vice president H. P. Mousel, cashier

THREE BUILDINGS BURNED AT GEORGE; LOSS $20,000

George, Ia., Jan 15.—Fire loss of about $20,000 was caused in the business district of George last night. The losses were Switer grocery, $8,000; Lehman harness shop, $8,000, Crotexer pool hall, $6,000 The fire started in the pool hall about 2 o'clock a. m., supposed to have been due to an overheated stove. Losses are about 50 per cent, protected with insurance The buildings destroyed are located on the west side of the main business block, close to the postoffice.

Iowan Who Lavished Two Farms on Sweetheart Now Aiding State to Prosecute.

Chicago, Jan. 14.—"Sentimental Tommy," Foulkes, of Danbury, Ia., yesterday finished his testimony in the second trial against his former sweetheart, Lodavine Miller, whom he charges with having secured about $40,000 from him, then casting him adrift. At the first trial of the case Miss Miller and her brother, Attorney J. M. Miller, were convicted of defrauding Foulkes, but they secured a new trial.

In his testimony yesterday Foulkes said Miss Miller gave him a bible and told him to marry a rich widow, because she, Lodavine, would make a better mother to him than a wife.

"She was living in Pacific avenue then," he said. "She told me if I didn't wish to stay here I could go on to Los Angeles and wait for her until she settled her suit against the street car company. As I was getting on the train she said I shouldn't marry any one until I had first consulted her.

"I wrote her from Los Angeles, asking her to send me $300 I had given her. She sent me a religious letter, but no money."

Foulkes testified receiving another letter from Miss Miller in November, 1902, containing a request that he send her $200 to finance a suit she said she had pending against the street car company.

"I sent her a draft for the $200 and asked her when she was going to marry me," Foulkes went on.

"Then what happened?"

"Why, then I got another letter from her and she told me she couldn't marry me until her suit was disposed of."

"Did you get another letter from her in January, 1903?"

"Yes. She asked me for $300 more to go on with the suit, so I sent her a draft for $300."

"Did you receive another letter in October, 1903?"

"Yes. Asking me for $499. She said she was in trouble and I sen. her a draft for $500."

"In December, 1906, she wrote me and asked me to send her $2,000. I wrote her I wouldn't send her the money, and then she wrote back to me and said she was working hard for both of us—both for me as well as for herself—and it seemed to her I was working against her She wrote me again then for me to borrow the money for one month and said she would then pay it back She said she wanted the money to go on with the real estate business.

"While I was in Los Angeles I got a letter from her telling me to come to Chicago, to sell my property in California, and we would get married and go to Honolulu, where a rich uncle of hers had died, she said, leaving her $30,000. I got a buyer for the property and got a draft for $1,750 I was holding out for $1,800, but J. Marion Miller acted as my lawyer and told me to split the difference with the buyer, so I did."

Foulkes came to Chicago more than six years ago, looking for a wife to drive away the lonesomeness on his Iowa farm. He met Miss Miller through a doctor, and, with the aid of her brother she almost married him. Before going through this formality, she obtained his two farms—worth $40,000—and $11,000 in cash, "Tommy" says.

In a postcard, written September 15, 1910, by Miss Miller and sent in care of Mrs. Will Laty his cousin, at Danbury, she said

Dear Tommy Come back to your loving wife There can be no life but with you Don't let me suffer more. My heart weeps drops of blood for you. Send me one sign of love."

In previous letter, Miss Miller wrote: "I was going to send an Easter card, but they were sold out when I got to the drug store."

Tommy smiled on the witness stand when this note was read.

"That's something I almost got," he said

After Miss Miller found that he did not have any more money or property, the witness stated, she gave him this advice

'She handed me a bible and told me to go to Los Angeles and join a church and marry a rich widow She said she would make a better mother to me than a wife "

After the first trial, Tommy returned to Danbury where, from a retired farmer he became a farm hand on his aunt's place

KENYON GETS SUPPORT FOR LIVE STOCK BOARD

Washington, D C., Jan 14.—Senator Kenyon is being flooded with letters relating to his plan to urge legislation for a new assistant secretary of agriculture, who would have control over live stock matters and thus clip the wings of the powerful bureau of animal industry These letters are on both sides of the plan on the one hand, the bureau is assailed as over friendly to the big packers. Officials of the bureau and friends of the bureau resent the attacks on it, say they are unjustified and want opportunity to reply to some of the testimony at the recent hoof and mouth hearing in Chicago Senator Kenyon will press the legislation as he is convinced the bureau needs controlling and is impressed with the evidence against it.

"COIN" SHOULD BE OBJECT OF FARMING OPERATIONS

Ames, Ia., Jan. 12.—Bumper crops is not the beginning and end of agricultural science, declared Carl Vrooman, assistant secretary of agriculture today, in a vigorous address to the agricultural students and faculty at Iowa State college, in which he presented what he terms "The Business Side of Farming."

"What's the use of big crops," asked Mr. Vrooman "if you can't transform them into coin? Farmers are today asking that question because they have found in a good many years that large crops mean small incomes. In 1912 they grew two-thirds of a billion bushels more corn than in 1913, but they got $171,000,000 less for it than in 1913. In the face of such facts as these it is evident that there is more to successful farming than crop production. Farming is a business as much as running a bank. A successful business man expects to make interest on his investment, wages for his time, and a profit besides. Unfortunately few farmers attain this ambition. Too many of them today are merely giving themselves hired men's jobs."

WIRELESS TORPEDO CONTROL PERFECTED

Washington, Jan. 15.—Wireless control from an aeroplane of a coast defense torpedo has been developed it was learned today and patents for the scheme are included in the Hammond radio controlled torpedo rights for the purchase of which the navy department has asked congress to appropriate nearly $1,000,000.

Aeroplane control, naval officers explain, make it possible for the operator to guide the radio torpedo through the water from any height, air bubbles from the compressed air motor of the torpedo giving him a certain guide by which to steer it against a ship's hull. By use of powerful glasses it has been possible heretofore to control the torpedo from shore to a distance of nearly 10,000 yards, but the new device will make the missile effective to the full range of its motor capacity, or even farther at sea if the torpedo is launched from a swift motor boat within sight of an enemy ship.

EL PASO RIOTERS ARE QUIET TODAY

General Pershing Quells Anti-Mexican Demonstrations—Soldiers Participate In Disturbance.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 15.—El Paso was quiet early today, following riotous scenes last night, when American citizens, among whom were many soldiers, engaged in numerous general fights with Mexicans. The attacks were attributed to resentment growing out of the massacre of Americans and foreigners at Santa Yzabel.

In view of the conditions, Gen. John C. Pershing, commanding the federal forces at Fort Bliss, furnished guards of soldiers to aid the local police in maintaining order.

The action by the federal authorities was taken to relieve the situtions, which, it was feared, would result in reprisals on Mexicans.

Despite efforts of municipal authorities to control the demonstration against Mexicans, apprehension was felt for their safety

Numerous fights broke out between foreigners and Americans, with soldiers participating. The Mexican quarter was invaded and the foreigners sought shelter from enraged Americans. Policemen went from hotel to hotel advising Mexicans to seek safety

A secret meeting of mining and cattlemen was held, it was said, to organize an expedition to cross into Mexico and hunt down the slayers of their former friends and companions. The meeting ended, however, without any action being taken.

General Pershing was informed of the situation and immediately intervened to restore order.

One hundred and fifty arrosts were made during the night. Beyond a few broken heads, it was found none of the Mexicans had sustained serious injuries.

The disorder started early in the evening, when a squad of soldiers swung shoulder to shoulder in double columns down El Paso street and declared they were going to "clean the street of Mexicans. Every Mexican encountered was bowled over. If he put up a fight, he was overpowered and beaten.

General Pershing ordered four companies of the Sixteenth infantry to take charge, after it was seen that the police were unable to cope with the situation and lines of troops advanced four abreast through the streets and established sentries on street corners.

Orders were issued that no one would be allowed in the streets without a permit signed by the provost marshal. While these regulations were being put into effect, it was reported Mexicans were arming, and the provost marshal began a search of the Mexican quarters.

FOOD EXPORTS WORTH ONE BILLION DOLLARS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 14.—Export figures made public today by the department of commerce show that as a result of the war Europe's 1915 food bill in the United States approached $1,000,000,000. Records for 11 months ended December 1, indicate that more than $800,000,000 worth of food left American shores during the year, nearly three times as much as in 1913, the year before the war. In the last six months of 1914 breadstuffs shipments reached $300,000,000, five times the value of shipments during the six months preceding the war. Bread shipments last year passed the $500,000,000 mark.

NEGRO TROOPERS RAID HONOLULU VICE ZONE

Honolulu, T. H., Jan. 14.—Honolulu's tenderloin district was patrolled by soldiers early today, as a result of a systematic raid last night, which was participated in by approximately 500 United States troops of the Ninth cavalry, (colored). During the demonstration all the establishments which were conducted by white persons were wrecked and many of them were looted.

Efforts of the police force to quell the disturbance were fruitless and the section presented a scene of great confusion until a battalion of the Second infantry with fixed bayonets and a detachment of mounted scouts appeared. When the streets had been cleared the district was left in military control.

The reason for the demonstration has not been announced.

The railway system of Japan is practically a government monopoly, only 205.58 miles of railway being privately owned on March 31, 1915, (the latest date for which statistics are available) with a mileage of 5,914

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Children love this "fruit laxative" and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, won't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50 cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv

It was on the millionaire's private course, and Mr. Walsh, teeing off, sliced the ball, which fell into a marsh.

"New ball, caddy," he said

"But, Mr. Walsh," the millionaire remonstrated, "aren't you going to look for that ball?"

"No, sir, I'm not," Mr Walsh answered.

"But, Mr. Walsh," persisted the millionaire, "that ball cost 75 cents"

Mr. Walsh looked the millionaire in the eye and smiled.

"My dear sir," he said, when I get to be as rich as you are maybe I'll be able to afford the time to look for lost golf balls. Caddy, put the new one here."

SALTS IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS TROUBLE YOU

Eat Less Meat If Your Kidneys Are Acting Right or If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to, seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Papers Seized at Falmouth Said to Show He Paid For Blowing Up Munition Plants.

London, Jan. 15.—Copies of correspondence taken from Captain Von Papen, recalled German military attache at Washington, when he reached Falmouth on his way to Germany, have been turned over to the American embassy for transmission to the state department. They show that Captain Von Papen made frequent payments to persons charged with the responsibility to blow up munition works and bridges in the United States.

One entry shows that Captain Von Papen gave $700 to Werner Horn, who was convicted of blowing up a Canadian Pacific railway bridge at St. Croix, Me.

The day before this check was issued, the German embassy paid $2,000 into Captain Von Papen's account.

A later message from Edam says that the dike protecting Polderezeevang is in danger and that if it breaks the result will be the flooding of the greater part of north Holland.

SALONIKI A SECOND YPRES THEY CLAIM

Germans Report Allies Continue to Land Big Bodies of Troops In Greece.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Jan. 15.—Dispatches from Sofia say that information has been brought there by a person who left Saloniki, January 8, that the allies continue to land forces on a considerably increased scale at Saloniki and at Orfano Bay. No purpose of taking the offensive has yet been displayed on the part of the allies, who, according to this information have completed their second line of defense.

The allies at Saloniki are said to have grown exceedingly optimistic and their officers express the belief that they can make a second Ypres of Saloniki.

TARIFF ON AMERICAN PRODUCTS IS SLASHED

Rio Janeiro, Jan. 14.—The president has signed a decree reducing the import duty on a number of North American products. The new duties, which are in effect as from January 1, of the present year, show the following reductions from the tariffs now in force.

Thirty per cent on flour, 20 per cent on condensed milk, articles of rubber included in article 1033 of the tariff law, cloaks and watches, inks (article 173 of the tariff law), except inks for writing, varnishes, typewriters, ice boxes pianos, scales, windmills, cements, corsets, dried fruits and school furniture

WARM SCRAP OVER RAILROAD INQUIRY

Cummins Says There Is Scheme on Foot to Give Roads Assurances Regulations Will Be Relaxed.

Washington Jan. 15.—Important developments are on in the Senate Interstate Commerce commission over the proposal for a commission to make a general investigation of the railroad situation. This was recommended by the president. Such action will probably be taken by congress.

Senator Cummins is taking an active part in shaping the measure. Senator Newlands and other democratic leaders are insisting on reporting one. Senator Cummins insists that the measure reported must not hold out any assurance to the railroads that government regulations will be relaxed.

Senator Cummins is convinced there is a big scheme on foot to hold out such a promise or assurance to the railroads and he said today he would fight against it, though he will not oppose any impartial inquiry.

The committee will report a measure for an investigation and Senator Cummins is working to have it so worded that it will not be dangerous to the interest of public and shippers.

HOLY SEE HAS NOT OFFERED MEDIATION

Article Inspired By Vatican Denies Pope Has Made Peace Overtures.

Rome, Jan. 15. — "The Holy See did nothing up to today either directly or indirectly to solicit from either group of belligerents any invitation to participate in or preside at a peace conference," says the Catholic organ Corriere D'Italo, in an article evidently inspired by the vatican.

Both groups of belligerents, the paper adds, thus far intend to be completely victorious dictating terms of peace outside any extraneous interference. The aim of the pope is to employ all possible means to render the conflagration less painful to humanity. If the pope were present at a peace congress, his adhesion to the treaty would bind the conscience of all Catholic subjects of the contracting nations, making it more difficult for any government to break the agreement.

The pope it asserts does not count upon the European conflict for the solution of the Roman question, which as Cardinal Gasparri said will not be settled by force of arms.

There is a general belief in vatican circles that the pope will deliver another important allocation about war in the consistory at the end of February. It is considered certain that the pontiff will call the consistory either for the end of February or shortly afterwards to impose red hats upon newly created cardinals.

HUERTA SUCCUMBS TO LONG ILLNESS

Gen. Victoriano Huerta, who succeeded Gen Francisco I Madero in executive power in Mexico City, and later left Mexico died of sclerosis of the liver. He was surrounded by his family when the end came. His death was not unexpected. Funeral arrangements are to be made today, it was announced at his residence last night. It is believed an effort will be made to arrange for his burial in Mexico.

Huerta took office as provisional president on February 19, 1913. Three days afterward Francisco Madero, one of his brothers who had been arrested with him, and Jose Maria Pino Suarez, vice president under Madero, were assassinated while riding under guard from the palace to the penitentiary.

The crime aroused a storm of indignation throughout the United States. In many quarters there were demands for intervention, but President Taft, who was on the eve of leaving office, decided to take no action which might commit the incoming administration of President Wilson.

Following the landing of American troops at Vera Cruz and the arbitration of American differences with the Huerta government, Huerta resigned and left Mexico. He returned to this country about a year later Recently he was arrested on the eve of entering Mexico to stir up a counter revolution against Carranza. It was commonly charged that he was being financed by Franz Von Rintelen, a German agent.

HUGE BUTTER SALES TO RUSSIA REPORTED

Train of 25 Carloads Sent In One Shipment—American Production Large.

New York, Jan. 15.—As showing the heavy shipments of food supplies now being made from this port to Russia, it was stated today that a special train of 25 cars loaded with butter, was rushed here from Chicago, within 48 hours, in order to be shipped on board the steamer Czaritz, another vessel leaving yesterday for Russia. The amount of this shipment is understood to have exceeded all records for a single consignment.

This is believed to be the first American made butter ever shipped to Russia. Dealers say that America has butter to spare and that they are anxious to extend their exports, as the holdings of butter in refrigerating plants throughout the country are heavier than a year ago. The report of the associated warehouses on January 1 showed there were in 45 leading houses 39,338,000 pounds of butter in storage, an increase of nearly 10,000,000 pounds over the supply stored one year ago.

HUBER HAS PROSPECT OF HAWAII APPOINTMENT

Washington, D. C. Jan. 14.—C. Huber, of Tama, prominent Iowa democrat, who has been here in response to a request of the department of justice to talk over his qualifications for the district attorneyship of Hawaii, has returned home. Representative Steele put in a good word with the department for Huber. It has not been definitely settled whether he will be named, but his prospects are good. An announcement will probably be made in 10 days or two weeks.

ATTORNEYS ARGUING BOOTLEGGING CASES

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 14.—Arguments on whether the law passed by the legislature making it a penitentiary offense to continue liquor nuisances after one conviction is constitutional were made before supreme court today on appeal from Woodbury courts of cases of druggist John Davey and Mike Flanagan; Judge Oliver argued against the measure while John F. Joseph appeared for the prosecution.

ATTACKS FAIL TO STAMPEDE WILSON IN MEXICO CRISIS

President Disposed to Give Carranza Every Chance to Avenge Murder of American Citizens.

WARNS THEM TO STAY OUT

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—At today's cabinet meeting it was decided that the present policy would be maintained and General Carranza would be depended upon to punish the Villa bandits who killed American citizens.

No formal announcement was made, but officials close to the president declared the administration had no intention of armed intervention in Mexico at present. The view was reiterated that Carranza should be given an opportunity to demonstrate his ability to restore order. This was encouraged by a telegram from Carranza to his ambassador here promising every effort to run down the bandits.

The attack on the administration in the Senate and House were gone over at the meeting and Secretary Lansing presented reports from the border. It is generally agreed that beyond making the representations already sent to Carranza, with which he has promised to comply, no further steps should be taken at present. Whether each member of the cabinet agreed with that view was not disclosed.

Even should the attacks on the administration continue in congress, it was said by officials that the president will stand on his policy of giving the defacto government in Mexico an opportunity to show whether it can control the situation. Carranza's promises will be accepted by the administration in good faith.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—Senator Stone, chairman of foreign relations, had a conference with the president today on Mexico, and on leaving the White House, made it plain the administration would not change its policy. Moreover, he predicted the various Mexican resolutions in congress would not be acted on. He expects them to be pigeon-holed in committee.

Senator Stone called to get information to enable him to meet criticisms of the administration in the Senate. The senator holds that Carranza should be given a chance to work out his problem and this is the view of the president.

"The president has his back to the wall in this Mexican crisis," said a close friends of his. "He will not budge

It would be monstrous for the United States to go to war in Mexico at such a time as this," declared Senator Stone, after his return to the capitol "I was the original war man in the Senate, when there was no organized government recognized by this country But now we have recognized a government and it would be absurd to rush in without giving that government a chance to suppress and punish the bandit bands that have murdered American citizens.

"We know these bandits are seeking the blood of Americans for revenge. I think that Americans who venture into such places and Americans who venture forth on belligerent ships into war zones, are committing a crime against the government whose protection they seek. Of course, we must try to protect them. We have a technical right to go into such dangerous places, but they should do it, if possible to avoid it, and thus embarrass the United States.

"I am not convinced that it will not be necessary to go into Mexico, but this is an absurd time to talk of war."

Washington, D. C., Jan. 14.—The cyclone of debate over Mexico which broke over congress at the receipt of the news of the shooting down of American mining men near Chihuahua was only the forerunner of other storms. Despite the fact democratic leaders are urging senators and House members to be patient and to let the administration work out the Mexican problem, there is no likelihood this advice will be followed.

The Wilson administration will not, under present circumstances, reverse its policy. This government having appointed an ambassador to Mexico City, the president will give Carranza a chance to demonstrate what he can do.

Cannot Swerve President.

The Banditti outrage, which has stirred so much tumult, will not swerve the president from the course he has mapped out. The state department will insist on the Carranza government in good faith seeking to punish the murderers, but at the same time it is repeating its warnings to Americans to keep out of the distressed parts of Mexico.

With the administration adopting this attitude, the pressure from congress for intervention by force is increasing more bitter outbursts of criticism akin to those heard yesterday and the day before, may be looked for at any time.

Though the men close to the president predict that the present upheaval will pass, and the country will look on with patience while the Carranza government is being tried out it would be idle to say they are not worried over developments. They perceive that if the Chihuahua murderers are followed by other bandit or guerrilla outbreaks in which Americans are victims it will be difficult to restrain congress from action.

KILL BANDIT GENERALS.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 14.—Gen. Jose Rodriguez and General Almeida were executed at Madera shortly after their arrest, according to a dispatch received by the Mexican consul from Jacinto Trevino today.

Andreas G. Garcia, Mexican consul, declared today in answer to a formal inquiry that no armed revolutionary force of Americans would be permitted to enter Mexico [illegible] Villa and his ban

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid waste, so we can readily understand the importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much. Also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the juice of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also drink plenty of the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your trouble and backache.

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of higher priced cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3½ inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on many expensive cars.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Call, telephone or write for demonstration.

WHY "ANURIC"

IS AN INSURANCE AGAINST SUDDEN DEATH!

Sufferers from Backache, Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble

Before an Insurance Company will take a risk on your life the examining physician will test the urine and report whether you are a good risk. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog, you suffer from backache, sick-headache, dizzy spells, or the twinges and pains of lumbago, rheumatism and gout. The urine is often cloudy, full of sediment; channels often get sore and sleep is disturbed two or three times a night. This is the time you should consult some physician of wide experience—such as Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y. Send him 10 cents for sample package of his new discovery—"Anuric." Write him your symptoms and send a sample of urine for test. Experience has taught Dr. Pierce that "Anuric" is the most powerful agent in dissolving uric acid, as hot water melts sugar; besides being absolutely harmless it is endowed with other properties, for it preserves the kidneys in a healthy condition by thoroughly cleansing them. Checks the degeneration of the blood-vessels, as well as regulating blood pressure. "Anuric" is a regular insurance and life-saver for all big meat eaters and those who deposit lime-salts in their joints. Ask the druggist for "Anuric" put up by Dr. Pierce, in 50-cent packages.

That the United States will enjoy continued and increasing prosperity during the year 1916 is the opinion of the governors of many of the 48 states, as well as experts of the financial and commercial world. These governors, in recent statements, have declared that adverse effects of the war have passed away and industrial depression is rapidly giving way to feverish activity. Their opinions, and those of other men in a position to know, follow.

By Gov. M. Alexander, of Idaho.

The industrial conditions of Idaho are more prosperous than ever before, Idaho being an agricultural state, both irrigated and dry farming being followed successfully. The production of the soil is its largest industry, and the prosperity of the state is gauged by that condition.

Gov. Alexander.

During the last year the state has produced greater quantities of everything, from the soil than ever before in the history of the state, and our condition is highly prosperous.

Our principal crops are oats, wheat, barley, corn; our livestock industry in quantities cattle, horses, sheep and hogs. We have large sugar beet factories and beets are raised in quantities for that purpose, and the output this year is greater than ever before.

By Gov. Rolland H. Spaulding of New Hampshire.

With the possible exception of the cotton goods industry the industrial and business conditions in New Hampshire are good. The war has brought orders to some of our woolen mills and shoe factories, and our two largest machine shops are making shells. I should expect an increase of such orders from a continuance of the war, but entirely apart from the general outlook in this state is one of prosperity. No statistics are available as to the the number of unemployed, but it is safe to say that it is not above the average.

Gov. Spaulding.

By Charles S. Hamlin, President Federal Reserve Bank.

The past year has been a period of unusual and striking development in business. At the beginning of the year we were still engaged in liquidating our current indebtedness to Europe by the shipment of goods to pay off and meet the demands of English banks and bankers. This was followed by four months of record export shipments, during which the claims of the United States were settled through the return of American securities held abroad.

C. S. Hamlin.

During the late summer and the past autumn we have been sending goods to Europe on a credit basis and financing our own exports The result of this unprecedented demand for our goods at high prices has been to supply the nation largely with funds, making interest rates low and business correspondingly active. Strictly domestic business has enormously increased and reports of business conditions made to the federal reserve board from every part of the country show that substantially all lines are now actively employed in producing a maximum output and selling it at reasonable rates.

By Gov. Park Trammell, of Florida.

Business conditions in Florida have improved very much during the past two months. This improvement is due to the fact largely that naval stores, which were selling at an exceedingly low price, with little demand, are now bringing a good price with a reasonably good demand. Lumber, for which there was but little demand, for a while, is now in demand at good prices. Cotton which sold last year at 6½ to 8 cents per pound, has for the last few months been from 11 to 12 cents. We have very few, if any, unemployed in this state.

Gov. Trammell.

By Gov. Ernest Lister, of Washington

The past six weeks have developed a much more active lumber market and the prospects for 1916 business are better than has been the case in many years past. Recent snows in the wheat growing districts of the state have improved the prospects for the 1916 crop. There is a steady development in the live stock industry of the state, especially along dairying lines, and each year is improving the grades of stock owned by dairymen.

Gov. Lister.

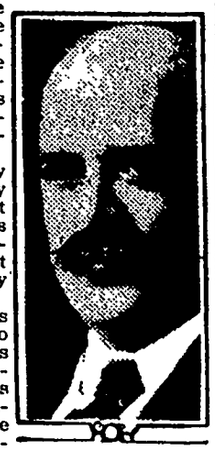
In relation to the effect that the war has had on business conditions in the state of Washington and will continue to have in 1916, I might say that without doubt many business concerns in the state have benefitted by war orders.

By Gov. Chas. R. Miller, of Delaware

The activity in industrial and business circles in the state of Delaware indicates prosperous conditions. The outlook for a continuance of this state of affairs appears to be favorable.

If there are any unemployed, they belong to that class which does not seek employment and will not work under any circumstances.

Farm laborers are difficult to procure. This however, is a condition which is universally prevalent throughou the agricultural districts of our entire country.



Gov. Miller.

By William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor.

As I see the situation, if the war should suddenly come to an end it might slightly affect our industries, but not greatly affect them. Based upon conditions which followed other great wars, the Franco-Prussian and our civil war, we should have prosperity for many years following the close of the war. This will be, first, because our domestic business has had a wonderful impetus, and, second, because of the fact that foreign countries now engaged in war would have to utilize their industries to their fullest extent for purposes of reconstruction.

W. B. Wilson.

The Waning Livery Stables.

From the Turners Falls Reporter

The livery stables of a town used to be very important institutions and the size and character of them were a very good index, at one time, to the importance and quality of a place. But with the increasing numbers of automobiles, Fords, motorcycles, etc., the demand for livery stable rigs has dwindled down decidedly, and the keepers of livery and baiting stables very seldom get a chance to roll in wealth unless the letting of horses and horse-drawn vehicles is supplemented by other enterprises. "Buggy riding" used to be the acme of bliss and desire not so many years ago, and was the one sure road to courtship if not to matrimony, but the time-honored method is much too slow in this age, and while folks still go to weddings, funerals and christenings behind horses, they don't do even this if there is a devil wagon to go in instead. The decline and languor of the livery business is the same everywhere. In Orange, for instance, where there used to be four stables, there is now but one, and where there were 40 horses kept there are now but 15, and this in spite of the largely increased population. It is the same story everywhere. Still, the old horse will never entirely go out of vogue. Like the poor, horses will be with us for some time yet. There still be folk so plebeian that they like the feel of driving behind something alive, and which, while it may be liable to kick up, will not blow up. You generally know the worst about a horse, as what it will do under a given condition is not much of a mystery. After the automobile is relegated to the dustbins of oblivion—what?

Milking the Tango.

Harrison Rhodes, in Harper's Magazine.

Until very recently it was possible to take a train from Boston to New York at a later hour than you could enter the subway and take a street car for Cambridge—a fact which in the days before Harvard became a serious scholarly athletic college was often taken by belated and cheerful students of that institution as a sign direct from God. The development of what is known as the "brass-bed train" between the two cities is evidence of an almost exacerbated anxiety to make the flight transit endurable to overwrought, quivering creatures returning to the shores of Massachusetts bay. New York's tango roofs and pleasure palaces are the constant familiar haunt of Bostonians, yet it is never certain that the visitors are quite at their ease there. Even for the larkish trip to New York they bring certain grave prejudices and scientific ideas as to hygiene, which look very odd when unpacked in Manhattan. A Bostonian lady who was enthusiastic over New York's dancing-in-public restaurants, asserting that at home it was difficult regularly to secure this excellent health exercise, caused considerable confusion one New Year's eve in dplace of entertainment where, for that evening, only champagne was being served to patrons, by insisting upon having "certified milk," which was, she stoutly maintained, the exact thing which could, without harming her, keep her going at 3 o'clock in the morning!

THE BEST HAVE GONE.

Richard Washburn Child in Collier's Weekly.

He was a wholesome, sport loving English boy of good family. They are the ones who are killed. It is the volunteers and the volunteers of the highest metal who do not come back. They fight and march and wait inefficiently. "One trained man is worth four of them," is the army man's formula. "But they fight and march and wait harder than any."

They do not come back. In the next room I can hear the coughing of an old member of the house of lords whose line is 600 years old. One son, two sons, three sons! At last all gone, and so the line is at an end.

Out of England have gone her best blood and her best brains. Willingness to serve, by a cruel jest, has selected the best, and the Englishwoman, stiffening before her neighbors and before the American guest will say: "A great honor has come to our family If you read the roll in the Times last Friday, you would have seen that my son—" They also serve whose faces are as flint.

IS AMERICANISM ONLY A THEORY?

From the Providence Journal.

The time has come when we, the American people, must ask ourselves seriously whether we are, politically speaking, a bundle of loose sticks, a mere various collection of strains and races of a great coherent nation.

To what extent can we depend upon our citizens of foreign birth in time of trouble? Is liberty a failure? Has the American experiment in democracy broken down? Is loyalty to the Stars and Stripes nothing more than a sham and a subterfuge in the eyes of great masses of our foreign-born Americans? Are they Americans only when the issue does not concern the Old World land to which they are bound by ties of blood and tradition?

The country has flattered itself that an overwhelming majority of its citizens who have been transplanted from other lands would not fail it in an emergency. It has wanted to believe that every foreign-born American would put America first and the land of his ancestors second if he had to choose between them. In all conscience that is what he ought to do. Any man—whether he be French, German, British, Russian or Italian—who has left his country for another with the purpose of bettering himself financially, politically or otherwise, owes his first duty to his new state. He cannot morally serve two masters; he cannot divide his allegiance between them. And if it is from his new country that he has received his sustenance; if to his new sovereignty is due all he is or hopes to be; if his children are growing up in its friendly atmosphere; if he and they have accepted its protection, its support, the thousand and one advantages that led him to emigrate from his old country, there ought not to be for an instant a question of his alignment in the day of stress.

The problem is one of the gravest importance: It touches the vitals of our national life. It concerns not German-Americans only, but French-Americans, British-Americans, Russian-Americans and Italian-Americans. What is an American? How far back must he and his family have been identified with the United States in order to insure his loyalty? Or is it a matter of particular peoples and races? Is there an easier assimilation of American ideals among some peoples than among others? We may as well settle the question now. Shall the prophets of ill, who have forecast a day of domestic chaos for us, be justified? The answer is fraught with immense meaning to the future of the country.

SUB-NORMAL CHILDREN.

Professor Allison figures that 2½ per cent of the enrollment of children in the Chicago schools are below normal. Somewhere about 10 per cent of these are feeble minded, some are morons, and some are lower than morons.

Not much can be done in an educational way for the feeble minded. They can be educated to a certain point, but not beyond there, and they can never be brought to the point where they can earn their livings in the ordinary channels of a competitive life. The idiots, imbeciles, and many of the higher grades of the feebleminded are not criminals and do not tend to become criminals. They have not enough mental or physical vigor, intiative, or courage to become criminals. Allison says that the dangerous characters develop among the other 90 per cent. Practically all of that 90 per cent can be developed into useful citizens.

What is the plan? In the first place, the child should have a thorough physical examination. In many the cause is some remedial defect. In many the cause is bad teeth. After the teeth have been put in order the child keeps up with its school work, or may even catch up the lost grades. In many the cause is adenoids, or enlarged tonsils. In a very large number the trouble is one of poor food. After it has been arranged so that the child can get plenty of good food such children have no difficulty in keeping up. In others an open air school supplies just what the child needs.

Professor Allison estimates that 2¼ per cent of the school enrollment are subnormal, but above the grade of feebleminded. These, in his opinion, should be cared for in special rooms. In every school where there are 1,000 pupils there should be one room to be known as the special ungraded room. This room should accommodate 25 pupils. This room, in addition to the usual shoolroom equipment, should have the following special equipment: One piano, two locker benches, one tool and supply cabinet, eight kindergarten chairs, No 12; eight kindergarten chairs. No. 14; 8 common chairs.

The cost per pupil he figures as follows: Tuition (two and one-quarter times the regular tuition), $69.41; regular supplies and other expenses, $8.16; special supplies, $3; total, $80.57.

On the one hand this is to be compared with $46.73, the cost per pupil of the Chicago schools. On the other hand, it is to be compared with $270, the per capita cost of pupils in the parental school.

Certain of the backward pupils will not be able to learn much from books, but will show a special capacity for handicraft work. Such should be transferred to the manual training schools. In Chicago, in 1915, 1,589 retarded pupils were taught in these special ungraded schoolrooms. Of this number 358 were returned to grade.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH BOWELS

No sick headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food, take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv.

MISSED CHANCE FOR LAUGH

The drill sergeant was real mustard, and the recruits were having a bad time. The weather had been very wet, and the parade ground was still slippery. In doing a movement smartly, as an example to his men, the sergeant slipped and fell full sprawl, and naturally the "rookies" could hardly repress their mirth.

"Well, you grinning hyena!" he roared. "What's 'urting you? Do you see anything funny?"

"No, sorr," gurgled Murphy tactfully. "But, shure, Oi was just thinkin' what a laugh we cud have had it been anywan save yersilf, sergeant!"

A traveler entered an inn where a Quaker sat by the fire. Lifting a pair of green spectacles and rubbing his eyes, which looked very inflamed, the newcomer, in one breath, called for some brandy and made a grievous complaint about his eyes.

"They are getting weaker and weaker," said he. "And now even the spectacles appear to do no good."

"I tell thee, friend, what I think," said he. "If thou wouldst wear thy spectacles over thy mouth for a few months thine eyes would get well again."

PRESSED HARD

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When people realize the injurious effects of coffee and the better health that a change to Postum can bring, they are usually glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak-all-over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making a visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat unusual flavor of the coffee and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it that I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family liked it so well that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had been very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time she felt much better, had little trouble with her heart, and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was well and hearty.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, especially my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Beule Cabinet," etc.

"You mean Miss Vaughan?"

I contemplated this theory for some moments in silence. It was, at least, a theory and an interesting one—but it rested on air. There was no sort of foundation for it that I could see, and at last I said so.

"I know it's pretty thin," Godfrey admitted, "but it's the best I've been able to do—there's so little to build a theory out of. But I'm going to see if I can't prove one part of it true tonight."

"Which part?"

"About his being a fakir. Here's my theory—that hocus-pocus on the roof at midnight was for the purpose of impressing Vaughan. No doubt he believed it a real spiritual manifestation whereas it was only a clever bit of juggiery. Now that Vaughan is dead, that particular bit of juggiery will cease until there is some new victim to impress. In fact, it has ceased already. There was no star last night."

"But you know why," I pointed out. "The yogi spent the night in contemplation. We can bear witness to that."

"We can't bear witness to when he started in," said Godfrey, drily. "We didn't see him till after 12:30. However, accepting his explanation, there would be no reason for omitting the phenomenon tonight if it's a genuine one."

"No," I agreed.

"And, if it is omitted," Godfrey went on, "it will be pretty conclusive evidence that it isn't genuine. Although," he went on hurriedly, "I don't need any proof of that—anything else would be unbelievable." He glanced at his watch. "It's 11:50," he said. "Come along."

I followed him out of the house and through the grove with very mixed sensations. If the star didn't fall, it would tend to prove that it was, as Godfrey had said, merely a fake arranged to impress a credulous old man but suppose it did fall! That was part of the test concerning which Godfrey had said nothing. Suppose it did fall! What then?

So it was in silence that I followed Godfrey up the ladder and took my place on the limb. But Godfrey seemed to have no uneasiness.

"We won't have long to wait," he said. "We'll wait till 12:05, just to make sure. It must be 12 o'clock now. I wish I could persuade that fellow to show me how the fake was worked, for it was certainly a good one—one of the best . . ."

He stopped abruptly, staring out into the darkness. I was staring, too, for there, against the sky, a light began to glow and brighten. It hung for a moment motionless, and then began slowly to descend, steadily, deliberately, as of set purpose. Lower and lower it sank, in a straight line, hovered for an instant, and burst into 1,000,000 sparks.

As we went silently down the ladder, a moment later, it seemed to me that I could hear Godfrey's theory crashing about his ears.

CHAPTER XIII.

FRANCISCO SILVA.

It was not quite 10 o'clock when Godfrey and I turned in at the gates of Elmhurst, next morning, and made our way up the drive to the house, but in the library we found a considerable company already assembled. Goldberger was there, with Freylinghuisen his physician, his clerk, his stenographer, and the men who were to constitute the jury; Simmonds was there, and with him was an alert little man in glasses, who, Godfrey told me in an aside, was Sylvester, the head of the identification bureau, and the greatest expert on fingerprints in America. The district attorney had sent up an assistant, also with a stenographer, and altogether the room was decidedly crowded.

It became impossible a moment later, when a string of automobiles puffed up the drive and disgorded a mob of reporters and photographers. As many as the room would hold pushed into it, and the others stood outside in the drive and complained loudly. The complaints of the photographers were especially varied and forceful. Goldberger looked around him in despair, mopping his face angirly, for the crowded room was very hot.

"You fellows will have to get out of here," he said to the reporters. "There's no room. I'll give you a transcript of the proceedings after they're over."

The protests redoubled. How were they to get any human interest out of a transcript? Besides, there were the photographers. What did he expect them to do—photograph the transcript? And finally, the law required that the hearing be public, so they had a right to be present. It was a tense moment, the more so since Goldberger was by no means insensible of the value of newspaper popularity to a man in public life.

"Why not go out on the lawn?" Godfrey suggested. "It's only a question of moving some chairs and tables, and the boys will all lend a hand."

The boys applauded, almost forgiving Godfrey his scoop, protested their entire willingness to lend two hands if necessary, and, when Goldberger nodded his approval, fell to work with a will. The lower floor of the house was denuded, the garden seats pressed into service, and at the end of five minutes, the court was established amid the circle of trees, the reporters had their coats off and their pipes lighted, the photographers ditto and their cameras placed. Good humor was restored; peace reigned, and Goldberger smiled again, for he knew that the adjectives with which the reporters would qualify his name would be complimentary ones!

He took his place, rapped for order, and instructed his clerk to swear the jury. Nobody paid much attention to the jury, for it was a recognized device for paying small political debts, and its verdict was usually in strict accord with the wishes of the presiding officer. Then Goldberger looked at the vacant chair which I had kept beside me.

"By the way, Mr. Lester," he said, "I don't see Mr. Swain."

"He had to go back to the city last night," I explained, "to get some fresh clothes. He had an errand or two to do this morning, and may have been detained. I left word at the house for him to come over here at once."

"You seem to have a good deal of confidence in him," Goldberger remarked.

"I have," I answered quietly. "A great deal."

Goldberger frowned a little, but proceeded to open the case without further delay. Godfrey was the first witness, and told his story much as he had told it the night before. I followed him, but contributed no new details. Both of us were excused without cross examination.

To my great satisfaction Swain arrived while I was testifying, and I could not deny myself a triumphant glance at Goldberger, but he was studying some memoranda and affected not to notice it. As soon as I left the stand, Swain came and sat down beside me and gave me a letter. It was addressed to Miss Vaughan.

"It's from Mrs. Royce," he said. "She's a trump. She's determined that Marjorie shall come to her. She says if you don't bring her, she'll come after her herself. Do you know how she is this morning?"

"No," I said. "I haven't seen Hinman. But how are you?"

"Oh, I'm all right again—head a little sore yet where I bumped it—but otherwise as fit as a fiddle."

"You look it," I said, and I was glad, because I wanted him to make a good impression on the stand. I knew what weight appearances often had, and no jury, I told myself, would believe that the bright eyed, fresh colored boy could have had any hand in a brutal murder.

Just then Hinman's name was called and an officer hurried away to the house after him. They returned together almost at once, and Hinman was placed on the stand. He told of being summoned by Godfrey, and of the events which followed. He said that the murder had been committed about midnight, that death had been due to strangulation, and identified the cord and the blood stained handkerchief which the coroner submitted to him. I fancied that Swain lost a little of his color when he saw the handkerchief and learned where it had been found, but he made no remark.

"Will Miss Vaughan be able to testify?" Goldberger inquired, just before the doctor stepped down.

"Unless it is absolutely necessary, I think she would better be excused," Hinman answered. "She is still very nervous. The ordeal might cause a serious collapse."

"We will try to get along without her," assented Goldberger. "If necessary, I can take her deposition. Is she in bed?"

"Yes; I am keeping her as quiet as possible."

"Very well, we won't disturb her," said Goldberger, and Hinman was excused, and Freylinghuisen called. He merely testified to the cause of death and that the autopsy had shown that the deceased was in fair health and without organic disease.

Then the servants were called, but their evidence was unimportant. They had gone to bed about 10 o'clock and had not awakened until the coroner himself had pounded at the door. They had heard no unusual sound. Yes, they had slept with their doors locked and windows shuttered because that was the rule of the house. Yes, even in the hottest weather, that made no difference, since each of their rooms was fitted with a ventilator.

Questioned as to the manner of life of the other inmates of the house, the German and his wife were noncommittal. They had been with the family a long time; had taken care of the place when their master was abroad; only after his return had it been necessary to get another servant. He had been at home for a year, and the Hindus had arrived about six months later. Yes, they knew their master was studying some strange religion, but that was no affair of theirs, and they had never seen anything wrong. He had always treated them well, was a little strange and absent minded at times, but neither of them really saw much of him. He never interfered in the household affairs, Miss Vaughan giving such instructions as were necessary. The man spent most of his time in the grounds and the woman in the kitchen. She was a little petulant over the fact that one of the Hindus—the "ugly one"—refused to eat her cooking, but insisted on preparing his own food. Also the housemaid had told her that there was a snake, but she had never seen it.

From the Irish housemaid a little more information was obtained. Neither Mr. Vaughan nor the yogi ate any breakfast; indeed, they rarely left their rooms before noon. The other Hindu mixed himself up some sort of mess over the kitchen stove. Miss Vaughan breakfasted alone at 9 o'clock. At such times, she was accustomed to talk over household affairs with the maid, and after breakfast would visit the kitchen and make a tour of the grounds and garden. The remainder of her day would be spent in reading, in playing the piano, in doing little household tasks or in walking about the grounds with her father. Yes, sometimes the yogi would join them, and there would be long discussions. After dinner, in the library, there would also be long discussions, but the girl had no idea what they were about. She heard a fragment of them occasionally, but had never been able to make anything of them. In fact, from the way they dressed and all, she had come to the conclusion that Mr. Vaughan and the yogi were both a little crazy, but quite inoffensive and harmless.

"And how about Miss Vaughan?" asked the coroner.

"Miss Vaughan, bless her heart, wasn't crazy," said the girl quickly, "not a bit of it. She was just sad and lonely—as who wouldn't be! She never went out—in the five months I've been here, she's never been off the place; and them front gates was never opened to let anybody in. The only people who came in were the grocer and milk man and such like, through the little door at the side."

"You say you have been here five months?"

"Yes, sir."

"How did you come to apply for the place?"

"I didn't apply for it. I was sent here by an employment bureau. Miss Marjorie engaged me. I didn't see the Hindus till afterwards, or I don't think I'd have took it. After that, I stayed for Miss Marjorie's sake."

"You thought she needed you?"

"Yes, I did. With her father moonin' round in a kind of trance, and the yogi lookin' at her with eyes like live coals, and a snake that stood on its tail, and the other naygur going around with nothin' on but a diaper, I though she needed somebody to look after her; and says I, 'Annie Crogan, you're the girl to do it!'"

There was a ripple of laughter and the pencils of the reporters flew across their paper. It was the first gleam to enliven a prosaic and tiresome hearing.

"Were the Hindus obtrusive in any way?" asked the coroner.

"Did you see any of their religious practices?"

"I wouldn't call them religious—quite the contrary. I've seen them wavin' their arms and bowin' to the sun and settin' in the dark starin' at a glass globe with a light in it; that's about all. I got used to it, after a while, and just went on about my work without takin' any notice."

There was little more to be got from her, and finally she was excused. The reporters yawned. The jury twitched nervously. Worthington Vaughan was dead; he had been strangled—so much was clear; but not a scintilla of evidence had as yet been introduced as to who had strangled him. Then a movement of interest ran through the crowd, for a policeman came from the direction of the house accompanied by two strange figures. One was the yogi, in robes of dazzling white; the other his attendant, wearing something more than a diaper, indeed, but with his thin brown legs bare.

The yogi bowed to Goldberger with grave courtesy, and, at a word from the attendant policeman, sat down in the witness chair. Everybody was leaning forward looking at him, and the cameras were clicking in chorus, but he seemed scarcely aware of the circle of eager faces.

"For what purpose?" asked the yogi.

"I'm going to swear you."

"I do not understand."

"Im going to put you on oath to tell nothing but the truth," explained the coroner.

"An oath is unnecessary," said the yogi with a smile. "To speak the truth is required by my religion."

There was something impressive in the words, and Goldberger slowly lowered his arm.

"What is your name?" he asked.

"Francisco Silva."

"You are not a Hindu?"

"I am of their faith."

"But by birth?"

"I am a Portuguese."

"Born in India?"

"Born at Goa."

The coroner paused. He had never heard of Goa. Neither had I. Neither, I judged, had anyone else present. In this, however, I was wrong. Godfrey had heard of it, and afterwards referred me to Marryat's "Phantom Ship" as his source of information.

"How does it come that you speak English so well?"

"But you are by religion a Hindu?"

"I am a Saiva—a follower of Siva, the lord of life and death."

As he spoke, he touched his forehead with the fingers of his left hand. There was a moment's silence. Goldberger's moustache, I noted with a smile, was beginning to suffer again.

"You are what is called an adept?" he asked, at last.

"Some may call me that," said Silva, "but incorrectly. Among my fellow Saivas, I am known as a white priest, a yogi, a teacher of the law."

"Mr. Vaughan was your pupil?"

"Yes, for six months he was my pupil."

"In what way did you come to accept this position?"

"Two years ago, Mr. Vaughan visited the monastery of our order in Crete. He was at that time merely a student of orientalism, and came to us from curiosity. But his interest grew, and after a year spent in studying the holy books, he asked that a teacher be sent to him. There was none at that time who could be spared; but six months ago, having completed a task which had occupied me in Paris, I was assigned to this."

"Do you always go to so much trouble to secure converts?" questioned Goldberg a little cynically.

"Usually we require that the period of study be passed at one of our monasteries. But this case was exceptional."

"In what way?"

"It was our hope," explained the yogi, calmly, "that Mr. Vaughan would assist us in spreading the great truth by endowing a monastery for us in this country."

"Ah!" and Goldberger looked at him. "Did he agree to do so?"

"He did," answered the yogi, still more calmly. "This estate was to have been given to us for that purpose, together with an endowment sufficient to maintain it. Mr. Vaughan himself hoped to gain the white robe and become a teacher."

"What was to become of his daughter?"

"It was his hope that she would become a priestess of our order."

He's a Wiser Man Now.

There is no use in arguing with your better half as to who is boss of the shack, especially if she happens to be in the amazon class. This didn't occur to a New York married man until after his spouse was through disciplining him. And then he looked as if he had tried to stop a train. He is wearing enough gauze around his head to make a summer frock for an elephant, his windpipe is in splints and his pretty blue eyes are closed and in deep mourning. The doctors say he will live for years, but that he will be dizzy for about a week. Wifey allowed that she did all this by "tapping hubby with a comb." The court, however, inclined to the belief that the lady combs her hair with a healthy anvil.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ½ oz of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

Left Behind.

"How do you like Chugson?"

"Not at all."

"Why, he speaks well of you."

"Perhaps he does, but he's always disparaging my motor car."

"Aren't you mistaken about that?"

Sawed-Off Sermon.

If there is anything more contrary than the average female of the species, it is a right-handed lock on a left-handed door.

A Good Excuse.

Judge—What excuse have you for drinking?

Prisoner—I was dry, your honor.

Sometimes you can judge by appearances. Many a woman appears to be strait-laced because she really is laced that way.

Why does a selfish man expect the whole world to mourn for him when he is gone?

Many a man would never be heard of were it not for his obituary notice.

Eight Hours Enough.

While on a trip out of town a well-known advertising man received the following telegram from his secretary, who was leaving to get married and had arranged for what she considered a highly desirable substitute:

"Ethel lays down at the eleventh hour. What shall I do?"

To which the gentleman, in the full knowledge that the supply of efficient secretaries had not been exhausted at this one defection, replied

"Set the alarm for seven. Eight hours' sleep is enough for anyone."—Judge

The Wheat Yield Tells the Story of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For, while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions.

The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common.

Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc.

There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

Hancock County Short Course Feb. 14 to 19

A big event is coming soon—an event of significance to every farmer, farmer's wife, son and daughter in Hancock county.

It is an event that will bring "pay dirt" to every person who is big sighted enough to take advantage of it.

It is the Hancock county winter short course and farmers' week at Klemme, February 14th to 19th.

During that week the town will be turned over to the service of the farmers. The biggest men in agriculture in the country will be here to tell the farmers of their life long work and experience in their special lines.

Best methods of farming, backed up by experience, told in plain, understandable English—that's what every farmer wants to hear. That's exactly what he will get at Klemme, February 14-19. But that's not all.

There will be a chance to meet fellow farmers, talk things over with them heart to heart, and learn first hand what they are doing.

Work on the farm is not heavy at this time of year. A more remunerative vacation could not be taken than this week of learning. Plans ought to be made now. The farmer who comes to Klemme will return home a better farmer, a bigger producer and a wiser man.

Tickets are now being offered for sale, purchase one or more when you have the opportunity.

Remember—February 14th to 19th.

ENDS KIDNEY AND BLADDER TROUBLES

Few Doses Stops Backache, Relieves Rheumatic Pains and Bladder Disorders

It is no longer necessary for any one to suffer with backaching, kidney trouble, have disagreeable bladder and urinary disorders to contend with, or be tortured with rheumatism, stiff joints and its heart-wrenching pains, for the new discovery, Croxone, quickly and surely ends all such miseries.

Croxone is the most wonderful remedy yet devised for the cure of such troubles because it removes the cause. It is entirely different from all other remedies.

It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the clogged up pores; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid, and makes the kidneys filter and sift from the blood all the poisonous waste matter that clog the system and cause such troubles.

It matters not how long you have suffered, how old you are, or what you have used, the very principle of Croxone is such, that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. There is nothing else on earth like it.

If you suffer with pains in your back, and sides, or have any signs of kidney, bladder trouble, or rheumatism, such as puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, if you are nervous, tired, and run down, or bothered with sleep disturbing urinary disorders, Croxone will quickly relieve your misery. An original package costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if it fails in a single case.

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

Don't stay [illegible]y! Sage Tea and Sulphur [illegible] hair so naturally [illegible] nobody can tell.

You can [illegible] gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you get a 50 cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles are sold annually, [illegible] will tell you druggist here, because it darkens the hair so evenly that no one can tell it has been applied

Hair is [illegible] time [illegible] after one [illegible] application your locks become luxuriant, dark and beautiful—all dandruff, itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks are not wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur tonight, and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE— DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

PRIZE WINNING HORSES AT THE SHORT COURSE

The live stock car in connection with the Short Course at Klemme, on February 14 to 19, will contain six fine draft horses, one Shetland stallion and eight head of barrows. Three Belgian mares furnished by the horse breeding farm of R. F. French of Inwood Iowa. One of these mares won the grand championship at the Minnesota State Fair last year. She is the mother of the first prize sucking colt at the Iowa State Fair and at the Minnesota State Fair and she and her colt together won first money at both the Iowa State Fair and the Minnesota State Fair. These mares will be used in the work. [illegible] one of the mares, a three year old, won first place at the Iowa State Fair this season. The other mare has not been shown, but looks well up with the other mares in type and quality. This group of mares are unusually attractive and will add greatly to the value of the Short Course.

In addition to the mares there are two splendid road draft geldings, owned by Roy E. O'Donnell of Ames, weighing about a ton each. These horses show, in a remarkable way, the type, size and bone of horses which are desired in the large cities and which command the highest price. The Short Course student will place these horses and write their criticisms concerning them.

The Shetland stallion is a state Fair prize winner from the farm of C. B. Light, Ames, Iowa, and will furnish the work for the boys, class [illegible]

Four of the hogs are purebred Duroc Jersey barrows and four are registered Duroc Jersey red Hamp barrows. These hogs [illegible] were selected out of about 200 head [illegible] to the Short Course students during the week.

GRANVILLE JONES A RARE HUMORIST

The mark of a great orator is that he reminds you of no one else. This is true of Granville Jones. He is unique, original, always strong and delightfully interesting. The entrance of this lawyer, humorist and editor upon the Lyceum platform as a lecturer means that "a new Richmond is in the field." The man, the message and his method are all out of the ordinary and wholly different from the usual Lyceum lecture attraction.

Hon. Granville Jones

If Jones is like any man who has been in the limelight of America, it is Abraham Lincoln—tall and angular of body, always clearly logical, and yet overflowing with the richest humor. He is a typical son of the South and his ideas and utterances are as fresh as the honeysuckle and dogwood bloom of his native land. A magnetic, natural simplicity marks the manner and mental processes of the man. Like many of our great American statesmen, he has a slight strain of Indian blood in his veins, plainly traceable in his features.

From his appearance and first word upon the platform he engages the watchful and sympathetic attention of his audience. He early overcomes its mental barricade and quietly captures the citadel of its intellectual defenses, and from that time on to the close of the lecture he is supreme master of the occasion. With his fine philosophy, learned in the school of real life, and his absolutely original and natural humor, he carries his audience up to such heights of intense interest and to such sympathy with the man and his great message that one is at a loss to know whether to allow tears or laughter to express his appreciation; a mingling of both is fitting and usual when Jones speaks.

If, as the critics say, the finest literature of the world is spoken literature, then some of the most beautiful gems and striking comparisons and rich illustrations of all literature are in the speeches of Hon. Granville Jones.

I WAS BORN ON AN ILLINOIS FARM

Bill Bone is a native of Illinois. He was born on the farm, where he followed the plow, pitched hay and split wood some years after he had reached manhood. Bill learned to work the soil, as well as his father and after his parents left the farm, and Bill took to teaching school he continued to work, becoming one of the successful teachers of Menard county, Illinois. After eight years of pedagogy Bill took to the Lyceum field, where he has been a constant worker for nine years, each year growing in demand and popularity until today he stands as one among the three foremost readers of his own verse upon the platform. Bill was taught in boyhood, by his parents, to work out his own salvation, and he did. While he worked with his hands for them, he worked with his brains for Bill. He lived close to earth Mother nature saw he was natural—one of her true children and she bade him speak, and Bill answered in rhyme and just kept on rhyming until today his poetry and philosophy have been recognized and appreciated by hundreds of intellectual societies and colleges in over thirty states. His early home is not far from where Abraham Lincoln began his great career—Old Salem. This historical spot is now the home of one of the biggest assemblies in the United States—Old Salem Chautauqua. Three years ago Bill was called back to become its superintendent and platform manager. Strange as it may seem, he made good—at home and is still with them [illegible] evening [illegible] year along with his many [illegible] duties. His poems on Lincoln are said to be masterpieces and his [illegible] book of verse will be published this year.

Overland Model 75

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

Roadster $615, both f. o. b. Toledo

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3⅛-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car; the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Call, telephone or write for demonstration.

Specifications of Model 75

Pure streamline body five-passenger touring car. Finished in black with nickel and polished aluminum fittings. | 20-25 horsepower motor; cylinders cast en bloc. High-tension magneto ignition. Wheelbase 104 inches. | Electric starting and lighting. Headlight dimmers. Electric combination one-unit lighting system. | Left hand drive; center control. 34 x 4 inch tires. Demountable rims. DECLARED BAD TEETH OF CONVICT STARTED PENITENTIARY RIOTS

The Board Would Not "Come Through" For $9 to Help Buy False Set For O'Toole.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan 21 —Failure of the authorities to provide for the repair of some of the prisoners' teeth is said to have caused the disturbance among the convicts at the Anamosa reformatory two weeks ago, which culminated in an attack upon Warden McClaughry by a guard, rendered insane during the trouble, according to information received by members of the state board of control here today The board will start an investigation, it was announced

It was said that six months or more ago, Convict O'Toole, No. 2967, who is a life prisoner and has been in the reformatory more than 20 years for murder asked the authorities to provide him with a set of teeth and his request was refused because the state had made no provision for such cases Myron Clark and John Miller also serving life sentences, were said to have been refused similar requests

O'Toole in his application for dental work it was reported informed the authorities that he had 14 "snags' in his mouth and $16 92 in the prison bank He claimed to be suffering from mouth disease and bad stomach because of his inability to masticate his food properly A new set of upper and lower teeth would have cost $25, but the authorities refused to allow a bill for more than $9 and O'Toole refused to part with his savings The latter took the position that he had spent 20 years of his life in prison and as the state had received the benefit of his labor during that time, it was the duty of the state to take care of his teeth

During the last year it was reported further Clark asked for dental work, saying that he did not have one good tooth and that he was compelled to swallow prison fare without masticating it

O'Toole Clark and Miller were reported to have been ring leaders in the recent disturbances at the prison, starting the agitation because of their failure to get new teeth.

The state board of control had not fixed a definite date for beginning the investigation today, but it was expected that the inquiry would begin within the next week or so W J Dixon, chairman of the board in replying to the application of Prisoner Clark for relief recently wrote to him

"We have only a small fund for your entire institution We can only attend to simple fillings and extractions and can only spend one or two dollars on each man Your work was too much for our funds to stand

DATES ARRANGED FOR IOWA G. A. R. SESSION

Marshalltown Ia Jan 22 June 20-23 were fixed as the dates of the 50th annual encampment of the department of Iowa, G A R, at a meeting of the council of administration held here yesterday afternoon The encampment will be held in this city The dates are later in the month than usual, owing to the republican and democratic national conventions coming about the time the encampment is ordinarily held

CUMMINS SECOND CHOICE IN NORTH DAKOTA DELEGATION

Des Moines, Ia Jan 22 --As a matter of courtesy to Senator LaFollette who has a strong personal following in North Dakota, the Cummins forces will make no contest for the North Dakota delegation This arrangement is partially due to the determination of the LaFollette bureau to pull out of the Minnesota contest, having found by investigation that Minnesota is practically certain to instruct for Cummins. LaFollette bureau to pull out of the Minnesota in the national convention with only Wisconsin and North Dakota The LaFollette delegation selected in North Dakota will be strong for Cummins as second choice, thus being, for all practical purposes, a Cummins delegation Reports here that Cummins has more than an even chance of securing an instructed delegation in Nebraska, giving him the prospective backing of the strong midwestern group—Iowa South Dakota, Nebraska and Minnesota—with first choice prospects in other states and more reserve strength than any other republican candidates mentioned outside of Hughes and Roosevelt, who are more likely to back Cummins than to be receptive candidates.

FORMER DEPUTY TREASURER IS PAROLED BY GOVERNOR

Des Moines, Ia., Jan 22 —James O'Callaghan, brother of Robert O'Callaghan, former owner of the Des Moines Western league baseball team, has been paroled by Governor Clarke He has been in the penitentiary since 1911 for an attempt to rob the county treasury in March of that year The paroled man was a former deputy county treasurer

Tom Hatch, a noted criminal, was arrested and sent to the penitentiary at the same time but later escaped and was killed by a policeman in Minneapolis while attempting to rob a residence

LISBON BANKER NAMED AS FUNK'S SUCCESSOR

Des Moines Ia, Jan 22 —Willard C Stuckslager, banker, of Lisbon, Ia., was appointed a member of the state board of education to succeed A B. Funk, who resigned January 1 to become industrial commissioner. The appointment was made by Governor Clarke.

Mr Stuckslager served in all the general assemblies from the Twenty-eighth to the Thirty-fourth, and was for more than 20 years a member of the board of trustees of Cornell college. He is president of a bank at Lisbon and Mt. Vernon

WINS DOLLAR WAGER, BUT FEET ARE BADLY FROZEN

Jefferson, Ia., Jan 22. –Charles Dobsine has a pair of frozen feet and an extra dollar as the result of a wager that he could walk barefoot around the public square here with the temperature below zero. Dobsine made his wage on one of the recent days of below zero weather and bet $1 at even money that he could perform the feat. Dobsine pulled off his shoes and socks and started out bravely. The distance was four blocks, and by the time he had negotiated it the man was weak from pain, but game to finish the job. He got the dollar, but his feet are badly frostbitten

DES MOINES—Senator Kenyon, in a letter to the state veterinarian, denies he has prepared a bill for the creation of assistant secretary of agriculture. The reports said the new secretary was to have full charge of the live stock interests of the country. Senator Kenyon says such a bill is under discussion, but will probably be introduced, if at all, by a democrat.

C. J. JORDAN, PERRY, WANTS $15,000 FROM ESTATE OF MURDERER

Victim's Husband Seeks Money Compensation In Supposed Love Affair.

Perry, Ia., Jan. 22.—A case that is decidedly unusual, in which the points contested will be fought for the first time in Iowa was started in district court at Adel yesterday. It is entitled C. J Jordan vs. the J. W. Blackman estate, and is a suit for $15,000 damages.

On August 11, J. W. Blackman shot and killed Mrs. Jordan, at whose home he had been boarding for a number of years. Later he went to his own home and committed suicide. The tragedy shocked the town of DeSoto, where all parties concerned were well known.

The murder and suicide was supposed to be the culmination of a love affair.

The petition filed by C. J Jordan, husband of the murdered woman, sets out that he has been deprived of the society and help of his wife and that his two children suffered the loss of their mother. He asks that he be given judgment against Blackman s estate in the sum of $15,000

IOWA COUNTIES SECURE $1,137,766 FOR AUTOS

Des Moines Ia., Jan. 22.—Counties of Iowa received from $8,304 to $19,376 each for road improvement work in 1915 from the state automobile fund, according to a table prepared yesterday by Roy Allen, head of the automobile registration department.

The automobile fund was distributed on the basis of the number of townships in each county The number of machines in each county was not taken into consideration. The lowest sum paid any one county was $8,304, and 16 counties received this amount. Only two counties—Kossuth and Pottawattamie—received the maximum, $19,376.

The total amount distributed in 1915 was $1,137,766, on the basis of $692 to each township. The distribution was in the shape of two semi-annual installments. The state has 1,646 townships

GEORGE DUNLAP, OF AMES, NEW SIOUX COUNTY EXPERT

Orange City Ia., Jan 22 –George Dunlap, of Iowa State college, has been secured as county agent for Sioux county, and will take up his duties within a few days. Mr Dunlap has been engaged in farm extension work for several years

The movement to secure a county agent here began a year ago when a county wide meeting was held and a temporary organization was effected In the next several months work of lining up the farmers and business men back of the proposition was carried on and an annual sum of $1,800 was secured to finance the work of the county agent Farmers, the various banks and the county board of supervisors guaranteed this sum the government contributing the usual $1,200 additional

MRS. GLASGOW, SUICIDE, FORMER IOWA RESIDENT

Washington D C Jan 22 –Members of the Iowa delegation and the Iowa colony here were shocked to learn of the suicide, by shooting herself through the heart with a revolver, of Mrs Samuel L. Glasgow, who killed herself last evening soon after the funeral of her husband, General Glasgow, formerly colonel of the Twenty-third Iowa regiment. Mrs Glasgow will be buried at Arlington and her husband's ashes will be placed in her coffin A number of members of the Iowa delegation will attend the funeral. In letters to her brother and sister, Charles Schlichter, of Chicago, and Mrs. Charles Dietts, of Burlington, Ia., Mrs. Glasgow asked forgiveness and said she could not live without her husband.

ALLEN TO RUN AGAIN.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 22.—W. S. Allen, secretary of state, yesterday announced officially that he will be a candidate for a third term in the office he now holds.

DES MOINES—The grip epidemic in this community has brought the sessions of the district court to a standstill. So many of the original jury panel were excused on account of being afflicted with the grip that it has been found necessary to summon a new panel of 40 men. Until these are ready for service the court business will be largely suspended The grip has been very widespread in this vicinity of late and several deaths have been attributed to it.

CEDAR RAPIDS—"Hi" Aldrich, pioneer Iowa railroad man, died here Wednesday, aged 85, after a brief illness, of grip. After joining the rush to the California gold fields in 1849, he became a pony dispatch rider among western boom towns. He helped survey the Illinois Central railroad across Iowa and was mail clerk on the first train operated by that road into Sioux City.

SUTHERLAND—The Hyland Rural community, south of here, will have its annual short course in agriculture and domestic science February 3 to 5. Hyland is one of the best organized rural communities in Iowa, and is doing excellent work in keeping the boys interested in scientific agriculture.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

SHIPPERS MUST OBSERVE REGULATIONS TO RECOVER

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 21.—The supreme court today held that live stock shippers cannot recover from railroads for damages to stock unless they file claims for damages with some representatives of the company before the damaged animals are allowed to mingle with other animals in the stock yards. Neither can they recover when suit is started more than six months after alleged damages. The case came up from Van Buren county.

NO OPPOSITION EXPECTED TO DEEMER AND EVANS

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 21.—Horace E. Deemer, of Red Oak, yesterday began his campaign for reelection as a member of the supreme court by sending out nomination papers to supporters of each of the 99 counties of the state.

The nonpartisan judiciary law requires candidates for the supreme bench to file nomination papers bearing signatures of residents of each county in the state. If a nonpartisan judiciary candidate fails to file a petition from any county, his name will not be placed on the ballot in that county.

It is understood that Justice Deemer will have no opposition for reelection. Justice W. D. Evans, of Hampton, who began circulating papers several days ago, will also have a clear field for reelection, it is reported

COUNCIL BLUFFS WOMAN FOUND FROZEN TO DEATH

Council Bluffs, Ia., Jan. 21.—Mrs. Matilda C. Bickford, 75 years old, was found frozen to death in her home in West Council Bluffs, Monday night. The woman was in bed and her pet cat, still alive, was snuggled against her cold body.

There was a stove in the room and fuel for it, but the woman evidently had lapsed into unconsciousness and died while in that state. Physicians said she had been dead probably two days.

DES MOINES MINISTER GETS "BLACK HAND" THREAT

Des Moines, Ia., Jan 21.—A threat of death unless he ceases his attacks on Des Moines loan sharks was received today by Rev. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational church here. Dr Kirbye has been unrelenting in his recent utterances against the loan sharks, and in his efforts to secure the establishment of a Morris bank, designed to eliminate the loan shark companies in Des Moines.

The minister declared that he is not frightened, and that he intends to keep up his attacks on the loan sharks. The note was unsigned

PALACE HOTEL, IDA GROVE, NOT CLOSED BY SHERIFF

In a telephone statement to The Tribune today, Wilson Bender, landlord of the Palace hotel at Ida Grove, Ia., denies that the hotel was closed yesterday on a sheriff's writ of attachment. A writ was issued, he says, but was not served, and the hotel and picture show operated by him still are in regular operation. He expresses confidence that the claims which led to the writ of attachment will be adjusted today, and insists that there is no immediate danger of Ida Grove's only hotel being closed or crippled in its operation

INDICATIONS OF SUICIDE IN DEATH OF LEMARS MAN

LeMars, Ia., Jan 21.—Jesse White, aged about 35 years, shot himself last evening, at his home here. Whether the shooting was accidental or with suicidal intent is not fully determined. A passing peddler, attracted by the noise, went into the house and found White bleeding to death from a gunshot wound in his left breast. White was conveyed to a hospital, but died a few minutes later His wife was away at the time. He leaves three little children White had been out of work, and was despondent, which supports the suicide theory.

RETIRED FARMER'S WIFE STARTS SUIT FOR DIVORCE

LeMars, Ia., Jan 21.—Mrs. Minnie C. Grau, wife of Leonard Grau, a wealthy, retired farmer, has brought suit for divorce against her husband, on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment She alleges he has often beaten her and thrown dishes at her

Ida Wilson's married happiness was brief, lasting less than a month. She sues A. B. Wilson, to whom she was married on July 8, 1915, for divorce. He left her on August 3, and she claims he is living with a woman in Sioux City.

DEMOCRATS FIRST TO SECURE SUPPLIES FOR PRIMARY OF APRIL 10

Question of Instructing Will Be Submitted—Convention Feature Vague.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 20.—The democratic central committee yesterday secured from the secretary of state a full supply of blanks necessary for the presidential preference primary to be held April 10. The democrats are the first to begin the circulation of petitions for this primary.

The blanks furnished by the state provide for filing of nomination petitions for national committeeman, delegates at large and district delegates to the national convention, and for county delegates. The name of the candidate for president and vice president will be placed on the primary ballot by the filing of affidavit of candidacy by the candidates.

Two questions will be submitted to the voters of each party at the presidential primary. They are:

The question which is still troubling state officials is with regard to the state convention which is provided in the presidential preference primary law This convention is separate from the state convention of each party which has power to nominate candidates if no nomination results for any office in the regular state primary. Politicians are asking who will call the presidential state convention, and what the convention will do after it convenes. It is said that the convention will have power to pass resolutions and do other things necessary to preserve party organization.

Attorney General Cosson will not render an opinion with regard to the details of this law unless officially requested to do so.

DISTRICT ORGANIZATION FOR SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGN

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 20.—The Iowa equal suffrage campaign is to be conducted by workers in charge of congressional districts, according to a plan which has just been worked out here by the executive board of the Iowa Equal Suffrage association. The plan has the endorsement of the national association, and will be put into effect at once. The counties in the various districts have already been organized and county chairmen appointed. Each county chairman is to appoint her township chairmen.

All of the congressional district assignments have been announced except polls of the Seventh and Fifth districts, which were to be made within the next week or so. The assignments by districts so far are:

First, Mrs. Helen B. McDowell; Second, Miss Mable Lodge, Third, Miss Helen Baker, Fourth, Mrs. Elsie V. Benedict; Sixth, Miss Alice B. Curtis, Eighth, Miss Grace Ballard; Ninth, Miss Florence Leach, Tenth, Mrs. J. G. Grundy, Eleventh, Mrs. Maud McCreery

SENATOR J. H. ALLEN SELLS STOCK IN POCAHONTAS BANK

Pocahontas, Ia., Jan. 20.--Senator J. H. Allen, republican candidate for governor, has sold a controlling interest in the First National bank here to J. E. Anderson of Hardy, Humboldt county. Mr. Allen retains an interest in the bank and will continue as president of the institution. Mr. Anderson has been elected as active vice president and will move to Pocahontas at an early date. The First National bank has capital stock of $50,000 and surplus of $10,000 The sale to Mr. Anderson was made by George A. Stewart of Sioux City, manager of the bank stock department of the Farmers Loan & Trust company. Mr. Allen, in making the deal, was influenced principally by a desire to be relieved of some of the detailed burdens and responsibilities of the bank management in order to have time for other affairs.

ONLY ONE SERIOUS CASE FROM WRECK NEAR GAZA

Cherokee, Ia., Jan. 20.—Of those injured in the wreck on the Illinois Central, near Gaza, yesterday, only one, Conductor O. G. Sage, is reported to be dangerously hurt. He is said to be injured internally and his condition is reported as critical. The wrecking train from Fort Dodge brought physicians and emergency supplies and gave first aid treatment to those needing immediate attention. Outside of four or five cases all of the injuries were of a minor nature.

Passengers and baggage were transferred around the wreck zone yesterday, but it is the expectation to have the track in shape today to permit of through movement of trains.

FUNERAL OF MEXICAN VICTIM.

Danville, Ia., Jan. 18.—The funeral of R. H. Simmons, one of the Americans killed at Santa Yzabel, Chihuahua, last week, was held here today. The body arrived last night.

IOWA CITY—Iowa university's college of pharmacy is manufacturing aspirin—a drug that the European war has rendered almost unpurchasable, and, if to be bought, marked at almost prohibitive prices. It supplies the university hospital. The local laboratory turns out the aspirin at $5.20 per pound It costs $12 50 in the market. Inasmuch as the normal price is $6, the university pharmacists may continue to manufacture all aspirin needed here, even after the war prices drop.

DENY MONTENEGRINS HAVE RESUMED STRIFE

Austria Insists Negotiations Are In Progress—Allied Sources Refute Claim.

Vienna, Jan. 22. (via London) Jan. 21.—It is announced here that the press report that Montenegro has discontinued peace negotiations are unfounded It is stated that as yet the laying down of arms demanded by Austria has not been completed by the Montenegrins and that until this is done by all the Montenegrin troops, peace conditions will not be discussed. The conditions have not yet been stated, as the Austro-German peace commissioner Otto, formerly Austrian minister at Cettinje is still enroute for that city and arrived at Serajevo today. It is added that several days will still be required before all the Montenegrin troops will come in from the hills and surrender

Only then are the actual negotiations to begin. What the Austro-Hungarian terms will be, it is stated here, cannot yet be published, but they will include the retention of Mount Lovcen.

HOSTILITIES ARE RESUMED

Paris, Jan. 21.—The Geneva correspondent of the Temps says that according to dispatches from Vienna an active renewal of military operations has been undertaken by the Austrians in Montenegro. General Koevess army is in movement, according to these advices, and one Austro-Hungarian division is advancing in the general Cettinje-Podgoritza direction, while another is moving south along the Adriatic coast toward Antivari Other detachments of less strength are reported to be in Albania, within 15 kilometers of Scutari.

WILL FIGHT TO END

Paris, Jan. 21.—The Montenegrin consul in Paris makes the official announcement that all negotiations between Montenegro and Austria have been broken off and that Montenegro has decided to fight to the bitter end

RIVERS INUNDATE ILLINOIS TOWNS

Chicago, Jan. 22.—Rivers throughout northern Illinois, swollen by the rain which fell almost continuously throughout the night overflowed their banks and inundated a score of cities and villages. No loss of life was reported, but property damage was estimated at several hundred thousand dollars.

All through the valley of the Desplaines river the water spread far over the lowlands reaching its height in the neighborhood of Joliet where that city and several villages were flooded. Sheets of water spread over the western suburbs of Chicago and boats and hastily constructed rafts were used Aurora and Elgin on the Fox river and intermediate towns of St. Charles, Batavia and Geneva reported high water and much damage.

Southeastern Iowa and northeastern Missouri were also in the rain belt which came up from Texas.

Flood waters sweeping down the Fox river and the Illinois river drove residents in low lying districts in Ottawa, Marseilles and Utica from their home. Ice jams at tortuous points in the river dammed the waters and threatened bridges.

Six of the seven artesian wells which furnish Auroras water supply had been cut off at noon by inundations from the Fox river. A warning was sent throughout the Fox river valley advising to prepare for high water, which might sweep away their homes.

At Rockford, Ill., a rapid rise of the Rock river and its confluents flooded the east side of the city. One school was closed because of the inability of the pupils to reach the schoolhouse Firemen and policemen were busy assisting families in the inundated district to higher grounds on boats and rafts.

Many residents unable to obtain boats or rafts sought safety in upper stories of their houses where they watched the water swirling about their houses and rising a foot an hour. Every policeman was put on flood-duty and scores of volunteers aided in the rescue work.

Joliet, Ill., Jan. 21.—Floods caused by heavy rains and the resultant overflow of the Desplaines river engulfed Joliet today, driving 1,000 persons in the lower parts of the city from their homes. Water ran five feet deep in the streets.

Rockdale, a manufacturing town southwest of here, reported six feet of water in the streets and business suspended.

SOTHERN WILL RETIRE FROM STAGE IN SPRING

New York, Jan. 21.—E. H. Sothern will retire from the stage at the end of the present season, he announced last night. With Mrs. Sothern, who was Julia Marlowe, he will go to Warwickshire, England, which he will make his permanent home. Mrs. Sothern retired from the stage several years ago on account of ill health.

Mr Sothern was born in New Orleans in 1859 and made his first appearance on the stage in New York in 1879.

BANDIT VICTIM TURNS BURGLAR; IS SET FREE

Oakland, Cal., Jan. 31.—Charles Gordon Bishop, a mining man and brother of a Vancouver, B. C., banker, tried in the superior court here on a charge of burglary, and who pleaded in extenuation that he had lost all his property when bandit raids compelled him to flee from Mexico, was at liberty today on probation. Judge Frank B. Ogden in releasing Bishop declared "that he was a victim of America's Mexican policy." Bishop's wife, to obtain food for whom the defendant said he had turned burglar, was Carmen Corrall, daughter of Ramon Corrall, a member of the cabinet of Porforio Diaz, former president of Mexico

EW ENGLAND MAY BOOST M'CALL IF HUGHES WON'T RUN

ew Hampshire Republican Na tional Committeeman Says Massachusetts Governor Is Man to Back.

EEKS' SUPPORT IS WEAK

W. Estabrook Finds Bay tate Senator Cannot Command Much Strength In East.

Boston, Jan. 22.—If the efforts of the republican leaders to "smoke out" Justice Charles E. Hughes elicit from him a refusal to accept the presidential nomination, New England republicans may be urged to concentrate their strength in support of Samuel McCall, governor of Massachusetts. The candidacy of Senator Weeks apparently has not met the favorable reception his supporters anticipated. F. Estabrook, republican national committeeman from New Hampshire, while here gave out the following statement:

"New England should be for McCall but not for Weeks. We might well face the facts. New England is not taking Senator Weeks seriously. His canvassers have met with emphatic rebuffs in Connecticut. They are only tolerated in Rhode Island, with the whispered comment that it is, of course, only a compliment. In spite of persistent and insistent overtures of the Weeks people running through many months, Maine insists on sending an uninstructed delegation. Vermont has failed to respond to the Weeks movement. I read the other day in the Montpelier correspondence of the Republican the following comments: 'It is becoming more and more apparent that Vermont is a Hughes state. Senator Weeks has some friends, but probably Governor McCall would command a larger following than the junior senator from Massachusetts.' This accords with the opinion of every dispassionate observer in this section. In my own New Hampshire, of the eight delegates upon whom agreement has been reached, not more than two of them are Weeks men. One is a neighbor of his in Lancaster whom we all like, and the other is George H. Moses, of Concord, whose political activities have pointed in a singularly direct line. New Hampshire is not for Weeks. It would be for McCall. It is proud of his record and believes him of genuine presidential size.

Where Weeks Is Weak.

"And Massachusetts is by no means solid behind Captain Weeks' candidacy. Only on the theory that he will have no opposition in the spring primaries would the leaders of the party consent, in my judgment, to his remaining as a candidate. If there should be opposition to him by McCall or by almost anybody else, the result could not be in doubt. There are times in the world when it is somebody's duty to tell the truth and I feel it is my duty to tell it at this juncture. Only four states in the union have a larger representation than Massachusetts, and not one has as large a representation as New England. We have a right to be heard in a national convention. We can be heard with McCall. We can be heard with a candidate whom the republican leaders would never think for a moment of nominating. I have no prejudice as a man of many years' business activity against a stock broker and promoter, but it requires a more vivid imagination than I possess to see the republican party going before the electorate of Iowa and Minnesota, for example, with a candidate of this occupational background or of Captain Weeks' known affiliations in Boston finance.

Urges Leaders to Agree.

"No daily newspaper published in Boston is giving him any real support with the exception of the Herald and I do not see in its columns any evidence that it believes he will be nominated or if nominated he would be elected. All the other papers in New England that I see reflect the same sentiment. The Burlington Free Press, the greatest paper in Vermont, asked in an editorial caption the other day: 'Who promised Vermont to Weeks, anyway?' The Manchester Union, New Hampshire's great newspaper, takes no interest in the Weeks candidacy. The Sprifigfield Republican, ditto; the Providence Journal, ditto; the great papers of Maine, ditto. Was there ever a time in the history of the country when a candidacy was actively pushed which was so bereft of newspaper and other support at home? We can all see these things. Is it not time that somebody said something like this in the interest of common sense, which is the greatest of all virtues?.

"People are just beginning to realize that the candidate New England wants and that the country is willing to accept from the east is the man who united the republican and progressive parties in Massachusetts this year. As the members of the national committee from the state of New Hampshire, I am in close touch with republican leaders in every part of the country, and I find the general view among them is that if we people of the east will reach an agreement on the man of sound republicanism who will also be satisfactory to the progressives, and whose nomination will have adequate promise of sucess at the polls, the rest of the country will be only too glad to take him. Now who is that man? My informants and associates all say McCall.

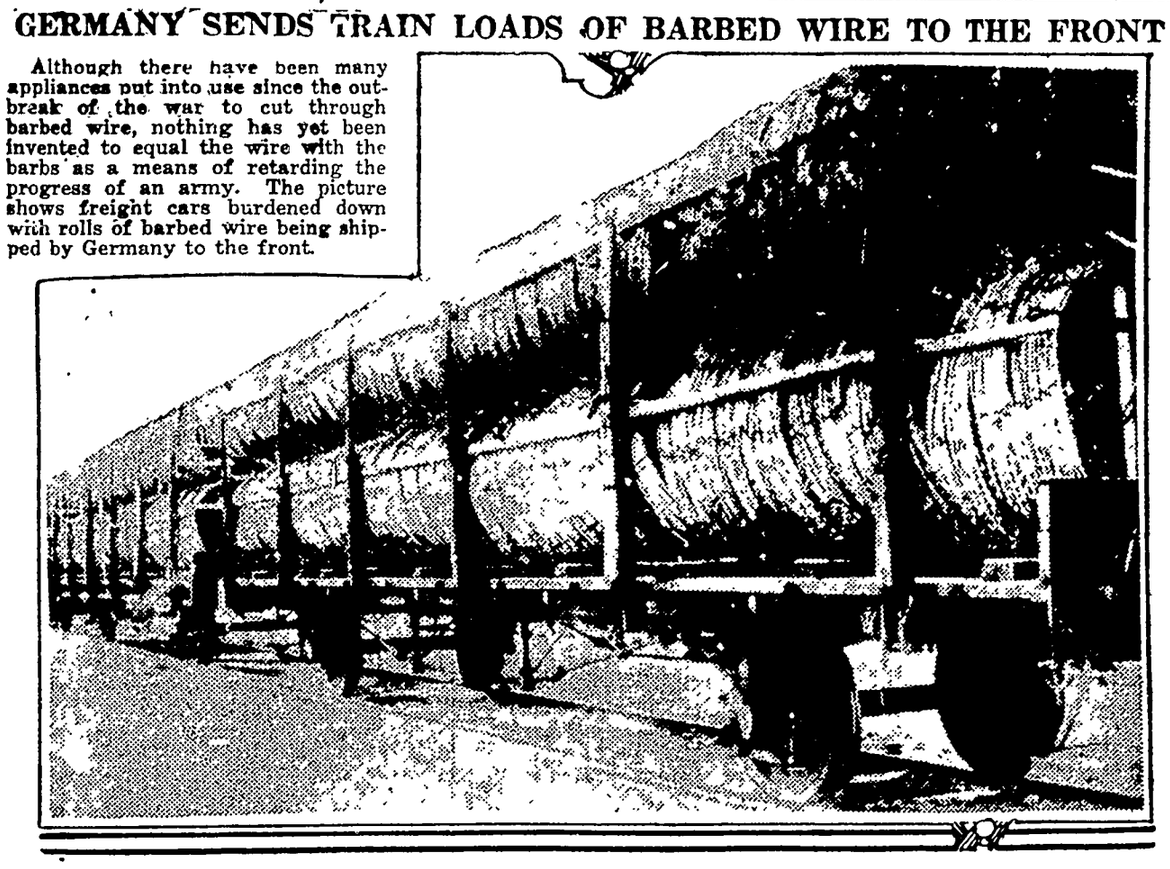
ANKERS WANT "GREEN BACK" BILLS RETIRED

Washington, Jan. 21.—A committee of the American Bankers' association has proposed a plan for the retirement and cancellation of the $346,000,000 outstanding treasury notes, commonly called "green backs." The plan proposed a bond issue of $200,000,000, to replace an equal amount of green backs, the remainder to be taken care of by the $150,000,000 gold fund in the treasury, specifically reserved to protect the notes.

The question has been brought to the attention of the governors of the federal reserve banks, who, as yet, have not approved it. Its backers are expected to present it before congress at the present session.

GERMANY SENDS TRAIN LOADS OF BARBED WIRE TO THE FRONT

Although there have been many appliances put into use since the outbreak of the war to cut through barbed wire, nothing has yet been invented to equal the wire with the barbs as a means of retarding the progress of an army. The picture shows freight cars burdened down with rolls of barbed wire being shipped by Germany to the front.



WILLIAMS REPLIES TO SMITH ATTACK

Would Not Kill One Human For Property He Says—Can't Bluff John Bull Anyhow, He Thinks.

Washington, Jan. 22—Following Senator Hoke Smith's attack upon British interference with neutral rights, in the Senate yesterday, Senator John Sharp Williams held the Senate in rapt attention for more than an hour while he replied to the senator from Georgia.

The allies, he said, would not be bullied by the United States "unless they were to stand still like a lot of whipped curs while warring for life, liberty and independence," and yield to the congress of the United States, backed by an army of 90,000 soldiers and the fourth navy in the world. He thought it sufficient for this government to protest firmly against violation of commercial rights and to await deliberation of a calmer people for restitution, and asserted that he would not "kill one human being on the face of the globe for mere property," unless, after a belligerent had calmed down, it should develop that American rights were coldly and deliberately defied.

Dollars vs. Humanity.

"I don't want to see Dixie put into the attitude of caring just as much about property as the lives of the women and children sent to their graves in the ocean," he continued. "Until the question as to the loss of women and children is settled, I do not intend to nag the president, or this administration, and I would not nag a republican administration about the loss of property. My people are not ready to put cotton and human life on the same basis."

Senator Williams said he would lodge a protest against the violation of commercial rights and later collect damages in much the same way that Lincoln did in the Geneva awards.

Senator Hitchcock, democrat, asked Senator Williams what he would do to assure respect for United States mails, declaring Great Britain has seized 63 bags of first class American mail, bound direct for Rotterdam "and had not consented to render justice yet."

"What the senator wants me to say is that I would declare war against Great Britain and cause a lot of Irish, English, Welsh, Scotch, Canadians and Americans to be killed because my mail had been interfered with, but I shan't say it," replied Senator Williams.

Neutral Rights and Cheese Moon.

"I resent every act of belligerents that violates our rights," continued Senator Williams, "but I don't care enough about it to shed human blood over it. As to British censors handing over our trade letters to British business men I have doubts. It strikes me that England is a little too busy at war right now defending her life to be engaged in catching on to trade secrets. We have 3,000 miles of undefended Canadian border. I don't want my boys to go up there killing Canadian boys and Canadian boys coming down here killing our boys, just because somebody stopped somebody's mail on its way to Norway."

"Suppose the seizures went on indefinitely?" demanded Senator Hitchcock.

"Suppose the moon was made of green cheese," returned Senator Williams.

"But they are being made indefinitely," persisted Mr. Hitchcock.

"They are not," replied Senator Williams, "the God's truth is—no I will not say. Even the truth about some things cannot be told in the Senate."

GETS 100 PER CENT PROFIT FROM 480-ACRE FARM

Breckenridge, Minn., Jan. 21.—The King Land & Loan company, of this city, has just completed a sale of what is known as the Ford farm, located five miles from Breckenridge. This farm, consisting of 480 acres, was sold to an Iowa man at $125 an acre. The new owner expects to make a thoroughbred stock farm out of the place, and will take possession March 1. There are 160 acres of fine clover on the farm. This same farm changed hands just a few years ago at $65 an acre. The present sale is a good illustration of the rapid advance in land values that has taken place in this vicinity.

SPY OFFERS TO GIVE UP.

New York, Jan. 21.—Capt. William M. Offely, chief of the local bureau of investigation of the department of justice, today received a letter from Ignatius T. Trebich Lincoln, the confessed German spy, who escaped from a United States deputy marshal last Saturday, in which the writer offers to surrender at once, if guaranteed immunity from prosecution from the forgery charge which caused his arrest last August

CHINESE CORONATION POSTPONED BY YUAN

Enthronement Indefinitely Delayed By Revolution In Yunnan Provinces.

Peking, Jan 22—The coronation of Yuan Shi Kai as emperor of China has been postponed indefinitely The reason given officially is the uprising in southern China.

The foreign office notified the various legations today that the Chinese government had decided that the enthronement would take place early in February, but that Yuan Shi Kai had issued an order canceling the arrangements in view of the disturbances in Yunnan province. No intimation was given as to when the enthronement will take place.

Government officials estimate that not more than six months will be required to quiet the disturbances in the south.

POWER MONOPLY IN GRASP OF FEW

Eighteen Corporations Control Water Power of America—Six Concerns Hold More Than Fourth.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 22.—Eighteen corporations control more than one-half the total water power used in public service operations in the United States, while six corporations control more than one-fourth, the secretary of agriculture states in a report submitted to the Senate today in response to a resolution of the last congress.

The character of this control, the report states, is definite and complete. Further relationships through common directors and principal officers are disclosed and tabulated. These data show, according to the report, "a marked tendency to association of community of interests, particularly between the principal holding companies."

Public service corporations now own 90 per cent of all the primary power in the mountain and Pacific states, while three years ago they owned from 50 to 54 per cent. The extent of concentration is greatest at present in the western states, but in the 10 years prior to 1912 the rate of concentration was highest in the South Atlantic states. The potential water power resources of the country, the report places at a minimum 27,934,000 horsepower and the maximum at 53,907,000. Private power interests reported in 1912 a total investment of more than $2,000,000,000, as represented by the item "cost of construction," averaging $301 per horsepower.

CONGRESS URGED TO LIMIT IMMIGRATION

Americans Are Driven Out By Ignorant Foreigners Wherever They Congregate.

Washington. D. C., Jan. 22.—Only by limiting immigration can high standards of living and good wages be maintained among American workmen, Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and Representative Burnett declared in advocating the literacy test bill today before the House immigration committee.

Representative Burnett, who is chairman of the committee, and introducer of the bill, declared that of 2,500,000 foreigners in the United States only about 35,000 were attempting to learn English. Ignorant and unambitious, he declared, they work cheaply, live in squalor and create conditions that drive American workmen from a community. To such causes, he insisted, were due the recent Youngstown, Ohio, riots.

"A workman told me he left Youngstown for no other reason than the contaminating influences that these foreign laborers created there," Mr. Burnett said. "And what decent, self respecting American, Irishman or German would stand for such conditions?"

The farm calls for the foreign laborer, but he does not answer, John H. Kimble, national executive representative of the Farmers' National Grange, said in supporting the measure.

CAPTURE OF VILLA IS NOT CONFIRMED

Reports From Various Sources, However, Maintain Bandit Has Been Seized By Carranza Men.

El Paso, Tex., Jan. 21.—Denial from Carranza official sources that Francisco Villa had been captured, as reported from Chihuahua, was supplemented today by statements from Villa partisans here alleged to be based on reliable information that he and several followers were safe in the Tarahumare mountains, west of Guerrero.

El Paso, Tex., Jan 22.—Officials of the de facto Mexican government here had not received confirmation of the reported capture of Francisco Villa. A positive denial that the rebel leader had been taken near San Geronimo was received from Luis Herrera, a Carranza commander at Chihuahua City Mexican officials were engaged in an effort to secure further information concerning the basis for the rumor.

The extremely circumstantial details of the reported capture led well informed persons here to believe it, but against this phase stood the telegraphed denial by Gen. Luis Herrera, that the capture had not been effected.

A message asking that Villa be brought to Juarez to be executed at the race track was ready for filing by Mexican officials in case the report of his capture proved authentic. Efforts today to get in communication with any of the three commanders who were said to have surrounded the outlaw, were ineffective.

Officials here and at Washington were inclined to discount the magnitude of the event as seen by the general public. Villa, it was said, was a troublesome outlaw, but nothing more, and would be so dealt with. He was not conceded the glamor which was his in the public mind when he fought at Torreon and worked his way toward Mexico City with an unbeaten and confident army. His present following was said to be inconsiderable and dwindling and Carranza officials refused to concede that he might rise again to prominence, as he did after he was outlawed by Porforio Diaz for the killing of an army officer, who had run away with his sister.

Mexican Consul Andreas Garcia, also reported the capture of General Villa. His advices stated that the capture was effected by Maximiano Marquez, who recently also captured Gen. Jose Rodriguez, one of Villa's generals.

A message announcing Villa's capture also has been received at the office of the American Smelting and Refining company.

Messages from Chihuahua City confirming reports of the capture of Villa stated that a number of bandits who participated in the Santa Ysabel massacre were also captured and are being brought to Chihuahua City for execution.

Consul Garcia explained that his confirmation of the report of the capture of Villa was based on unofficial, but reliable information. He telegraphed at once to Chihuahua City, asking immediate offical confirmation on the part of Gen. Jacinto Trevino, the military chief of the northern states.

Reports received here indicated that Villa had been hemmed in a triangle formed in the mountains. Col. Maximiano Marquez was on the southwest point, marching from Madera; Col. Jose Alexondo was closing in from the northwest, while General Cavazos advanced from the southeast.

AMERICAN LOCOMOTIVE COMPANY PROSPEROUS

New York, Jan. 21.—The half yearly statement of the American Locomotive company, which was issued today, shows an increase in gross earnings of $9,039,630 for the six months ending December 31, 1915, as compared with the corresponding period in 1914. The total for the last six months of 1915 was $14,398,459. The statement also shows that the company had on its books on January 1, 1916, unfilled orders amounting to $52,240,000.

MUCH WHEAT UNSOLD.

Portland, Ore., Jan. 21.—Figures compiled by grain exporters show that approximately 12,000,000 bushels of 1915 wheat remains in the Pacific northwest unmarketed, due to the practical impossibility of getting ships or sailing vessels to carry it to foreign markets. About 40 vessels would be required to move the wheat still on hand

TEUTONS HAVE TAKEN 3,000,000 PRISONERS

Booty Also Includes 10,000 Cannon and 40,000 Machine Guns.

London Jan. 22.—An Amsterdam dispatch to the Central News says that the total booty of the Teutonic allies during 17 months of war is summed up in Vienna as follows:

Nearly 3,000,000 prisoners, 10,000 guns and 40,000 machine guns, while 470,000 square kilometers of enemy territory has been occupied

LYNCHERS STRING UP FIVE NEGROES

Albany, Ga., Jan 22—Five negroes, taken from the Worth county jail at Sylvester last night, were hanged to one limb of a tree on the outskirts of Starkville, some time during the night. The bodies containing many bullet holes were cold when found this morning

At about 10 o'clock last night Sheriff L. A. Potts and his jailer, at Sylvester, were awakened by four or five men, who announced that they had captured a negro and wanted to place him in jail They were admitted bearing a negro bound with ropes. Suspecting nothing, the officers watched the men as they calmly loosened the bonds. Suddenly the visitors seized the officers and took the keys to the cells. Several more automobiles appeared bearing other men, who joined those in the jail. The negroes were rushed out, bundled into the machines and started north. The officers were unable to telephone ahead to stop the lynching party, because several wires had been cut.

Lee county citizens found the bodies of the five men hanging to one limb within full view from the road. Apparently they had been strung up and then became targets for the men who had taken them from jail.

Four of the victims were of one family—Felix Lake and his three sons, Frank, Dewey and Major. The fifth was Rodius Seamore.

Moreland was killed at the home of Felix Lake, when he went there to arrest a negro. It was reported that more than one of those in the house shot him and all were arrested later.

The negroes were being held in connection with the killing of Sheriff Moreland, of Lee county, during the Christmas holidays.

The party cut all wires leading north from Sylvester and the fate of the negroes was not definitely known until hours after they had been lynched.

Sylvester, Ga., Jan 21.—Six negroes were taken from the jail here last night by a lynching party. They were being held as suspects in connection with the killing of Sheriff Moreland, of Lee county. A seventh negro, James Keith, whom the authorities believe they have the strongest case against, was removed from the jail in time to save him.

Several automobiles appeared at the jail last night carrying several men who overpowered the jailer, took the six negroes and started northward toward Saaser, Terrell county, where the sheriff, Moreland, is buried.

FOIL BOMB PLOT TO WRECK GREAT BRIDGE

Man Arrested In New York Planned Outrage With Explosive, Charge.

New York, Jan. 22.—The police announced that with the arrest last night of Michael E. Grasiano, while carrying a suitcase containing a bomb, they had thwarted a plan to blow up the Brooklyn bridge or the new municipal building.

Grasiano was arrested after he had been trailed from the municipal building to the bridge promenade.

The bomb was found to be constructed so as to explode with tremendous force.

"The bomb squad" also arrested Leonardo Di Vizeo in connection with the case.

RESENT SEARCH OF VON PAPEN'S BELONGINGS

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Jan. 21.—Another statement in defense of Capt. Franz von Papen, former German military attache at Washington, was made today by the Overseas News agency, which says:

"A wireless dispatch from England says that the letters, checks and vouchers which were taken from Captain von Papen by the British at Falmouth, in violation of international law are to be published. It is to be hoped they will be reproduced in fac simile because it will then be evident that Captain von Papen never made a payment to Warner Horn, who is accused of having attempted to blow up a Canadian railway bridge."

Referring to the British contention that von Papen's safe conduct did not include personal belongings, the agency says:

"Germany will regret that it was not known before, for in that case the archives of the British embassy might have been seized after the beginning of the war."

HAMMERSTEIN BANKRUPT.

New York, Jan. 21.—Oscar Hammerstein, former grand opera impressario, was adjudged a bankrupt today by an order signed by Federal Judge Mayer. The order which directed him to appear for examination before a referee follows his failure to answer an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, filed January 4, by creditors.

STRONGER FOREIGN POLICY IMPOSSIBLE AT PRESENT, CLAIM

Nation Cannot Be Too Assertive Without Army and Navy to Back It Up, Says Henry A. Wood.

ATTACKS ADMINISTRATION

National Security League Told American Public Opinion Is Being Roused to Needs of Military.

Washington, Jan 22.—Attacks on the administration's foreign policies and pointed references to the "utter state of unpreparedness of the army and the navy" and the awakening of public opinion on the subject of adequate defense were features of addresses by prominent speakers today before the National Security league.

An arraignment of the foreign policies of the administration was made by Henry A. Wise Wood, chairman of the conference committee on national defense, New York.

"It may be said with accuracy that we have no foreign policy at the moment," he said. With the destruction of our citizens while upon foreign merchant ships or upon our own merchant vessels, we offer no armed interference nor do we offer armed interference when our citizens, while upon foreign soil are destroyed, their wives and children outraged, their property confiscated. Furthermore, it is to be doubted whether at the moment we are willing to enforce by armed intervention such of our domestic policies as are inimical to the interests of foreign nations.

Sees New National Spirit.

He said there were, however, certain indications that "we are about to experience a nationwide reaction of public opinion which cannot fail to crystalize into a national spirit, finding expression in a different code of policies dealing with foreign affairs in order to sustain which the United States, if need be, will declare war.

Mr. Wood said the United States should formulate a naval policy that would bear the full brunt, if necessary, of a coalition of powers. He advocated a naval policy that would "maintain at all times in the Atlantic a force superior to that of Germany, in the Pacific a force superior to Japan, protect the Panama canal against capture or destruction by land or by sea or injury by air."

"The present machinery of our government is utterly unfitted to deal with our major naval problems," declared Charles G. Curtis, of New York, a manufacturer of ship turbines." Congress should follow the advice of the general board and adopt its program without delay. The cooperation of the ship builders should be enlisted, and both private and government yards should be put into condition to build all the warships necessary with the greatest possible rapidity."

"No Brains," Says Meyer.

George Von L. Meyer, former secretary of the navy, declared "The fundamental defect of the navy department is that it has no brain: no competent military organization charged with the preparation of the fleets for war and with their conduct in war, and, in consequence, the navy is being built and administered on a peace basis and is not being efficiently prepared for war service.

"We add to our difficulties," he continued, "by being the only civilized nation that has not a budget system. He urged the fortification of the Panama canal and the additional protection of it by the navy, a definite navy building program, abolition of useless navy yards, necessary increase of personnel with the increase of tonnage, establishment of a national council of defense, prompt organization of a naval reserve of over 25,000 men and creation of a navy general staff"

P. H. W. Ross, president of the National Marine league, advocated "an American merchant marine, owned by Americans, manned by Americans, and at the beck and call of our government."

Henry Woodhouse, of the Aero club of America, declared that by spending $25,000,000 the United States could be made fifth in aeronautic equipment and still would be ranked by Great Britain, France, Germany and Russia. The backbone of an aerial naval reserve could be created, he said, for $5,000,000 by increasing the army and navy equipment and equipping the national guard.

Miss Mabel Boardman, of the executive committee of the American Red Cross, made a plea for support in the organization's part of the national preparedness—readiness to care for those who suffer in defense of their country.

PROGRESSIVE FACTION OF PARTY TO ORGANIZE

Washington, Jan. 21.—Eastern papers today give much attention to the recent series of conferences of progressive republicans, including Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Borah, Norris, Sterling and others, with a view to getting a progressive platform at Chicago and securing progressive legislation. Another important conference will be held Saturday night at a dinner of the progressive republicans.

CONVICTS ROB DEPOT AND PROCURE RIFLES

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 21.—Convicts who escaped from the state penal farm at Cummins, 65 miles from here Wednesday night, last night robbed the depot at Moscow, Ark., 15 miles from Cummins and secured arms and ammunition shipped to a hardware store at that place.

Twenty-three convicts escaped. Only four have been captured.

COMPLAINTS ARE HEARD.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 21.—The delegates to the convention of the United Mine Workers of America devoted most of today to hearing the report of the grievance committee on appeals from the rank and file of the organization. The complaints dealt largely with alleged injustices done individuals or local unions by officers, district or national, or by district or state organizations within the union.

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hair has disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Start Tomorrow and Keep It Up Every Morning

We're not here long, so let's make our stay agreeable. Let us live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, and look well. what a glorious condition to attain, and yet, how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of inside-bathing before breakfast

Millions of folks bathe internally now instead of loading their system with drugs. "What's an inside bath?" you say Well, it is guaranteed to perform miracles if you could believe these hot water enthusiasts.

There are vast numbers of men and women who, immediately upon arising in the morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is a very excellent health measure. It is intended to flush the stomach, liver, kidneys and the thirty feet of intestines of the previous day's waste, sour bile and indigestible material left over in the body which, if not eliminated every day, become food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels, the quick result is poisons and toxins which are then absorbed into the blood causing headache, bilious attacks, foul breath, bad taste, colds, stomach trouble kidney misery, sleeplessness impure blood and all sorts of ailments

People who feel good one day and badly the next, but who simply can not get feeling right are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from any druggist or storekeeper This will cost very little but is sufficient to make anyone a real crank on the subject of internal sanitation

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so limestone phosphate and hot water act on the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels It is vastly more important to bathe on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do. —Adv

The Uncertain Future.

During a theatrical engagement at Manchester, England, Kemble and Lewis were walking one day along the street when a chimney sweeper and his boy came up. The boy stared at them with open mouth and exclaimed:

"They be play actors"

"Hold your tongue," said the old sweep "you don't know what you may come to yourself"

BIG EATERS HAVE BAD KIDNEYS AND BACKACHE

Take a Glass of Salts at Once If Your Back Is Hurting or Kidneys and Bladder Trouble You.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the elimi native tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

THE AFTERNOON GUEST

"Oh, let us stop off at Jane's on our way home she always expects someone about 4 o'clock and it is so restful and cozy to have a nice little chat, a warm sip and some of those delicious little home made cakes of hers." "We'll just do that," replied the stunning woman addressed. "You know, too, dear, that we are sure to meet some very interesting persons, for Jane's teas are a great attraction."

As the two carefully groomed women alighted in the rain to wend their way to the home of the owner of the attractive tea table and life of the cozy chat, I thought what a great delight it must be to that hostess to have her friends call and brighen up such a gloomy day. Jane will be cheered and benefited by the social contact, as well as her friends.

One of the best incentives to organized systematic housework is the establishment of the afternoon tea as a permanent feature in the home.

Where there is an elderly woman in the home this custom is a blessing, for "Grandmother" will be delighted to have this little arrangement to be responsible for and to "pour" on these occasions

Each day, then, has its bright spot for the busy homemaker to look forward to. A time by which she will have finished all hard work for the day With the evening meal all planned and milady dressed, she is ready to take up a bit of sewing or a worth while magazine article while waiting for her guests to drop in. I say "drop in" meaningly, for it is the informality of these gatherings that is part of their charm

Let your friends know by simple friendly notes, or written cards, that you will be at home and glad to receive them on certain days, or, if possible, any day at 4 o'clock. When they know you are ready and anxious to have them come, you need never be lonesome.

Dainty sandwiches and cakes, with tea, cocoa, bouillon, or grape juice, may be served. Bouillon is gaining in popularity daily It is refreshing and is best as a between meal beverage for people in the habit of drinking tea and coffee at meals.

Bouillon is so easily prepared and is always just right—no bother watching the tea bag. One simply pours boiling water over the little cube of concentrated bouillon and, as soon as the cube is dissolved, the satisfying beverage is ready Serve these simple sandwiches and cakes with the bouillon

English Tea Cakes.

Work one-half cup of pure leaf lard until creamy, add gradually, while beating constantly, one cup of sugar. Mix and sift two and a quarter cups of flour with two teaspoons of baking powder and one-half teaspoon of salt. Add one-fourth cup of cold milk. Mix as pie crust. Toss part of mixture on floured board and roll as thin as possible. Shape with round or fancy cutter, first dipped in flour Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Have seeded raisins run through coarse chopper and sprinkle a few over one form. Lightly moisten under side of another and place over raisins, pressing down so two crusts will stay together. Have top sprinkled with sugar, bake in quick oven to light brown.

Sandwiches should be exceedingly thin and dainty Very nutritious sandwiches are made from the thinnest possible slices of dry sausage

The highest grade of butterine has now reached a stage of practical perfection It is absolutely pure and as nutritious as butter The best grades are much preferred to cheap butter. Sandwiches spread with the best butterine, and a thin slice of nutritious, tasty, dry sausage, are real appetizing and quite appropriate for a bite so short a time before dinner

LAUGHTER WILL COME BACK TO THE WORLD

Some people wonder why theaters are running during the awful world tragedy which is being enacted in Europe The reason why they ought to run is well stated by Jonn Palmer in the Saturday Review

Let the theater still exist to remind us that the war will pass that laughter will come back to the world that art will one day be restored that we shall not always stand at the edge of ruin, that it is not necessary to dwell forever with grave faces, self-consciously in the shadow of distress Thereby we shall help to keep our country in sane mind and good heart In these coming days and destroy in its cradle the infant assumption of our entertainers that one theme alone is able at this time to possess us

This war will never, so long as it lasts, be in a less degree the commanding fact of our lives But we need not therefore act like stunned creatures and play continually with one fixed idea. We have to keep our sense of proportion We must hold on to our humor and keep it bright, and the theater, if the theater is going to continue must help us in this.

Unpopular in England.

From the Omaha Nebraskan

Newspaper dispatches announce the return from Europe of Colonel George W Harvey, editor of the North American Review These dispatches say that Colonel Harvey has "deserted the president, his former friend," and they quote Colonel Harvey as saying that in England next to the kaiser, President Wilson is the most unpopular man."

Colonel Harvey has deserted the president so often that that pastime on his part has become quite a joke.

But it is interesting to hear that the president pushes the kaiser a close second for the booby prize in England.

But that's the way it goes. The Germans denounce the president for his partiality toward England, while the Englishmen denounce him for his leaning toward Germany.

The fact is the president does not lean toward either side. His whole thought has been of America. He may be unpopular in England or Germany But what of it? His course suits the plain, everyday American, regardless of ancestry

Why Not?

From Answers.

Who can tell the working of children's minds, or how, all unwittingly, we may make ourselves appear unjust in our dealings towards them?

This was brought home to Mr Heewit the other day as to took his young hopeful, aged 6, for a constitutional. The youngster was evidently thinking hard, for he was silent—which was unusual.

"Daddy," he said, looking up suddenly, "I think I want to get married."

"Do you, my son? And who to, may I ask?" answered the proud parent, looking at him.

"I want to marry granny."

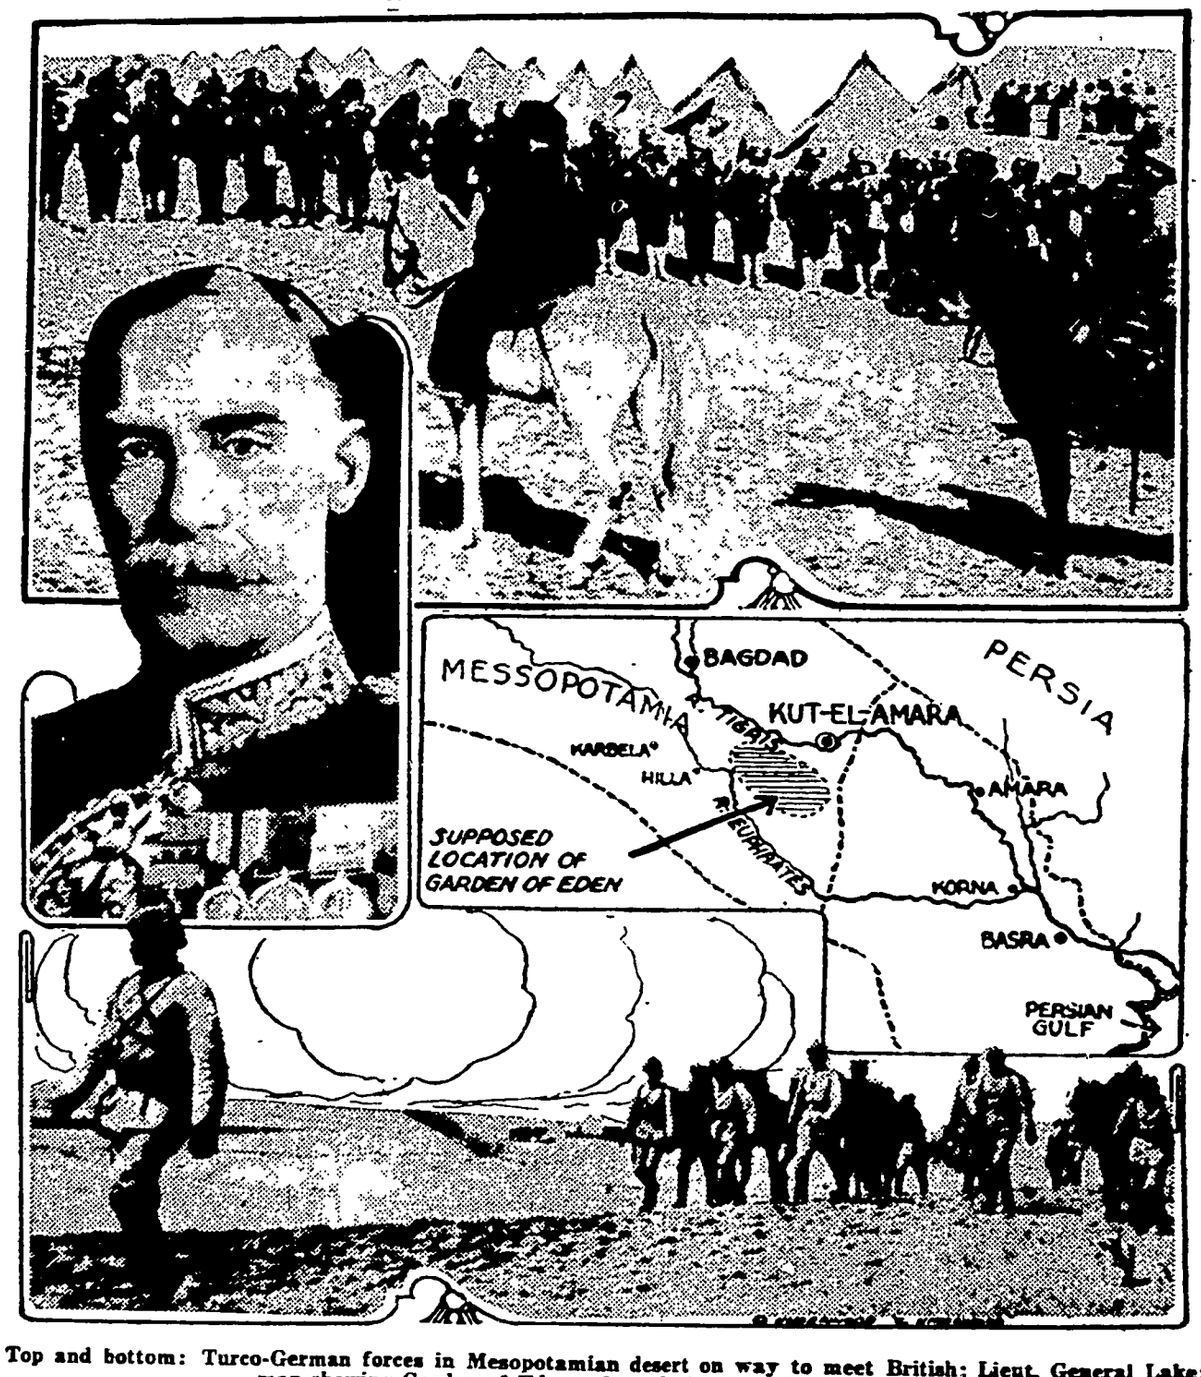
"Do you, indeed? And do you think I would let you marry my mother—eh?"

"Well, why shouldn't I?" retorted the tender logician. "You married mine, didn't you?"

Among the canny Scots some credit must be given the soldier on leaving home who marched up to the altar to learn that the bride had disappeared, turned to the two bridesmaids, offered to flip a coin to see which would have him, and, as someone has said, "got away with it." The "lucky" one now avers that she was an old sweetheart anyway.

Japan has erected a monument over the grave of the scientist who introduced the sweet potato into the empire for general cultivation more than two centuries ago.

TURKS AND BRITISH MAY FIGHT BATTLE IN GARDEN OF EDEN



Top and bottom: Turco-German forces in Mesopotamian desert on way to meet British; Lieut. General Lake; map showing Garden of Eden, where decisive battle may be fought.

A big army of Turks, led by German officers, has crossed the Mesopotamian desert, and is now threatening the British army at Kut-el-Amara, near the Garden of Eden. It is believed that a decisive battle will be fought here soon. Lieut. General Sir Percy Henry Noel Lake has just succeeded General Sir John Nixon as commander of the British forces in Mesopotamia, and upon his shoulders rests the difficult task of extricating the British army from its perilous position.

How America Wallows in Prosperity

United States trade balance 11 months ended November, 1914	193,372,036
Increase of trade balance in 1915 over 1914	$ 1,382,701,255
Increase of trade balance in 1915 over 1913	250 per cent
United States loans to foreign countries in 1915	$ 1,055,600 000

Thus making the United States a credit nation, taking the place formerly occupied by England

Value of farm crops in United States for 1915	$10,500,000,000
Value of farm crops in United States for 1914	9,873,000,000
Value of farm crops in United States for 1913	9.789,936,000

Thus in 1915 the United States had the greatest crop values in its history

VARYING BREAKFAST DISHES.

Start the Day With a Smile.

Breakfast, the meal that starts the day, is the most important of all As one is generally hurried early in the morning, it is a great temptation to fall into a breakfast rut" and serve menus of a tedious sameness. If "Milord" is ever critical it is when coming straight to table in the morning without outdoor exercise. Remember, your efforts to have a sunny breakfast where everything is done to a turn, as everything must be in the morning, will be repaid in the health and efficiency of your family.

There are faddists who practice the no breakfast plan This may be all right for those who indulge in midnight suppers and are given to indolent morning habits

Busy men and women -those who carry on the world's work,--however, need a rather substantial morning meal

The starch and sugar in a cereal, fruit, toast and coffee breakfast are energy givers, but the world's workers need a certain amount of protein to make them 'fit' for the morning's work. This protein or tissue builder is supplied in meat

Sausage Surprise.

Select large, uniform potatoes, prepare for baking by scrubbing with vegetable brush and cutting off any soft spots or eyes. With apple corer make two holes lengthwise through potatoes, insert farm style link sausages or stuff with sausage meat. Bake. Serve as soon as baked

Bacon Curls.

After removing the rinds of thin slices of bacon, fry them in a very hot skillet. As soon as they start to curl shape into curls, using forks. When crisp drain and arrange on hot platter around mound of scrambled eggs. Serve with creamed potatoes.

Ham En Casserole.

Cut cold boiled or fried ham, fat and lean, in medium size cubes. Put in baking dish a layer of bread crumbs, boiled rice or macaroni, then a layer or ham cubes. Sprinkle lightly with pepper, dot with prepared mustard and if there was not much fat add a few dots of butterine or pour over a tablespoon of melted bacon drippings. Repeat until dish is full having a few dots of fat on top. Pour over enough milk to moisten. Add a thin layer of fine bread crumbs and set in oven to brown well.

This is a balanced dish containing plenty of starch and protein and should suffice for breakfast with fruit, toast and coffee.

Potato Croquets.

Wash and pare four medium sized potatoes, drop at once into cold water to prevent discoloration and soak one hour; drain, cook in boiling salted water until soft, again drain and force potatoes through a potato ricer; there should be two cups. Add three tablespoons cream, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, a few grains cayenne, a few drops onion juice and the yolk of one egg and beat thoroughly. Take up a rounding tablespoonful of the mixture and roll between the hands in the form of a smooth ball, then roll lightly on a board until of the desired length, and flatten ends, care being taken not to leave the impression of the fingers. Roll in crumbs, then in egg, and then in crumbs again, fry for one minute in deep fat made from pure leaf lard, and drain on brown paper.

Baking Powder Biscuit.

Mix and sift two cups bread flour (once sifted), four teaspoons baking powder and one teaspoon salt. Work in one-fourth cup pure leaf lard, using the tips of the fingers, then add three-fourths cup of milk and one tablespoon extra milk, mixing with a knife. Toss on a floured board, knead quickly into shape, pat and roll to one-half inch in thickness. Shape with a round biscuit cutter, first dipped into flour. Place close together in a greased pan and bake in a hot oven from 15 to 18 minutes.

Tuna Au Gratin.

Put a layer of tuna fish in the bottom of a buttered baking dish or casserole, sprinkle with grated American cheese, add another layer of the tuna, then the cheese, and repeat until all the tuna has been used, being sure to have a generous sprinkling of cheese for the top. Pour over all a cream sauce made by blending one scant tablespoon of flour with one tablespoon of butter and adding one cup of sweet milk, a generous seasoning of salf and pepper and tablespoon of unsweetened grape juice. Bake in moderate oven about 20 minutes. Remove cover from baking dish, sprinkle buttered bread crumbs over the dish and brown in the oven

Satan Got Behind Her.

From Harper's Magazine

Mrs. Kilgore was the pretty young wife of the elderly village pastor One day she went into the city with a friend and among other things bought a new frock.

"Another frock, my dear?" said her husband. "Did you need another?"

"Yes," said the wife, hesitatingly, "I do need it, and besides, it was so pretty that the devil tempted me."

"But you should have said, 'Get thee behind me, Satan.' Have you forgotten that?"

"Oh, no; but that was what made the trouble, hubby dear. I said 'Get thee behind me, Satan,' and he did, but he whispered over my shoulder, 'It just fits you beautifully in the back!' And I just had to take it then."

The Flag Will Stay Up.

From the Washington Times.

It is only a paraphrase of a statesman's biting comment on the clamor of half a dozen agitators in a crowd of a thousand to say that their antics can make you forget for the moment that the other 994 who are silent and serious can waft them away with a breath, and, when the time comes for action instead of sound, will.

A handful of hyphenates can fill the national Senate with noise when they shout all together for the abandonment by the United States government of American rights, American duties, and American honor; but the rest of congress will not be moved by the uproar to betray their country into ignoble servility to Europe's outlaws.

For noncombatant Americans to sail whither they please on the high seas in ships of commerce is their right immemorial, and congress will never surrender it. For noncombatants thus sailing in ships of commerce to be immune from murder by a belligerent is a right immemorial of all civilized peoples, and this nation will not be the first to cast it into the discard.

After the big shouting in Great Britain against conscription, the measure providing for it triumphs at the first reading in the commons, 4 to 1. After the explosion in the United States Senate against firm and effective action by this government to end submarine butchery of our citizens, congress will support such firm and effective action 10 to 1, and the American people will back it up 1,000 to 1.

Neither literally nor figuratively will the flag be hauled down by any hand in congress or elsewhere in the United States.

And the Reichstag Still Sits.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

So long as it is in session, the eyes of the world will be fixed on the German reichstag. When, on December 9, Bethman-Hollweg replied to the interpolation of the social democratic party as to whether the government was prepared to announce the terms on which it would be willing to conclude an early peace, the German chancellor had in mind a short session of the national legislature. Dr. Schiedemann, the leader of the socialists, had asked:

"Is the imperial chancellor ready to give information as to the conditions under which he would be willing to enter into peace negotiations?"

The chancellor, standing in the place where Bismarck stood nearly half a century before, replied:

"If our enemies make peace proposals compatible with Germany's dignity and safety, then we shall always be ready to discuss them. * * * The war can be terminated only by a peace which will give the certitude that war will not return. We all agree about that. There lies, and there always will lie, the root of our strength."

The chamber rang with cheers. The chancellor believed that the government had silenced the socialists, and that the reichstag would adjourn by Christmas. Bethman-Hollweg had appraised correctly German patriotism, but he had not rightly assessed the misery which the war has brought to the German people. The reichstag is still in session, and there is no indication of an early adjournment. But what is particularly annoying to the government is, that the opposition has won over so many German supporters that it now needs only 12 votes to turn its minority into a majority. When that happens, anything may happen.

After the cheers of the opening day had "run out to stillness," the cries of the people, and not the voice of the chancellor were heard in the reichstag. They were a-hungered and demanded food. Better plans of food distribution must be devised. The families of 2,000,000 soldiers needed help. Fifty million dollars were demanded for their relief. The socialists, with their ears to the ground, heard the cry of those made miserable by war, and so the plans of the government for a short session have gone awry.

Surely, these are momentous signs. What will the next turning of the scroll show? May it not be that, out of the war's misery, there will come a world peace? If by a vagary of fate the socialist party in the reichstag win enough supbe the beginning of the end of the war. The social democrats will have the political right of way, and the empire of Frederick the Great, William I, and William II, may find new foundations.

Joses, Brother of Jesus.

Joses the brother of Jesus plodded from day to day,
With never a vision within him to glorify his clay;
Joses the brother of Jesus was one with the heavy clod,
But Jesus was the soul of rapture, and soared, like a lark, with God.
Joses the brother of Jesus was only a worker in wood,
And he never could see the glory that Jesus his brother could.
"Why stays He not in the workshop?" he often used to complain,
"Sawing the Lebanon cedar, imparting to woods their stain?
Why must He go thus roaming, forsaking my father's trade,
While hammers are busily sounding and there is a gain to be made?"
Thus ran the mind of Joses, apt with plummet and rule,
And deeming whoever surpassed him either a knave or a fool;
For he never walked with the prophets in God's garden of bliss,
And of all the mistakes of the ages the saddest methinks was this,
To have such a brother as Jesus, to speak with Him day by day,
But never to catch the vision which glorified his clay.
—Harry H. Kemp, in the Independent.

What Does Catarrh Mean?

It means inflammation of mucous membrane somewhere in the head, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach, biliary ducts or bowels. It always means stagnant blood—blood that is full of impurities. Left alone, it extends until it is followed by indigestion, colds, congestion or fever It weakens the system generally and spreads its operations until systemic catarrh or an acute illness is the result.

Peruna

Is the nation's reliable remedy for this condition. It restores appetite, aids digestion, checks and removes inflammation, and thus enables the membranes, through which we breathe and through which our food is absorbed, to do their work properly. Forty-four years of success, with thousands of testimonials, have established it as the home remedy—Ever-Ready-to-Take. Its record of success holds a promise for you.

Pat's Sound Logic.

Pat was fishing in a river belonging to a rich man, over which there was a notice, "Trespassers prosecuted." Paddy ignored this statement and after fishing for some time caught a salmon, which he brought home and cooked. A policeman passing by the door smelled the salmon and knocked.

"Well, Pat O'Hara, in whose water did you catch that salmon?"

"Well, I'll tell the honest truth, I caught it in that river near the gentleman's house over there."

"Well," said the sergeant, "don't you know everything in that river belongs to that gentleman?"

"Arrah, to be sure," said Pat, "but I went for a swim in that river and I belong to that gentleman?"

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XIII.—(Continued.)

"You hoped so, too, no doubt?" inquired Goldberger sweetly.

"I did. It is an office of high honor and great influence. She would walk all her days in the shadow of the Holy One. So sweet a cup is offered to few women. The number of priestesses is limited to nine."

Goldberger pulled at his mustache helplessly. Evidently the witness' calm self control was not to be broken down, or even ruffled.

"Please tell me where you were night before last," said the coroner, finally.

"I was in this house."

"Did you see Mr. Vaughan?"

"I did not."

"How did you spend the night?"

"In contemplation. It was, as I have told you, the white night of Siva, sacred to him from sunset to sunrise."

"Do you mean that you spent the whole night sitting before that crystal?" asked the coroner, incredulously.

"That is my meaning."

"You know nothing, then, of the death of Mr. Vaughan?"

"I saw his soul pass in the night. More than that I know not."

Again Goldberger twitched at his mustache. He was plainly at a loss how to proceed.

"Was your attendant with you?" he asked, at last.

"He was in his closet."

"At his devotions, too, perhaps?"

"The white night of Siva is also the black night of Kali," said the yogi, gravely, as one rebuying an unworthy levity.

"What do you mean by that?" Goldberger demanded.

"Mahbub is of the cult of Kali, who is the wife of Siva," said the yogi, touching his forehead reverently as he spoke the words. "He spent the night in adoration of her attributes."

Goldberger's stenographer was having his difficulties; the pencils of the reporters were racing wildly in unison; everyone was listening with strained attention; there was, somehow, a feeling in the air that something was about to happen. I saw Godfrey write a line upon a sheet of paper, fold it, toss it on the table in front of Goldberger. The coroner opened it, read the line, and stared at the impassive Mahbub, who stood beside his master with folded arms, staring over the heads of the crowd.

"In other words," said Goldberger, slowly, "your attendant is a thug."

The yogi bowed.

"Yes," he said, calmly. "Mahbub is thugee."

CHAPTER XIV.

THE FINGER PRINTS.

A shiver ran through the crowd, like a gust of wind across a field of wheat. The words, "Mahbub is Thuggee," seemed to rend the veil which obscured the tragedy. Surely it was clear enough, now; here was a man killed by Thuggee's peculiar method, and here was the thug. It was as simple as two and two.

Every eye was on the bare legged Hindu, impassive as ever, staring straight before him. The camera man hastily pushed in fresh plates and trained their machines upon him. Two policemen edged close to his side.

But Francisco Silva looked about him with scornful eyes, and presently he opened his lips as though to speak, and then he closed them.

Goldberger seemed perplexed. He looked as though, while rolling smoothly along the road toward a well understood goal, he had suddenly struck an unforeseen obstacle. The possibility of Mahbub's guilt seemed to interfere with some theory of his own. He called Simmonds and the district attorney to him, and they exchanged a few low words. Then he turned back to the witness.

"I should like to question your attendant," he said. "Will you translate for me? I have not been able to find a Hindu interpreter."

Silva bowed his consent.

"Ask him, please where he spent Thursday night."

There was a brief interchange between Silva and Mahbub, then the former turned to Goldberger.

"It was as I thought," he said. "He spent the night in the worship of the attributes of Kali."

The coroner opened an envelope which lay on the table at his elbow and took out a piece of knotted cord.

"Ask him if he ever saw this before," he said, and passed it to the witness.

"I notice that it is stained," said Silva, looking at it. "Is it with blood?"

"Yes."

"Then Mahbub will not touch it. For him to do so, would be to defile himself."

"He doesn't need to touch it. Show it to him."

Silva spoke to his servant, holding up the cord. The latter glanced at it and shook his head. Without a word, Silva handed the cord back to the coroner.

"Are there any further questions?" he asked.

Goldberger pulled at his moustache impatiently.

"There are a lot of questions I'd like to ask," he said, "but I feel a good deal as though I were questioning the Sphinx. Isn't it a little queer that a thug should be so particular about a few bloodstains?"

"I fear that you are doing Mahbub an injustice in your thoughts," Silva said gravely. "You have heard certain tales of the Thugs, perhaps—tales distorted and magnified and untrue. In the old days, as worshipers of Kali, they did, sometimes, offer her a human sacrifice; but that was long ago. To say a man is a Thug is not to say he is also a murderer."

"It will take more than that to convict him, anyway," assented Goldberger, quickly. "That is all for the present, professor." I bit back a smile at the title which came so unconsciously from Goldberger's lips.

Silva bowed and walked slowly away toward the house, Mahbub following close behind. At a look from Simmonds, two of his men strolled after the strange couple.

Goldberger stared musingly after them for a moment, then shook his head impatiently, and turned back to the business in hand.

"Will Mr. Swain please take the stand?" he said; and Swain took the chair. "Now, Mr. Swain," Goldberger began, after swearing him, "please tell us, in your own way, of what part you had in the incidents of Thursday night."

Swain told his story much as he had told it to Godfrey and me, and I noticed how closely both Goldberger and the district attorney followed it. When he had finished, Goldberger asked the same question that Godfrey had asked.

"While you were having the altercation with Mr. Vaughan, did you grasp hold of him?"

"No, sir, I did not touch him."

"You are quite sure?"

"Yes, sir."

"You didn't touch him at any time, then or afterwards?"

"No, sir, I didn't see him afterwards."

"What were your feelings when he took his daughter away?"

"I was profoundly grieved."

"And angry?"

"Yes, I suppose I was angry. He was most unjust to me."

"He had used very violent language to you, had he not?"

"Yes."

"He had threatened your life if you tried to see his daughter again?"

"Yes."

"Now, Mr. Swain, as you stood there, angry and humiliated, didn't you make up your mind to follow him to the house and have it out with him?"

Swain smiled.

"I'm lawyer enough to know," he said, "that a question like that isn't permissible. But I'll answer it. I may have had such an impulse—I don't know, but the sight of the cobra there in the arbor put it effectually out of my head."

"You still think there was a cobra?"

"I am sure of it."

"And you ran out of the arbor so fast you bumped your head?"

"I suppose that's what happened. It's mighty sore, anyway," and Swain put his hand to it ruefully.

"Mr. Swain," went on the coroner, slowly, "are you prepared to swear that, after you hurt your head, you might not, in a confused and half-dazed condition, have followed your previous impulse to go to the house and see Mr. Vaughan?"

"Yes," answered Swain, emphatically, "I am. Although I was somewhat dazed, I have a distinct recollection of going straight to the wall and climbing back over it."

"You cut your wrist as you were crossing the wall the first time?"

"Yes," and Swain held up his hand and showed the strip of plaster across the wound.

"Your right wrist?"

"Yes."

"It bled freely, did it not?"

"Very freely."

"What became of the clothes you took off when you changed into those brought by Mr. Godfrey?"

"I don't know. Mr. Lester told me they were left here. I intended to inquire for them."

At a sign from Goldberger, Simmonds opened a suitcase and placed a bundle on the table. Goldberger unrolled it and handed it to Swain.

"Are these the clothes?" he asked.

"Yes," said Swain, after a moment's examination.

"Will you hold the shirt up so the jury can see it?"

Swain held the garment up and everybody's eyes were fixed upon the blood soaked sleeve.

"There seems to have been a good deal of blood," remarked Goldberger "It must have run down your hand?"

"It did. It was all over my fingers."

"So that it would probably stain anything you touched?"

"Yes, very probably."

"Did you think of that when you were in the arbor with Miss Vaughan?"

Swain's face suddenly crimsoned and he hung his head.

"I'm afraid not," he said

"How was she dressed?"

"In a white robe of some silk-like material."

"A robe that would show a blood stain?"

"Undoubtedly."

Goldberger paused for an instant, and then produced a pad, such as one uses for inking rubber stamps, opened it and placed it on the table before him.

"Have you any objection to giving me a set of your finger prints?" he asked.

"None whatever," and Swain stepped toward the table and placed the tips of his fingers on the pad. Then he pressed each one carefully upon the pad of paper which the coroner placed before him. Goldberger watched him curiously, until all 10 impressions had been made.

"You did that as though you had done it before," he remarked.

"I made a set once for Mr. Vaughan," said Swain, sitting down again. "He had a most interesting collection."

Goldberger passed the prints over to the head of the bureau of identification, then he turned back to the witness.

"Mr Swain," he said, "have you ever seen this cord before?" and he handed him the knotted cord.

Swain took it and examined it curiously, without hesitation or repugnance.

"No," he answered finally, "I never saw it before."

"Do you know what it is?" and Goldberger watched him closely.

"I infer that it is the cord with which Mr. Vaughan was strangled."

"That is so. You did not see it around his neck?"

"Please look at the cord again, Mr. Swain," said Goldberger, still watching him. "You will see that it is knotted. Can you describe those knots for me?"

Swain looked at the knots and I was glad to see that his hands were absolutely steady and his face free from fear. No murderer could handle so unconcernedly the instrument of his crime. Surely the jury would see that.

"The knots," said Swain, at last, seem to be an ordinary square knot with which the cord was made into a noose and then a double bowline to secure it."

"A double bowline? Can you tie such a knot?"

"Certainly. Any one who has ever owned a boat can do so. It is the best knot for this purpose."

The coroner reached out for the cord and replaced it in the envelope. Then he produced the handkerchief.

"Can you identify that?" he asked, and handed it to the witness.

"I cannot identify it," he said in a low voice, "but I will say this, when Miss Vaughan found that my wrist was bleeding, she insisted upon tying her handkerchief around it. This may be the handkerchief."

Again a little shiver ran through the crowd, and Goldberger's eyes were gleaming.

"You notice that two corners of the handkerchief are free from stain," he said, "and are crumpled as though they had been tied in a knot. The handkerchief Miss Vaughan used would probably be in that condition, would it not?"

"Yes," Swain answered, his voice still low.

"You heard Dr. Hinman testify that he found the handkerchief beside the chair in which Mr. Vaughan was murdered?"

"Yes."

"Can you explain its presence there?"

"I cannot, unless it dropped from my wrist when I stopped to raise Miss Vaughan."

Goldberger looked at the witness for a moment, then he glanced at Sylvester, who nodded almost imperceptibly.

"That is all for the present, Mr. Swain," the coroner said, and Swain sat down again beside me, pale, but holding himself well in hand.

Then Simmonds took the stand. His story developed nothing new, but he told of the finding of the body and of its appearance and manner of death in a way that brough back the scene to me very vividly. I suspected that he made his story deliberately impressive, in order to efface the good impression made by the previous witness.

Finally, the coroner dipped once more into the suitcase, brought out another bundle and unrolled it. It proved to be a white robe with red stains about the top. He handed it to Simmonds.

"Can you identify this?" he asked.

"Yes," said Simmonds, "it is the garment worn by Mr Vaughan at the time of his murder."

How do you identify it?"

By my initials in indelible ink, on the right sleeve, where I placed them."

"There are stains on the collar of the robe. What are they?"

"Bloodstains."

"Human blood?"

"Yes, sir."

"How do you know?"

"I have had them tested."

"Did any blood come from the corpse?"

"Where, then, in your opinion, did this blood come from?"

"From the murderer," answered Simmonds, quietly.

There was a sudden gasp from the reporters, as they saw whither this testimony was tending. I glanced at Swain. He was a little paler, but was smiling confidently.

Goldberger, his face hawklike, stooped again to the suitcase, produced a third bundle, and, unrolling it, disclosed another robe, also of white silk. This, too, he handed to Simmonds.

"Can you identify that?" he asked.

"Yes," said Simmonds. "It is the robe worn by Miss Vaughan on the night of the tragedy. My initials are on the left sleeve."

"That also has blood marks on it, I believe?"

"Yes, sir," and, indeed, we could all perceive the marks.

"Human blood?"

"Yes, sir. I had it tested, too."

"That is all," said Goldberger, quickly, and placed on the stand the head of the identification bureau.

"Mr Sylvester," he began, "you have examined the marks on these garments?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did you make of them?"

"They are all unquestionably finger-marks, but most of them are mere smudges. However, the fabric of which these robes are made is a very hard and finely meshed silk, with an unusually smooth surface, and I succeeded in discovering a few marks on which the lines were sufficiently distinct for purposes of identification. These I have photographed. The lines are much plainer in the photographs than on the cloth."

"Have you the photographs with you?"

"I have," and Sylvester produced them from a pocket. "These are the prints on the robe belonging to the murdered man," he added, passing four cards to the coroner. "You will notice that two of them show the right thumb, though one is not very distinct, another shows the right forefinger, and the fourth the right middle finger."

"You consider these plain enough for purposes of identification?"

"Undoubtedly. Any of them would be enough."

Goldberger passed the photographs to the foreman of the jury, who looked at them vacantly.

"And the other photographs?" asked Goldberger.

"I got only two prints from the other robe," said Sylvester. "All these were hopelessly smudged, as though the hand had moved while touching the garment."

"You mean they were all made by one hand?" asked Goldberger.

"Yes, sir, by the right hand. Again I have a print of the thumb and one of the third finger."

He passed the photographs over, and again Goldberger handed them on to the jury.

Dropping Passengers For Freight.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

No wonder the shipyards are booming when such stories of fabulous profits from the carrying trade come up from the waterfront as those in yesterday's Eagle.

The most surprising of these is that the big new Venezuela of the Royal Dutch West Indian Mail Service is suspending her regular trips ripping up her carpets and storing her plush-covered furniture, in order that she may be filled to the decks with wheat for Spain. But as her owners get 67 cents a bushel for carrying the wheat and as they expect to ship 300,000 bushels, the profit of the one voyage will pay for a good many West Indian trips. The Floridian of the Hawaiian line is not going even to start as a passenger ship. On her very first voyage, fresh from the yards, she will carry munitions across the ocean, and that one voyage will pay the whole cost of building the ship. Second hand ships have been bought and paid for from the profits on one load of munitions, but the Floridian is as new as paint, and she is a handsome passenger ship, as is the Venezuelan.

The Grecian Argonauts sailed for the golden fleece. Our Argonauts do better; they sail with it. No Comstock lode or Klondike ever held such certain fortunes as does the shipping business from New York harbor, and that harvest will last until new ships can be built in considerable numbers, a matter of months, if not of years.

CHILDREN'S READING

By C. W. Hunt.

The largest number of all the not-worth-while books for children are those in which one can not point out features so plainly objectionable that any thoughtful parent would recognize their harmfulness. The soft, "safe," inane, sugar-and-water story that leads nowhere, that has no positive qualities, bad or good, that consumes good time, that opens no windows in the child's mind—this story also let us avoid. Our children are too good for such mental pap. When the child reads for himself we can not prevent his devouring some commonplace books but while his reading is in our hands let us see that he knows the best and only the best.

"Perhaps not, but I'd be willing to bet that your grandfathers made just as big a fuss over the things they did wear as you men do about the present styles."

MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

THE NEWEST REMEDY FOR BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM AND DROPSY

Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid troubles bring misery to many. When the kidneys are weak or diseased, these natural filters do not cleanse the blood sufficiently, and the poisons are carried to all parts of the body. There follow depression, aches and pains, heaviness, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, chilliness and rheumatism. In some people there are sharp pains in the back and loins, distressing bladder disorders and sometimes obstinate dropsy. The uric acid sometimes forms into gravel or kidney stones. When the uric acid affects the muscles and joints it causes lumbago, rheumatism, gout or sciatica. This is the time to send Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for large trial package of "Anuric."

During digestion ... sorbed ... eaten, and even from some vegetables. The poor kidneys get tired and backache begins. This is a good time to take "Anuric," the new discovery of Dr. Pierce for Kidney trouble and Backache. Neglected kidney trouble is responsible for many deaths, and Insurance Company examining doctors always test the water of an applicant before a policy will be issued. Have you ever set aside a bottle of water for twenty-four hours? A heavy sediment or settling sometimes indicates kidney trouble. If you wish to know your condition send a sample of your water to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and describe symptoms. It will be examined without any expense to you, and Dr. Pierce or his ... will ... from you truthfully. ... by dealers, in

Hancock County Short Course

Feb. 14 to 19

A big event is coming soon—an event of significance to every farmer, farmer's wife, son and daughter in Hancock county.

It is an event that will bring "pay dirt" to every person who is big sighted enough to take advantage of it.

It is the Hancock county winter short course and farmers' week at Klemme, February 14th to 19th.

During that week the town will be turned over to the service of the farmers. The biggest men in agriculture in the country will be here to tell the farmers of their life long work and experience in their special lines.

Best methods of farming, backed up by experience, told in plain, understandable English—that's what every farmer wants to hear. That's exactly what he will get at Klemme, February 14-19. But that's not all.

There will be a chance to meet fellow farmers, talk things over with them heart to heart, and learn first hand what they are doing.

Work on the farm is not heavy at this time of year. A more remunerative vacation could not be taken than this week of learning Plans ought to be made now. The farmer who comes to Klemme will return home a better farmer, a bigger producer and a wiser man.

Tickets are now being offered for sale, purchase one or more when you have the opportunity.

Remember—February 14th to 19th.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE—DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Rub Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and stiffness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

PRIZE WINNING HORSES AT THE SHORT COURSE

The live stock exhibit in connection with the Short Course at Klemme, on February 14 to 19 will contain six fine draft horses, one Shetland stallion and eight herd of barrows Three Belgian mares furnished by the horse breeding farm of R F French of Independence One of these mares won the grand championship at the Minnesota State Fair last year She is the dam of the frist prize sucking colt at the Iowa State Fair and at the Minnesota State Fair, and she and her colt together won first place at both the Iowa State Fair and the Minnesota State Fair. This mare will be used in class work. Another one of the mares, a three year old, won first place at the Iowa State Fair this season. The other mare has not been shown, but ranks well up with the other mares in type and quality. This group of mares are unusually attractive and will add greatly to the value of the Short Course.

In addition to the mares there are three splendid rotn draft geldings, owned by Roy F. O'Donnell of Ames, weighing about a ton each. These horses show, in a remarkable way, the type, size and bone of horses which are desired in the large cities and which command the highest price The Short Course student will place these horses and write their criticisms concerning them

Four of the hogs are purebred Duroc Jersey barrows, and four are cross-bred Duroc Jersey and Hampshire barrows. These hogs are a fine lot, were topped out of about 300 head and will make good class work for the Short Course students during the week

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Call, telephone or write for demonstration.

THE BUILDING OF A COUNTRY

To those who have built railroads through and across the prairies of Western Canada, connecting that great empire of grain and cattle, horse and sheep with the world's markets in the east, must be awarded the privilege of looking upon their work, and its results with pardonable pride. If they reminiscence, and tell of the hardships and the privations, why shouldn't they? The broad prairies on which the buffalo roamed and fed, are now alive with cities, towns and villages. Farms—large and small—on which machinery has chased the bugaboo of laborious work off the farm, and making farm life one of the most pleasant and prosperous of occupations—are being cultivated by men of the highest stamp of manhood. Many of these have inherited from their forebears the physical strength and the high type of manliness that was theirs in the days when they hewed their homes out of the virgin forest, and made them what may be seen today, beautiful farms in the east. On the whole the western prairies breed a high type of manhood, wrest from him faults and diseases which would be his were it not for the upbuilding influence and character of prairie life.

When the builder of the western Canadian prairie looks upon the result of his work, why shouldn't his chest expand? It was probably some of this feeling of pride that took possession of Sir Donald Mann, vice president of the Canadian Northern Railway the other day in Winnipeg, when he said:

"I am not in the habit of giving advice, but I have no hesitation of advising the young men of Canada, every young man, to get out and get a piece of western Canada's land that now can be had for the asking and be their own masters."

"It was 36 years ago when I first came to Winnipeg," he said. "At that time there were less than 150,000 people west of Lake Huron in Canada, and the only bit of railway in operation was between St. Boniface and Emerson—about sixty miles. Today there are nearly 20,000 miles of railway in actual operation and the population is over two and a quarter million, a wonderful achievement in such a short period you will agree, when you have contemplated it a moment."

"At that time all the flour, meat and many other supplies for our contracts were brought from the States. Now consider what the west is doing today. You have a grain production exceeding a billion bushels and yet only a comparatively small area of the tillable land of the country is occupied. THE PROFESSOR'S STATEMENT.

Prof. Aug. F. W. Schmitz, Thomas, Okla., writes: "I was troubled with Backache for about twenty-five years. When told I had Bright's Disease in its last stages, I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes I was somewhat relieved and I stopped the treatment. In the spring of the next year I had another attack. I went for Dodd's Kidney Pills and they relieved me again. I used three boxes. That is now three years ago and my Backache has not returned in its severity, and by using another two boxes a little later on, the pain left altogether and I have had no trouble since. You may use my statement. I recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills when and wherever I can." Dodd's Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y.—Adv.

AN IDEAL HOSTESS.

Being a hostes means considerably more than setting forth a great feast for your guests.

One always delightful hostess maintins that poise that is an absolute necessity to the attainment of any degree of success as a hostess. Because she seems to accomplish the most difficult culinary tasks so easily and happily, an invitation to her home, whether it be for a club meeting, a large social function, or a dinner for a small group of friends, awakes anticipations of the greatest pleasure.

Being asked the secret of her great success, she replied: "When preparing for guests I always keep in mind the fact that being a hostess means many things besides having the house and meal up to one's standard. It means radiating cheer, hospitality and friendship. It means exchange of thoughts on the topics of vital interest to my family and my friends. It means perhaps a bit of song or instrumental music, an accomplishment I spent many hours acquiring and feel it a duty to keep up. One must keep their poise to accomplish all this.

"Of course with plenty of help this should be a simple matter, but the average housewife does her own work. She it is who must make her forethought save her strength.

"It is a physical impossibility to maintain one's poise when overheated and overtired. It was after I took the pains to instruct myself as to how commercial kitchens were managed that I learned how to conserve my energies.

"I visited a great institution where they prepare canned meats, soups, etc., I went to learn system—I came away so impressed with the skill of the chefs and absolute purity of all products prepared by them that I added the canned soups and meats, vegetables, preserves and even grape juice, bottled where the best grapes grow, to my lists of standbys. In my visit I saw that all the meat was most thoroughly inspected by government inspectors and learned that the recipes or formulas according to which these different meats were prepared, had been scientifically tested. I can now serve delicious, well balanced, economical dinners at the minimum of hot, tiring work.

"I use all my ingenuity in finding various dietetically balanced combinations and attractive ways of serving. All the drudgery has been removed by commercial progress."

Exercise In Winter.

From the Indianapolis News.

With the advent of cold weather almost every person, except those engaged in outdoor occupations or athletics, naturally ceases the various forms of outdoor exercise that were popular in the summer months. The office man who has spent his leisure time on the links puts his clubs away until spring, the tennis player stows his racket, the man who walks downtown in the summer, rides in the ill-ventilated, often pneumonia and grip-infested street car, the canoeist no longer plies his paddle, and it goes without saying that the swimmer puts his swimming suit on the shelf against the time when the call of the water lures him. The effect of this sudden relaxing of activities, combined with the closer atmosphere of indoors generally, is likely to show itself in one's physical condition. Physical exercise is distasteful to many persons, and so the tendency is not to take exercise unless it comes in a pleasurable form. A brisk walk morning and evening is conducive to good health in the winter. There are many exercises that may be gone through with in the bedroom before going to bed that will help. No apparatus for this is necessary as the effect of lifting weights and pulling against resistance may be obtained by molding the muscles rigid.

The athletic institutions that conduct regular classes are the best places for exercises, for the reason that there is some incentive. The class work is pleasurable. These games indulged in furnish the element of competition that makes them pleasant. Physical activity will drive depressing mental worry away. This should be sufficient recommendation for gymnastic work in a class. One enters on the period of class exercise usually with little zest, but the work soon starts the blood coursing through the veins and sends its glow to the farthest points of the body. Cold hands and feet soon become warm, and the exercise is a positive pleasure. Afterward a hot bath, followed by a cold one to avoid taking cold, and a brisk rub with a rough towel will send a man out in the street in such a shape that he will bid defiance to chilly weather. Regular exercise in winter rids the bods of its poisons and undoubtedly a sane method of taking exercise assists in warding off grip and pneumonia.

America's Richest Class.

From the Philadelphia Ledger

The richest class of men in the United States are not the Wall street brokers, but the Osage Indians. This tribe is the richest in the world, numbering 2,230 members, and their average wealth, according to the latest figures, is $40,000. It is said that they will pay more income tax than any other equal number of men taken from any specified class.

Fred Lookout is the principal chief of the Osages and a millionaire. While in Washington recently he consulted his lawyers about the income tax law and approved plans for a modern bungalow. He is a graduate of the Carlisle Indian school and is an industrious and successful business man. He neither smokes nor drinks. Lookout does not have to do any manual labor, nor do the members of his family. In fact, few of the Osages are obliged to work. They own the richest oil and gas land in the United States, and the royalties they draw from these lands amount to more than $4,000 a day. Each member of the tribe has an allotment of 160 acres, besides participating in the oil and gas royalties. There is now on deposit in the United States treasury more than $89,000,000 belonging to the members of this tribe. This and the further income from tribal lands will be kept intact until 1925, when it will be distributed equally among the members of the tribe entitled to participate.

Superman of A. D. 10,000.

Prof Edward Alsworth Ross in the World Outlook

It is not that the Szechuanese are not clever and ingenious. Those who have known them longest question whether in a match on even terms our own race could keep up with this people. Their physiognomy tends to be refined and intellectual, with little of the Mongolian cast of feature. One comes on youthful shepherds, who recall the wonderful shepherd Antinous, who became the favorite of the Emperor Hadrian. Oval faces with arching, penciled eyebrows, fine eyes, delicate temples, straight noses and high cut nostrils challenge one's notion that male beauty went out with the Greeks. Of course, the yellow race can never match the whites in charm of tint, but, as regards mold, I doubt if there is anywhere a countenance more worthy of the supermen of the year 10,000 A. D. than that of the high-bred Chinese.

But they glory not at all in their physical possibilities, and athletic games have met with little favor among them. For centuries the spectacled scholar has been the pace setter, and debility has been supposed to be necessary accompaniment of intellect. The merchant glories in his soft muscles and his paunch. Even walking is demeaning and foreign officers promenading the streets in Chengtu have been taken for foreign coolies because they used their legs. Perhaps the athletic games fostered by the Christian schools and colleges together with the inspiring slogan of the Young Men's Christian association, "All-round development—physical, intellectual, moral and religious—for myself and for others," will cure the lethargy that lies like an evil spirit on the energies of most of the yellow race.

The Pampered Farm Hands.

From the Kansas City Star.

"What do you want with all those hammocks and phonograph records and fancy groceries?" asked the storekeeper. "Going to have summer boarders?"

"No," replied Farmer Corntossel, "I wouldn't waste all them on summer boarders. I'm tryin' to make the place attractive enough to persuade a few farm hands to linger around an' help me out with the wheat crop."

No Improvement.

From Yonkers Statesman.

"Got any property about here?" asked the tax man at the door.

"Yes, I got a small lot," replied the buxom woman with the gingham apron, who answered the bell.

"Where is it?"

"About two miles from here."

"Is it improved?"

"Well, I got a husband buried there, but I can't say that improves it any."

The Nation's Own Army.

From the Kansas City Star

Whatever ghosts of states' rights there are left to haunt the lawyer mind, it must be plain to everybody else that in the matter of national defense there is but one power in this country, and that is the power of the national government. That being so it is surprising there should be any honest opposition to the control by the national government of the armed forces that must be the country's defense in war.

There are now in the organized militia of the states 129,000 officers and men, a paper army of respectable size, but an army of more than doubtful value for the nation's defense. It is not officered by the government, its training and equipment are not those of the regular army, and if suddenly incorporated into that structure—which it could not be except by voluntary enlistment—it would not fit in any part.

These facts are brought out by Secretary Garrison in his plea for the war department's plan of direct federal control of the reserve army which is to constitute the second line of defense behind the regular army. That plan rests upon a so-called "Continental army" of reserves rather than upon the state militia or National guard. The wisdom of building upon the broader foundation can hardly be questioned. The Continental army would be a national army. It would be trained by officers of the regular army, equipped in the same manner, paid by the nation and be called directly into the nation's service without state intervention. Anybody who is at all familiar with the state militia knows how it compared with the regular army. Yet the material is as good as in the regular army. The whole difference in result is the very wide difference between the efficient methods of the government and the slackness tempered with politics which mark the methods of state organizations.

Eulogy on the Bob White.

To My Friend, the Epicure: The next time you regale a good appetite with bluepoints, terrapin stew, fillet of sole and saddle of mutton, touched up here and there with the high lights of rare old sherry, rich claret and dry monopole, pause as the dead quail is laid before you on a funeral pyre of toast and consider this:

"Here lies the charred remains of the farmer's ally and friend, poor Bob White. In life he devoured 145 different kinds of bad insects and the seeds of 129 noxious weeds. For the smaller pests of the farm he was the most marvelous engine of destruction that God ever put together of flesh and blood. He was good, beautiful and true and his small life was blameless. And here he lies dead, snatched away from his field of labor and destroyed in order that I may be tempted to dine three minutes longer after I have already eaten to satiety."

Then go on and finish Bob White.

THE COMING OF SNOW

Richard Le Gallienne in Harper's Magazine.

Snow brings a curious sense of friendliness and gayety. Though a child of the cold the gentle sister of the frost, it has a warm caressing, playful way with it, and, particularly in the city, at once evokes a mood of holiday making even in the most serious and care worn hearts. Mankind at large seems to be filled with a boyish glee at its coming and at whatever expense to our convenience, tieups of traffic, and other interruptions of our serious business, the wilder it whirls and the thicker it falls the better pleased we grow.

We read of telegraph wires down of trains north and west snowed in, of snow plows fighting their way through 20-foot drifts, and the like excitements with kindling eyes. We take a personal satisfaction in the triumphs of this wild, white, simple thing from the wilderness that is able with such ease to throw out of gear all the complex machinery of our boasted civilization, and with its soft fingers stop so effectively the pompous work of the world.

Deep in our hearts, I am sure, we are glad of the enforced interruption to the dull routine of our lives. It was so at school we might have rejoiced in any happening, however calamitous, from the burning alive of the head master to an epidemic of scarlet fever, that for the time made going to school an absolute impossibility.

So the coming of the snow proclaims a sort of elemental holiday, and, however the superficial grownup side of us affects irritation at the state of the streets, and fumes and fusses at the blocked trolleys, the eternal school boy in us secretly exults and entertains a wild desire to snowball the passersby and roll in the luscious gathering drifts.

The April of the Soul.

No rose but fades, no glory but must pass,
No hue but dims, no precious silk but frets,
Her beauty must go underneath the grass,
Under the long roots of the violets.

Of many glowing beauties time has hid
In that dark blotting box the villain sends—
He covers over with coffin lid
Mothers and sons, and foes and lovely friends.

Maids that were redly-lipped and comely-skinned,
Friends that deserved a sweeter bed than clay—
All are as blossoms blowing down the wind—
Things the old envious villain sweeps away.

But though the mutterer laughs and tells toll,
Death brings another April to the soul.
—John Masefield

Qualified to Do Either.

From the Chicago News.

Mr Bryan tells a story of how one of his political enemies got even with him. There was a mass meeting out in Nebraska at which Mr Bryan was to speak and which was presided over by a man with whom he had crossed words several times. There was a real feud on between the two and when Bryan ascended the platform the presiding officer paid no attention to him.

At last it came time to introduce Bryan and the chairman walked over to him and blandly inquired:

"What is your name, please?"

"William Jennings Bryan."

"Bryan! Ah, yes," said the chairman, "and what do you do, Mr. Bryan, sing or speak?"

KING PETER MOST TRAGIC ROYAL FIGURE OF WAR

Vienna—There is a second king in Europe without a kingdom, as a result of the war. Peter of Serbia, is today no better off than the king of the Belgians. Karageorgovitch is a fugitive before the advance of the central powers and Bulgarian troops. His two capitals, Belgrade and Nish, are in the hands of the invaders. For a time King Peter traveled in a special rain. At Krusevatch he had to abandon his movable court. As he stood in the station building of that town and waited for the automobile that was to take him to other parts, tears streamed down his cheeks. One of his dwindling entourage murmured a few comforting words, but to these King Peter merely nodded. Today he is in Italy.

In many respects King Peter is the most dramatic figure of the European war. Two regicides are intimately connected with his history, the murder of his predecessor, Alexander Obrenovitch, and his queen, Draga, and the assassination of the Archduke of Austria, the dual monarchy's heir presumptive. There are those who claim that King Peter knew of the two plots, that, indeed, he was the instigator of the former. How true this is would be hard to say in the absence of more evidence than has so far been produced. Certain it is only that King Peter showed no inclination to be severe with the regicides in either case. He even managed to be on good terms with Major Misitch, arch villain of the crime in the old Konak of Belgrade, 13 years ago.

Peter Karageorovitch never forgot, and never was permitted to forget, that he had taken the place of a man who had been foully murdered. Only a few sovereigns consented to meet him, and he was always so ill at ease in the presence of strangers that he usually shunned them.

King Peter's family, it is said, is of Gypsy origin. The original Karagorovitch, or "son of Black George," however, was a shepherd. King Peter himself spent much of his life in Switzerland, where the summons to Serbia's ill fated throne reached him.

Shortly after his election to the kingship, Peter entered into close relations with the Russian crown. A large annual revenue was settled upon him with the understanding that in all matters affecting Serbia's foreign policy he was to keep Russia's interests on the Balkan peninsula in mind.

The attitude of the Serbian liberal party made such a course by Russia advisable. This party had favored the establishment of a republic in Serbia after Alexander and Draga had been murdered. This, and the fact that the liberals in those days were not the ardent pan-Slavists which they became later, recommended the reinforcement of the Serbian crown financially. In Petrograd it was felt that Russia needed a reliable agent in the Balkans, nor could it be overlooked there that experiments in republican government by a Slav people were not calculated to make life for the Romanoff dynasty easier. For 12 years Peter drew his Russian revenues, and, it is asserted here, never lost an opportunity to serve in return. The arrangement made Serbia a veritable appendix to Russia, and, so far as the European war has now progressed, proved Serbia's undoing. Whether or not King Peter will ever rule in Serbia is hard to say at this moment, in the central powers the belief, of course, is that Serbia and its king are no more.

HERBS FOR FLAVORING.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Most of us don't really appreciate the value of herbs in our modern dietary. We drop a bay leaf into the soup sometimes—usually too much bay leaf when we use it at all. And we use some of the other herbs now and then. But we don't use them discriminatingly, and we don't get the most out of them.

The use of herbs used to be much better understood than it is now. Of course in those days herbs were supposed to have such a curative value that they were brewed into strange and wonderful teas for medicine. But they were also wisely used to flavor meats and vegetable and soups.

One reason, perhaps, that we don't use herbs so much today is that our food is, on the whole, so much better flavored than it used to be. We don't have to depend on such things as pellitory, roots of campion, striplex and ditany—as mediaeval cooks did—for flavor in our meals. We get it in the fresh green vegetables we are able to buy throughout the winter, or oranges and grapefruit and in fresh meats.

One thing we must learn about the use of herbs is to use them so that their best flavor is brought out. Take bay leaves, for instance. The best flavor comes from a small amount of the leaf, cooked for a short time. For instance, if you wish bay leaf flavor in a stew or ragout, drop in half a leaf half an hour before the stew is done and remove it before serving. Use it the same way in soups.

Thyme, summer savory and some of the other herbs are not so strong as bay leaf and can be used more liberally also, as they are used powered, and need not be strained out.

Various herbs combine well. Parsley, for one, combines with almost any other flavor, and serves to bring out different tastes. Celery, too, which is classed among herbs sometimes, combines well with other flavors. It should be rather sparingly used, as it is strong and, when used in combination with other flavors, should not be allowed to overwhelm them, but rather to bring them out.

It is a good plan to make little cheesecloth bags of herbs, well combined, to season sauces, soups and stews. Put the herbs that you think combine well in little squares of cheesecloth, tie them securely with string or thread, and pack them away in a glass jar for use as they are needed.

Keep all herbs in tightly covered tin boxes or glass jars, for dampness deteriorates them.

THE CHEAPNESS OF LIFE AND THE VALUE OF ART

From "How Diplomats Make War."

To those who can not understand why certain people should be horrified at the burning of the Louvain library, the ruination of beautiful buildings, and not be just as deeply shocked at the loss or mutilation of a soldier, it must be pointed out that it is the custom of the world to regard the body and soul of a man as something inferior in value to a rare volume or a grand cathedral. There is nothing so cheap as human life. It is the popular notion that men are easily replaced; and so long as men permit certain sections of their fellows to think they are cheap, not worth the interest bestowed on a building or a book, the world will have little rest from war, and only very few men will ever have the chance of learning how to appreciate the architecture of their own country, or why the art of Elzevir should be revered.

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, acid bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all sour fermentations, gases, waste, acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood, getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are troubled with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from any store that handles drugs which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.—Adv.

Prejudiced.

"Any American who supports that policy," he said, "any champion of the sinkers of the Lusitania and Arabic must have a taste like the old Scot's.

"An old Scot was once boasting that Scottish apples were better than our splendid Oregon ones—our great, juicy, enormous, red-cheeked Oregon apples that sell in the restaurants of Europe for forty or fifty cents apiece.

"'Yes,' said the Scot, 'our Scottish apples are the best.'

"'Come now,' said a fruit fancier, 'you can't mean that.'

"'Yes, I do mean it,' said the Scot, 'but maybe I'd better tell ye, laddies, that for my ain taste I prefer them sour and hard.'"

Archie's Neck.

Little Willie—in small boy stories the central figure is nearly always named Little Willie—came running into the house, stuttering in his excitement.

"Mommer," he panted, "do you know Archie Sloan's neck?"

"Do you know Archie Sloan's mother?"

"Do I know Archie Sloan's neck?" repeated her offspring.

"I know Archie Sloan," answered the puzzled parent; "so I suppose I must know his neck. Why?"

"Well," said Willie, "he just now fell into the backwater up to it."—Saturday Evening Post.

COFFEE WAS IT.

People Slowly Learn the Facts.

"All my life I have been a slave to coffee. I kept gradually losing my health, but I used to say 'nonsense, it don't hurt me.'

"Slowly I was forced to admit the truth and the final result was that my nervous force was shattered.

"My heart became weak and irregular in its action and that frightened me. Then my physician told me that I must stop drinking coffee or I could never expect to be well again.

"I thought of Postum but could hardly bring myself to give up the coffee.

"Finally I concluded that I owed it to myself to give Postum a trial. I got a package and carefully followed the directions, and what a delicious, satisfying, rich drink it was! You know, I found it very easy to change from coffee to Postum.

"Almost immediately after making the change I found myself improving as the days went by I kept on improving. My nerves grew steadier, I slept well and felt strong and well. Now the old nervousness is gone and I am well once more."

It pays to give up the drug that acts on some like a poison, and health is the greatest fortune one can have. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

Health for Sick Women

To women who are suffering from some form of woman's special ills, and have a constant fear of breaking down, the three following letters ought to bring hope:—

North Crandon, Wis.—"When I was 16 years old I got married and at 18 years I gave birth to twins and it left me with very poor health. I could not walk across the floor without having to sit down to rest and it was hard for me to keep about and do my work. I went to a doctor and he told me I had a displacement and ulcers, and would have to have an operation. This frightened me so much that I did not know what to do. Having heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I thought I would give it a trial and it made me as well as ever. I cannot say enough in favor of the Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. Mayme Asbach, North Crandon, Wis.

Testimony from Oklahoma.

Lawton, Okla.—"When I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I seemed to be good for nothing. I tired easily and had headaches much of the time and was irregular. I took it again before my little child was born and it did me a wonderful amount of good at that time. I never fail to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ailing women because it has done so much for me."—Mrs. A. L. McCasland, 509 Have St., Lawton, Okla.

From a Grateful Massachusetts Woman.

Roxbury, Mass.—"I was suffering from inflammation and was examined by a physician who found that my trouble was caused by a displacement. My symptoms were bearing down pains, backache, and sluggish liver. I tried several kinds of medicine; then I was asked to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has cured me and I am pleased to be in my usual good health by using it and highly recommend it."—Mrs. B. M. Osgood, [illegible] Jones Park, Roxbury, Mass.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ½ oz. of Glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

SUDDEN DEATH

Caused by Disease of the Kidneys

The close connection which exists between the heart and the kidneys is well known nowadays. As soon as the kidneys are diseased, arterial tension is increased and the heart functions are attacked. When the kidneys no longer pour forth waste, uremic poisoning occurs, and the person dies and the cause is often given as heart disease or disease of brain or lungs.

It is a good insurance against such a case to send 10 cents for a large trial package of "Anuric"—the latest discovery of Dr. Pierce. Also send a sample of your water. This will be tested without charge by expert chemists at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. When you suffer from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, that constant tired, worn-out feeling, then to write Dr. Pierce, describing symptoms and get his medical opinion, without charge—absolutely free. This "Anuric" of Dr. Pierce's is 37 times more active than lithia, for it dissolves uric acid in the system, as hot water does sugar.

Simply ask for Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. There can be no imitation. Every package of "Anuric" is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the ever-famous friend to ailing women.

Worry is a frequent cause and sometimes a symptom of kidney disease. Thousands have testified to immediate relief from these symptoms after using Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets for the kidneys and backache.

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.

Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land, low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. The climate is healthful.

There is no war tax on land, nor is there any conscription. For complete information as to best locations for settlement, reduced railroad rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet, address Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, or

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued)

"Mr. Sylvester," said the coroner, "you consider the fingerprint method of identification a positive one, do you not?"

"Absolutely so."

"Even with a single finger?"

"Perhaps with a single finger there may be some doubt, if there is no other evidence. Somebody has computed that the chance of two prints being exactly the same is one in 64,000,000."

"And where there is other evidence?"

"I should say that a single finger was enough."

"Suppose you have two fingers?"

"Then it is absolutely certain."

"And three fingers?"

Sylvester shrugged his shoulders to indicate that proof could go no further. Goldberger took back the photographs from the foreman of the jury and ranged them before him on the table.

"Now, Mr. Sylvester," he said, "did you notice any correspondence between these prints?"

"Yes," answered the witness, in a low voice, "the thumb prints on both robes were made by the same hand."

The audience sat spell bound, staring, scarce breathing. I dared not glance at Swain. I could not take my eyes from that pale faced man on the witness stand, who knew that with every word he was riveting an awful crime to a living fellow being.

"One question more," said Goldberger. "Have you any way of telling by whom these prints were made?"

"Yes," said Sylvester again, and his voice was so low I could scarcely hear it. "They were made by Frederic Swain. The prints he made just now correspond with them in every detail!"

CHAPTER XV

THE CHAIN TIGHTENS.

An instant's silence followed Sylvester's words, and then a little murmur of interest and excitement, as the reporters bent closer above their work. I heard a quick, deep intaking of the breath from the man who sat beside me, and then I was on my feet.

"Your honor," I said to Goldberger, "it seems that an effort is to be made to incriminate Mr Swain in this affair, and he should therefore be represented by counsel. I myself intend to represent him, and I ask for an hour's adjournment in order to consult with my client."

"I intended to adjourn for lunch," he said, "as soon as I had finished with Mr. Sylvester. We will adjourn now, if you wish—until 1 30," he added.

The battery of cameras was clicking at Swain, and two or three artists were making sketches of his head, there was a great bustle as the reporters gathered up their papers and hurried to their cars to search for the nearest telephone; the jury walked heavily away in charge of an officer to get their lunch at some near by roadhouse. Sylvester was gathering up his prints and photographs and putting them carefully in his pocket. Sinumonds was replacing the blood stained clothing in the suit case, to be held as evidence for the trial, but Swain sat there with arms folded, staring straight before him, apparently unconscious of all this.

Goldberger looked at him closely, as he came down to speak to me, but Swain did not glance up.

"I can parole him in your custody, I suppose, Mr. Lester?" the corner asked.

"Yes; certainly," I assented.

"Will you introduce me to Sylvester? I should like to go over the prints with him."

"Certainly," and, a moment later, with the prints spread out before us, Sylvester was showing me their points of similarity.

Godfred came forward while he was talking and stood looking over his shoulder.

I had heard of finger print identification, of course, many times, but had made no study of the subject, and, I confess, the blurred photographs which Sylvester offered for my inspection seemed to me mighty poor evidence upon which to accuse a man of murder. The photographs showed the prints considerably larger than life size, but this enlargement had also exaggerated the threads of the cloth, so that the prints seemed half concealed by a heavy mesh. To the naked eye the lines were almost indistinguishable, but under Sylvester's powerful glass they came out more clearly.

"The thumb," said Sylvester following the lines first to the right and then to the left with the point of a pencil, "is what we call a double whorl. It consists of 14 lines, or ridges. With the micrometer," and he raised the lid of a little leather box which stood on the table, took out an instrument of polished steel and applied it to one of the photographs, "we get the angle of these ridges. See how I adjust it," and I watched him, as, with a delicate thumbscrew, he made the needle like points of the finder coincide with the outside lines of the whorl. "Now here is a photograph from the other robe, also showing the thumb," and he applied the machine carefully to it. "It also is a double whorl of 14 lines, and you see the angles are the same. And here is the print of the thumb which your client made for me." He applied the micrometer and drew back that I might see for myself.

"But these photographs are enlarged," I objected.

"That makes no difference. Enlargement does not alter the angles. Here are the other prints."

He compared them one by one, in the same manner. When he had finished, there was no escaping the conviction that they had been made by the same hand—that is, unless one denied the theory of finger print identification altogether, and that, I knew, would be absurd. As he finished his demonstration, Sylvester glanced over my shoulder with a little deprecating smile, as of a man apologising for doing an unpleasant duty, and I turned to find Swain standing there, his face lined with perplexity.

"You heard?" I asked.

"Well," I said, "suppose we go and have some lunch, and then we can talk it over," and thanking Sylvester for his courtesy, I led Swain away. Godfrey fell into step beside us, and for some moments we walked on in silence.

"There is only one explanation that I can see," said Godfroy, at last. "Swain, you remember, got to the library about a minute ahead of us, and when we reached the door he was lifting Miss Vaughan to the couch. In that minute, he must have touched the dead man."

Swain shook his head doubtfully.

"I don't see why I should have done that," he said.

"It isn't a question of why you did it," Godfrey pointed out. "It's a question of whether you did. Go over the scene in your mind, recalling as many details as you can, and then we'll go over it together, step by step, after lunch."

It was a silent meal, and when it was over, Godfrey led the way into his study.

"Now," he began, when we were seated, "where was Miss Vaughan at the moment you sprang through the door?"

"She was lying on the floor by the table, in front of her father's chair," Swain replied.

"You are sure of that?"

"Yes. I didn't see her until I ran around the table."

"I was hoping," said Godfrey, "that she had fainted with her arms clasped about her father's neck and that, in freeing them, you made those marks on his robe."

But Swain shook his head.

"No," he said, "I'm positive I didn't touch him."

"Then how did the marks get there?"

"I don't know," said Swain helplessly.

"Now, see here, Swain," said Godfrey, a little sternly, "there is only one way in which those finger prints could have got on that garment, and that is from your fingers. If you didn't put them there consciously, you must have done so unconsciously. If they aren't explained in some way, the jury will very probably hold you responsible for the crime."

"I understand that," Swain answered thickly, "but how can they be explained? I don't see why I should put my hands on Mr Vaughan's throat, even unconsciously. And then there's the fact that at no time during the evening was I really unconscious—I was only confused and dazed."

"Goldberger's theory is plain enough," said Godfrey, turning to me, "and I must say that it's a good one. He realizes that there wasn't provocation enough to cause a man like Swain to commit murder with all his senses about him. But his presumption is that the crime was committed while Swain was in a dazed condition and not wholly self-controlled. Such a thing is possible."

"No, it isn't!" cried Swain, his face livid. "It isn't possible! I'm not a murderer. I remember everything else—do you think I wouldn't remember a thing like that!"

"I don't know what to think," Godfrey admitted, a straight line between his brows. "Besides, there's the handkerchief."

"I don't see any mystery about that," said Swain. "There's only one way that could have come there. It dropped from my wrist when I stooped over Miss Vaughan."

Godfrey looked at me, and I nodded. Swain might as well know the worst.

"That would be an explanation sure enough," said Godfrey, slowly, "but for one fact—you didn't have any bandage on your wrist when you came back over the wall. Both Lester and I saw your wrist and the cut on it distinctly. Therefore if you dropped the handkerchief there, it must have been before that."

The blood had run from Swain's cheeks, as though drained by an open artery, and for a moment he sat silent staring at the speaker. Then he raised his trembling right hand and looked at it, as though it might bear some mark to tell him whether it were indeed guilty.

"But—but I don't understand!" he cried thickly. "You—you don't mean to intimate—you don't believe—but I wasn't unconscious, I tell you! I wasn't near the house until after we heard the screams! I'm sure of it! I'd stake my soul on it!"

"Get a grip of yourself, Swain," said Godfrey, soothingly. "Don't let yourself go like that. No, I don't believe you killed Vaughan, consciously or unconsciously. I said Goldberger's theory was a good one, and it is, but I don't believe it. My belief is that the murder was done by the Thug, but there's nothing to support it, except the fact that he was on the ground and that a noose was used. There's not a bit of direct evidence to connect him with the crime, and there's a lot of direct evidence to connect you with it. It's up to us to explain it away. Now, think carefully before you answer my questions. Have you any recollection, however faint, of having seen Mahbub before this morning?"

Swain sat for quite a minute searching his consciousness. Then, to my great disappointment, he shook his head.

"No, he said, "I am sure I never saw him before."

"Nor Silva?"

"No, nor Silva—except, of course, the time, three or four months ago, when he gave me Mr. Vaughan's message."

"Have you a distinct recollection that the library was empty when you sprang into it?"

"Yes, very distinct. I remember looking about it, and then running past the table and discovering Miss Vaughan."

"You saw her father also?"

"Yes, but I merely glanced at him. I realized that he was dead."

"And you also have a distinct recollection that you did not approach him or touch him?"

"I am quite certain of that," answered Swain, positively.

"Then I give it up," said Godfrey, and lay back in his chair.

There was a queer boiling of ideas in my mind; ideas difficult to clothe with words, and composed of I know not what farrago of occultism, mysticism, and Oriental magic; but at last I managed to simmer them down to a timid question:

"I know it sounds foolish, but wouldn't it be possible, Godfrey, to explain all this by hypnosis, or occult influence, or something of that sort?"

Godfrey turned and looked at me.

"Silva seems to have impressed you," he said. "He has. But isn't such an explanation possible?"

"I don't think so. I don't deny that the Orientals have gone farther along certain paths of psychology than we have, but as to their possessing any occult power, it is, in my opinion, all bosh. As for hypnosis, the best authorities agree that no man can be hypnotised to do a thing which, in his normal condition, would be profoundly repugnant to him. Indeed, few men can be hypnotised against their will. To be hypnotised, you have to yield yourself. Of course, the more you yield yourself, the weaker you grow, but that doesn't apply to Swain. I shouldn't advise you to use that line of argument to a jury," he added, with a smile. "You'd better just leave the whole thing up in the air."

"Well," I said, "I'll make the best fight I can. I was hoping Swain could help me, since he can't, we'll have to trust to luck."

Godfrey left us to get his story of the morning hearing into shape, and I fell into a gloomy reverie. I could see no way out of the maze, either Swain had touched Vaughan's body, or it had been touched by another man with the same finger markings. I sat suddenly upright, for if there was such a man, he must be one of two * * *

"What is it?" Swain asked, looking at me.

"A long shot," I said. "An exceedingly long shot—a three-hundred-million to one shot. How many people are there in the world, Swain?"

"I'm sure I don't know," and he stared at me in bewilderment.

"I think it's something like a billion and a half. If that is true, then it's possible that there are four people in the world, beside yourself, with the thumb and two fingers of the right hand marked exactly as yours are."

"We must have a reunion, some day," Swain remarked, with irony.

But I refused to be diverted.

"Allowing for imperceptible differences," I went on, "I think it is safe to assume that there are 10 such people."

"Well," said Swain, bitterly, "I know one thing that it isn't safe to assume, and that is that either of those Hindus is one of those 10. I suppose that is the assumption you will make next?"

"It's an assumption I intend to put to the proof, anyway," I answered, somewhat testily, "and if it fails, I'm afraid you'll have to go to jail till I can dig up some more evidence."

He turned toward me quickly, his face working.

"See here, Mr. Lester," he said, "don't misunderstand me. I'm awfully grateful for all you're doing for me, but I don't mind going to jail—not on my own account. I'm innocent, and I'll be able to prove it in time. But Marjorie mustn't be left alone. I'd be ready to face anything if I knew that she was safe. She mustn't be left in that house—not a single night. Promise me that you'll take her with you as soon as the inquest's over!"

"I'll promise that, Swain, gladly," I said, "provided, of course, the doctor consents."

We must get him, and Swain sprang to his feet. We must explain to him how important it is.

Perhaps I can get him on the phone," I said, but the person who answered told me that he had already started for the inquest. And, a moment after, Hagar tapped at the door of the study and said that the doctor was outside. I told her to [illegible]

The truth [illegible] has with both of us. [illegible] drop in to find out if [illegible] thing I could do. [illegible] son, he went on [illegible] Swain [illegible] and [illegible] dead man's [illegible] marks [illegible] family do puzzle me."

"They puzzle me, too," said Swain, "but I'll prove my innocence, though it will take time."

It took [illegible] sadly, that about the only way [illegible] can prove your innocence is to catch the real murderer."

That's exactly what we're going to do," I replied.

And meanwhile I [illegible] will be in jail," said the doctor.

I'm afraid there's no help for it," I admitted ruefully.

I was just telling Mr Lester that I didn't mind that," said Swain cheerily, that I could stand anything if I was only sure that Miss Vaughan was safe. She isn't safe in the house. Mr Lester has promised to place her with the family of his partner. Mr Royce, where she will be properly taken care of. Is there any reason why she can't be taken there today?"

The doctor considered for a moment.

Ordinarily, he said at last, I would advise that she be left where she is for a few days, but, under the circumstances, perhaps she would better be moved. You can get an easy riding carriage—or a car will do, if you drive carefully. The nurses, will of course, go along. The only thing is, she will probably wish to attend her father's funeral, which takes place tomorrow."

I have a horror of her staying in that house another night," he said, "but I hadn't thought of the funeral. There is one [illegible] on deck at the time, isn't there, doctor?"

"Yes."

"All right, then, we'll risk one night more. But you promise me that she shall be taken away immediately after the funeral?"

Not only is the silhouette symmetrical, but the sketch on also branch balancing branch. That is what gives it its remarkable fitness to comport with architectural lines with geometrically designed vistas. It has a formal structure and a consequent dignity which make it the logical shade for a village street, a chapel a library, the scholarly procession in cap and gown. Add to that dignity its arched and airy lightness and its splendid size, and you have the king of urban trees."

Pan-American Rallying Cry

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Secretary Lansing takes as his motto for Pan-Americanism the phrase of the "Three Musketeers," "One for all, all for one." This is a fair motto, but the old slogan of the Knights of Labor is more expressive, "An injury to one is the concern of all." Put this into resounding Latin and you got a rallying cry to conjure with.

VOLUNTEERS NOT EFFICIENT SOLDIERS

By George Washington.

Regular troops alone are equal to the exigencies of modern war, as well for defense as offense—whenever a substitute is attempted it must prove illusory and ruinous. The firmness requisite for the real business of fighting is only to be obtained by a constant course of discipline and service.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft, lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

SALTS IS FINE FOR KIDNEYS, QUIT MEAT

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

MASON CITY, IOWA

Hancock Co. Short Course

KLEMME, IOWA ON FEBRUARY 14-19, '16

ANNOUNCEMENT OF IMPORTANCE

The Short Course is for the purpose of assisting farmers and their wives and children in solving the numerous problems of the farm, particularly to help them make a goodly profit on the high priced Iowa land. Old fashioned methods will not pay interest on land worth from $100 to $200 per acre, while careful attention to details, the application of methods which absolute tests have proved the best, will bring the largest results and profits and will add much to the comforts of country life.

The Short Course is not a town affair. Except for the women and girls of the town who attend the domestic science school the town people get little direct benefit. The Klemme business men are backing up an educational enterprise which is for the improvement of farming conditions. They are not only public spirited in this, they are moved by the knowledge that the best interests of the town depend absolutely on the success and well-being of the farmer,

The managers of the Course wish it clearly understood that this is not a money making scheme. The officers and committees give their time to this work absolutely free. The business men of Klemme are co-operating cheerfully in this matter and have donated many valuable premiums in merchandise and cash.

An important and interesting hydro-electric plant has just been put into operation at Porjus, in Sweden, just above the Arctic circle. The prevailing severity of the winter has been responsible for a number of unusual measures to insure the continuity of service in spite of the ice conditions. In 1904 the Swedish government, realizing the value of the water power resources of the kingdom and the part they migh be made to play in this country's economic development, took steps toward the acquirement and utilization by the state of certain water powers

Dr Manuel Amador, director of the Mexican Institute for Biological Research, says he has developed a method for taking X-ray photographs without the use of radium, Crookes tubes or expensive apparatus of any kind. He used radio-active rays obtained from an electric lamp fitted with a reflector coated with highly purified white sulphur While experimenting with the radio-active properties of this substance, he says, he has discovered a cheap substitute for radium.

German scientists have found that glycerine is a valuable sterilizing agent. Various deadly germs when heated in it to a temperature of 248 degrees Fahrenheit were completely killed in one minuts. This process is particularly valuable for sterilizing surgical instruments for the reason that the metal is not attacked nor is the temperature affected. Rubber tubes can be sterilized in it, and instead of being injured, the elasticity of those which have become brittle is restored by the treatment.

General Sherman's epigram, "War is hell," has an apt paraphrase in a personal letter recently received from a surgeon of the British forces in Flanders: "The war, as I see it here in the trenches," he says, "may be summed up in three words—mud, blood and blasphemy." The atmosphere of Flanders, it will be remembered by readers of "Tristram Shandy," is conducive to profanity—"Our armies swore terribly in Flanders," said Uncle Toby.

City men are better developed than country men, according to the report of a German army surgeon, who bases his statement on the result of the examination of 10,000 soldiers. He says the farmers were inferior in carriage and in development of bone and muscle, and that he found among them more cases of curvature of the spine, flat foot and varicose veins than among the city men.

The armies of the allies are using sponges, or gauze, soaked with some solution, to absorb the chlorine and bromine gases employed by the Germans in trench warfare. Ordinarily, "hypo," or sodium thiosulphate, is widely used for this purpose and it gives, generally, good results, except that the reaction between the hypo and the chlorine, or bromine, liberates some hydrochloric and sulphuric acid.

Estimates of exports on the Cuban sugar crop of 1915-16 show that it will be a record one. One hundred and eighty-eight sugar centrals have begun grinding the sugar, as against 176 in operation last season. The cane is said to be the best in quality in years, cool weather having ripened it properly and added a higher saccharine content than usual.

IOWA HAS DIFFICULT TIME WITH PROPOSED STATE BUTTER LABEL

Barney Had Trouble In Getting Patent—Now Cannot Secure Necessary Stamps.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 29.—The Iowa butter trademark appears to be hoodooed. At least the state dairy and food commission has been having a difficult time to get the production of "Iowa butter" under way.

The latest trouble is the refusal of the glass manufacturers to make the glass stamps which are intended for use in the creameries in putting the "Iowa butter" trademark on the cakes of butter. The firms all declare they are too busy to take the small order at this time and decline to make the stamps within the next six months.

The result will be that the state probably will have the stamps made out of wood and the production of "Iowa butter" may be begun in a few weeks.

W. B. Barney, dairy and food commissioner, proposed the plan of the Iowa buttermakers, putting out a brand of butter which scores above 93 per cent, under an Iowa trademark, as a means of creating a distinct market for Iowa butter. The last general assembly passed a law providing for an Iowa trademark in the shape of an outline of the state of Iowa within a circle, with the words: "First quality, state butter control."

The patent department at Washington at first refused to issue a trademark in the name of a state. After six months' correspondence, the department backed down and issued the trademark. The Iowa department then began to prepare to extend the use of the trademark to Iowa creameries able to put out butter which grades above 93 per cent.

Mr. Barney proposed that the stamps for placing the trademark on the butter be made of glass, as a more sanitary method than using wood stamps, the system now in use. However, the manufacturers have declined to make them, so that the department probably will be forced to use wood stamps. The glass stamps probably would have cost 30 to 40 cents each. The wood stamps will run to $5 each, it is said.

FORMER KEOKUK YOUTH HURT IN FOREIGN WAR

Keokuk, Ia., Jan. 29.—James Mackenzie, former Keokuk high school football star, is the first Iowan to be wounded in the European war. MacKenzie is a private with the Tenth Cameronians on the west front in France and was wounded in the right leg during a charge September 24, 1915. He has recovered from his injury and is back in the trenches now.

Mackenzie joined the British forces last summer and was sent to France in August. He got into the fighting immediately and participated in the early part of the big allied drive last fall.

In a letter to his mother, now at Gary, Ind., Mackenzie says that great preparations for an allied onslaught next spring are already under way He wrote that all of the English soldiers are undergoing severe hardships, but that they are cheerful and sanguine of victory

VETERAN ROCK RAPIDS AGENT CHECKED OUT OF SERVICE

Rock Rapids, Ia., Jan. 29.—W W. Nichols, who has been agent here for the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha railway for the past 10 years, and who has been with the company 26 years, has been checked out and Mr Ross, formerly agent at Adrian, Minn., checked in.

Mr. Nicholas, who was well liked by the business men here, has been very accommodating in his dealings with the patrons of the road, and a petition signed by nearly all the merchants in town has been signed protesting against the action taken by the company

LARRABEE MAY DECIDE TO TRY FOR CONGRESS

Fort Dodge, Ia., Jan. 29.—Following his announcement that he withdraws from the state senate, Frederic Larrabee, of Fort Dodge, may decide to run for congress from the Tenth district Mr. Larrabee's decision has not been announced, and probably will not until his return from a trip to the west coast. However, announcement was made in the Fort Dodge Messenger that he is considering the matter. Although Congressman Woods has not announced whether he will run for re-election, it is reported that he will do so.

WESTERN DIVISION ORATORS MEET AT STORM LAKE

Storm Lake, Ia., Jan 29.—For the first time in the history of Buena Vista college the western division of the Iowa Oratorical association will meet at Storm Lake, in the Lakeside Presbyterian church. The colleges represented and the order of their speaking is as follows

The state is divided into two sections and the winning orators from each will meet at Des Moines college on March 4, where the final state contest will be held. The winner of the state contest will then go the to the interstate contest.

CORRECTIONVILLE—The high school debating team, consisting of Raymond Dubois, Miss Lillian Jorgenson and William Barron, who recently defeated the Hawarden high school team, will debate the same question here this evening with the Lake City team The Lake City debaters are Leo Turley, Frank Carter and Harold Sandy The question for debate is, "Resolved, That the several state should establish a schedule of minimum wages for unskilled labor—constitutionality conceded."

HOLSTEIN—Voters of Holstein approved the plan to build a new $50,000 school house. The vote was taken at a special election. Both women and men favored the new building proposition. The vote was on the question of issuing $50,000 in bonds to build a new structure or to spend $2,000 for repairs to the old one.

FORT DODGE—Tenth district democrats will meet in Fort Dodge, February 4, to make preliminary plans for the coming election W W Marsh, national committeeman, and Dr. J. Reynolds, state chairman, will make addresses. State Committeeman W L. Branagan, of Emmetsburg, called the meeting.

HOSPERS—Dr DeVogel died here after an illness of a few day. Dr. DeVogel was one of the pioneers of Hospers, having lived here for over 40 years. He was over 81 years of age. Death was caused by an attack of the grip, followed by pneumonia. The doctor had received his education in the Netherlands and Germany and was a highly skilled physician and surgeon

IOWA COAL DEALERS DULY WARNED ABOUT SHORT WEIGHT LAWS

Complaints and Tests Show Some Abuses Exist—Arrests and Prosecutions Due.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 29.—The following letter has been mailed from the office of the state dairy and food commissioner to all Iowa dealers in coal:

Gentlemen: Frequent complaints of short weights are reaching the department. The inspectors have reweighed many loads of coal and found substantial shortages. Prosecutions will follow.

There are several reasons for the shortages. In some cases dishonesty has been practiced. At times weighmen have been extremely careless. Wagons have been overloaded and coal lost between the yard and the place of delivery.

Short weights will not be tolerated. Purchasers are entitled to receive all the coal they pay for. The department must insist that coal be weighed more closely. The weighman should break as close as 10 pounds rather than at 50 or 100, as seems to be the practice in some cities. Inspectors have found some dealers receiving the advantage of the breaks both on the gross and the tare.

Keep your scales clean at all times. Balance often. Examine the pits at least once a week. When new scales are installed make sure that there is at least a four-foot clearance so that one may get under the scales to make repairs or to clean them.

Do not overload your wagons. Drivers often start from the yard or mine with their loads heaped high and before they can reach the destination they are bound to lose a portion of the coal. This should not be. The wagon boxes should be tight to prevent leakage. The law requires the dealer to deliver to the purchaser as many pounds of coal as the delivery ticket indicates.

In some cases dealers have offered the explanation that the men delivering the coal have left part of the coal in the wagon, taking it home. This can be done, it is said, where the customer does not take the precaution to see that he gets the entire load.

SPECIAL DAY ASSIGNED FOR IOWA WOMEN FARMERS

Ames, Ia., Jan. 29.—The woman farmer of Iowa is to have one whole day at the farmers' congress at Ames. This day is allotted in recognition of the place occupied by women in agriculture in this state. Figures compiled at Iowa State college show that 1,600 women in Iowa either own or manage farms, and that 5,000 of this number are engaged in actual farming.

Woman's Farm day will be February 3, and all the speakers to appear on the program will be women, The program follows:

Miss Pearle Mitchell, president of the Women's federation, will speak on "Business and Domesticity of Iowa's Women Farmers;" Mrs. E. B. Wilson, of Jefferson, "Social and Labor Needs of Farm Women;" Mrs. Fannie Klinck, of Clarkesville, "Handicraft or Work, the Greatest Thing in the World;" Mrs. E. W. Johnson, of Independence, "How to Get Most Out of Farm Life;" Mrs. Jennie Conrad, of Conrad, Ind., "Problems of a Woman Farmer" Mrs. Nellie Richardson, Des Moines, "Managing the Farm and the Farmers."

AGED WOMAN HAD $3,618 CONCEALED ABOUT PERSON

Marshalltown, Ia., Jan. 29.—Alleging that she was of unsound mind and needed a guardian to look after her property, worth $4,000, relatives of Mrs. Julia Undum, of Dunbar, this county, appeared in court here. The woman was adjudged insane.

Sewed in seams and tucked away in different parts of her skirts and petticoat, and suspended in little bags fastened about her neck and waist, was found $3 618, most of it in gold and bank notes. In one package alone was $500 on which the bank seal, dated in 1906, had never been broken

Mrs. Undum is 85 years old and childish. She was committed to the county hospital.

FIRST DISTRICT DEMOCRATS INDORSE GEO. A. STIVERS

Burlington, Ia., Jan 29.—George A. Stivers, editor of the Burlington Gazette, was indorsed for delegate at large to the democratic national convention and E. K. Stall, of Henry county, and John E. Craig, of Lee county, were indorsed for district delegates at a conference of First district democratic leaders held here.

W. S. Grimes, of Louisa county, and J. A. Johnson, of Van Buren county, were named for alternates at large.

No candidate for congress was indorsed, although S. K. Tracy, of Burlington, Dr. Syernberg, of Mount Pleasant, E. C. Webber, of Fort Madison; James Gillis, of Mount Pleasant and E. B. Whittaker, of Hillsboro, were favorably mentioned.

STATE FINISHES CASE IN ATLANTIC SOUTHERN HEARING

Council Bluffs, Ia., Jan. 29.—The state finished its case yesterday in the federal suit brought by Robert Abeles a majority stockholder of the Atlantic Southern railroad, to enjoin the enforcement of an order made by the Iowa railway commissioners to operate trains over the road. Today, witnesses for Abeles have been on the stand. The case probably will go to the court during the day.

Twenty residents along the railroad which is 47 miles long, extending from Atlantic, Ia., to Villisca, Ia., testified that they had been damaged by the suspension of operation of the road. They also testified that in their opinion the road could be operated at a profit under proper management.

It is the contention of Abeles that business does not justify the operation of the road. The residents along the line contend they are being defrauded by the refusal to operate. The road was built by private subscription and funds voted by townships. Abeles was a heavy creditor and in 1907, when the north end of the road suspended, the physical stock of the company was transferred to him.

MISSOURI VALLEY—Mrs. Monin, of Missouri Valley, who lives alone in her home, suffered a stroke of paralysis and fell to the floor helpless. After a time she managed, with great effort, to crawl to a window and call her neighbor, who went to her aid

MANY ASPIRANTS FOR MUNICIPAL COURT JOBS

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 27.—Fully 30 candidates for positions in the newly created municipal court are expected to materialize before the municipal election in March, as the result of the decision last week by the Iowa supreme court that the special election of November 29, 1915, on the proposition of establishing the new tribunal was legal.

The new court will become a part of the city's law system on April 1 and will supplant the justice of the peace courts and the present police court. It will comprise four judges, one clerk and four bailiffs.

ACTIVE CAMPAIGN ON ROAD WORK PLANNED FOR IOWA DISTRICTS

Greater Iowa Association Announces Campaign For Hard Surfaced Highways.

Davenport, Ia., Jan. 28.—From its new headquarters at Davenport, the Greater Iowa association will devote all its efforts this year to a hard roads campaign. To do this the association outlined the following plan at the meeting of the executive committee here today: The association will work through the different highway associations, of which Iowa has nearly a score; these will be invited to a general conference to work out a common plan of action and after this has been outlined the Greater Iowa association, backed by the highway organizations, will go to the legislature with unified demands.

Authority for road districts to bond themselves for hard roads improvements will be asked. These road districts are to be composed of counties of an indeterminate number. The district is to employ an engineer to determine what kind of road shall be built and then let a contract to be paid for by a bond issue to carry out the building of the new roads. The movement will naturally begin around the larger cities, but with these as examples the building of hard roads will soon be pushed throughout the state. The energies of the Greater Iowa association spent last year on the Panam exposition will this year be devoted entirely to internal improvements.

SON SEEKS TRACES OF FATHER'S SCATTERED ESTATE

Shenandoah, Ia., Jan. 28.—Following the clue of a torn letter, Benjamin F. Pierce, of Cassville, Mo., was here Friday searching for his father's last estate. Mr. Pierce inherited his father's property a short time ago, but the records were in such condition that he has only been able to locate a portion of his inheritance.

Mr. Pierce believes he has a farm somewhere near Shenandoah. In searching through his father's papers he found a letter telling of a 100-acre farm. A part of the letter was torn and the remaining piece told of land near "Shenan—." With only this as a clue, he is looking for his estate somewhere in this neighborhood.

The father died January 8 and the son is a sole heir. He has been quite successful in getting together a good portion of his legacy. He has already found $14,000, which was in various trust companies.

Chicago, Jan. 28.—One week's experience of "gay life" and Eleanor Hesselman, 15 years old, is ready to return to the cows and chickens on an Iowa farm.

She was lured away from home by a "traveling man" who promised to marry her on their arrival in Chicago.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon Policewoman Finan found the girl at the La Salle street station She had come in from Des Moines several hours before and was waiting for the return of her Lochinvar He had left her at the depot upon their arrival to go in search of a "marrying squire."

After telling the policewoman conflicting stories the girl broke down and wept She expressed a desire to die rather than face the home folks. Later, when a telegram was received from her foster father saying that he would send for her, she became more cheerful

"Sully, Ia., is just a little bit of a town," she said, "but when I get back there I will never again leave it."

ONE BOOTLEGGER FINED IN PLYMOUTH DISTRICT COURT

LeMars, Ia., Jan 28.—The January term of the Plymouth county district court is in session here with Judge William Hutchinson, of Alton, presiding. The grand jury was impaneled as follows C. L. Webber, Hancock, foreman, George Luce, Perry, Gerrett Ranken, LeMars, G. A. Lang, Stanton, G. A. Dennler, Plymouth; H. N Kanago, Johnson, J J. Mansfield, Sioux

William Dwver was fined $300 for the illegal sale of liquors This is the first case of bootlegging in the county since Iowa went "dry."

D Day was sentenced to 10 years in Anamosa for robbing his roommate, Bernard Riley, at a local hotel on the night of December 17

MISS DUNLAP SANGUINE OF VICTORY FOR SUFFRAGE

Des Moines, Ia., Jan 28.—Miss Flora Dunlap, president of the Iowa Equal Suffrage association, in a signed statement issued here today, declared that equal suffrage would win in Iowa at the June primary this year, because "the men and women who live in Iowa are back of the movement."

"Eighty-four counties in the state have women's suffrage organizations made up of both men and women, and working for a favorable vote in June The officers of the Equal Suffrage association are much pleased with the responses from every county in the state and believe that Iowa will be the 12th of the progressive states to give the ballot to women."

Miss Dunlap said that a recent canvass of Des Moines on the question of suffrage, had revealed the following: For equal suffrage, 21,284 against 2-503, neut al 5,955

ENGINEER'S REPORT TELLS OF O'BRIEN COUNTY ACTIVITIES

Primghar, Ia Jan 28 -The county engineer's annual report to the highway commission and the board of supervisors gives an interesting record of road improvements made in the county from November 1, 1914, to January 1, 1916. It showed the value of the plans and estimates prepared in the office in 1915 to be $60,166 For bridges, $51,829.98 was spent The road fund expenditures amounted to $52,324.69.

From the report the average number of times the roads were dragged was 24.f, and the average cost was 75 8 cents per mile, round trip. The average cost per mile for the year was $18.79, and the cost of dragging the entire system once was $138 35 At present the county owns road machinery and tools to the value of $11 '82 05, and the townships to the value of $14,090.87.

LE MARS—Miss Isla Gilbert was adjudged winner at the annual declamatory contest of the LeMars high school. She will represent LeMars at the subdistrict contest to be held at LeMars on March 16. The district contest will be held at Emmetsburg on March 24, when a dozen schools of northwestern Iowa will compete

DES MOINES—Assistant Attorney General Henry Sampson has announced his candidacy for Attorney General Cossor's office It also was announced that H M Havener, of Marengo, a well known prohibition worker has withdrawn because of the ill health of his wife.

PRESIDENT WARNS THOSE WHO WOULD CLOUD MAIN ISSUE

Preparedness No Question For Party Politics or Personal Ambitions, Wilson Tells His Hearers.

HE'S IN FIGHTING MOOD

Assails Critics of His Mexican and European Policies — Must Have Results From U. S. Congress.

New York, Jan. 29.—President Wilson, in firing the first gun in his campaign in behalf of preparedness, last night announced that he "always accepted an invitation to a fight" and though essentially a man of peace he had become converted to the belief that it is necessary for the United States to arm for defense and warned those who seek to play politics with an issue of such grave importance.

"Woe to any man who plays marplot or who seeks to make party politics or personal ambition take precedence over candor, honor and unselfish, unpartisan service!" said the president in speaking of his defense plan before the railway men. He declared that the country expects action; this is a year of accounting, and the accounting must be definite on the part of the parties and on the part of every individual who wishes to enjoy the public confidence.

"For my part, I hope every man in public life will get what's coming to him," said Mr. Wilson, amid laughter and applause.

In Fighting Mood.

The president evidently was in a fighting mood all evening. He assailed the opponents of his Mexican policy and his conduct of relations with Europe.

"If we are drawn into the maelstrom which now surges in Europe," the president declared, "we shall not be permitted to do the high things we would prefer"

During his speech before nearly 1,500 business men at the railway banquet, where he cast aside almost entirely the text of the address that he previously prepared for delivery there, he was frequently interrupted by applause.

The president admitted that in a message to the last congress he had said the need for preparedness was not pressing He declared that he had learned differently in the meantime. He cited his recent support of a tariff commission as an instance of a change on his part, but declared that previously there was no need for such a commission

Clouding the Issue.

President Wilson spoke of men of high character who were clouding the preparedness issue He declared they were provincial, and that the United States could no longer cut itself off from the rest of the world.

The president defended the continental army plan drawn up by Secretary Garrison, and said that he did not care about the details of any plan as long as 500,000 trained men were provided as reserves under the federal government. He advocated strengthning the national guard.

FLOOD IN ARKANSAS COVERS VAST AREA

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 29.—Hundreds of persons are homeless and thousands of acres of land are inundated in the lower reaches of the White and Arkansas rivers. Upstream, with the Arkansas river four miles wide at Mulberry, is a volume of water which, river men believe, will cause the worst flood in 25 years.

With the reports of high water, came also the information from Mulberry that a heavy wind had done considerable damage to residences, gins and oil mill plants Heavy rains over the state last night added to the difficulties of the situation.

STRINGENT ELECTION BILL IS RECOMMENDED

Washington, Jan 28.—The Senate elections committee today recommended passage of bills to make it unlawful for any member of congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club or organization, to limit the use of campaign funds in presidential and congressional elections and prohibit the movement of outside funds into "doubtful" localities

WILL REQUEST MONEY FOR IMPROVING RIVER

Washington, D C., Jan. 28.—The Nebraska delegation has arranged to appear before the House rivers and harbors committee in support of an appropriation of $75,000 for removing snags in the Missouri river between Kansas City and Sioux City.

CAPITAL "DRY" BILL IS SENT TO SENATE

Washington, D C, Jan. 28.—Prohibition for the District of Columbia is the object of a bill reported without recommendation today by the Senate committee, which handles the local affairs of the capital. Leaders on both sides expect the question to be fought out in the open at this session of congress.

BILIOUS, HEADACHY SICK "CASCARET

Gently cleanse your liver sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and breath—always trace them to the liver; delayed, fermenting food in bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast of the system is re-absorbed into blood. When this poison reaches delicate brain tissue it causes digestion and that dull, throbbing, splitting headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

The Advantage.

"Hearing those high-priced opera singers on the phonograph is almost as good as" hearing them on the stage."

"Better. You can shut them off whenever you like on the phonograph."

A GLASS OF SALTS WILL END KIDNEY-BACKACHE

Says Drugs Excite Kidneys and Recommends Only Salts, Particularly If Bladder Bothers You.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.—Adv.

Sergeant—I dunno, sir. I've never tasted any.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

WILSON APPOINTS BRANDEIS, BOSTON LAWYER, TO BENCH

HELPED ELECT PRESIDENT

Washington, Jan. 29.—President Wilson today selected Louis D. Brandeis of Boston, to be associate justice of the supreme court to succeed late Justice Lamar.

Mr Brandeis' nomination went to the Senate today It was a surprise everywhere in official circles. Mr. Brandeis had not even been mentioned for the vacancy.

Brandeis, though a republican worked hard for the election of Wilson in 1912. He was opposed to Roosevelt's plan of regulating, rather than destroying, business monopolies. He thought Taft was too friendly to big interests. Mr. Brandeis is a Jew and is president of the Zionist federation.

Intense opposition exists in the Senate to the appointment of Louis D Brandeis as justice of the supreme court A bitter fight on confirmation will be made. At bottom, it will be a fight against a radical man on the bench Conservative democrats and republicans will join.

Louis D. Brandeis was born at Louisville Ky., November 13, 1856. He was admitted to the bar in 1878 He is a Harvard graduate.

Mr Brandeis came into great prominence as attorney for Mr Glavis in the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation in 1910 The following year he was engaged as counsel for the shippers in the advanced rate case investigation before the commerce commission. He has been connected with such suits as the ones testing the constitutionality of the Oregon and Illinois women's 10-hour laws, and the Ohio nine-hour law, in preserving Boston's municipal subways system, and in establishing Boston's low scale gas system; in opposing the New Haven monopoly of transportation in New England; was chairman of the arbitration board in the New York garment makers' strike in 1910, and is regarded as an authority on life insurance, wage problems, scientific and trust questions. He also took an active part in the Pujo money trust investigation and in the advanced freight rate case before the Interstate Commerce commission last year.

AMERICAN OFFICERS FACE COURT MARTIAL

Men Who Invaded Mexico Believed to Have Violated Orders.

Washington, D C., Jan. 29.—Court-martial of the three American army officers, Lieutenants, Payton, Mort and Waldron, who led a detachment of soldiers into Mexico to rescue two comrades who had been captured by armed Mexicans near Brownsville, Tex probably will result, if an investigation proves that they violated orders not to cross the international boundary line. In that case, it was said, also they probably would be held for the death of the four members of the rescue party, who were drowned in the Rio Grande while returning from the expedition.

Secretary Garrison, who is awaiting the outcome of the investigation, said that positive orders had been given army officers not to cross the border without instructions from Washington

Prompt action on the part of the Carranza authorities in returning the two captured American soldiers unharmed, was regarded here as indicative of a desire to prove their innocence and to show good will toward the United States.

NEGRO IS LIBERATED; WIFE JOINS HUSBAND

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 28.—Raymond Dodds, the mulatto chauffeur, who eloped here from San Diego, Cal., with Mrs. Van Lee Hood last week, was discharged from custody by the police last night, after the federal authorities announced that they did not desire to prosecute him. A Salt Lake attorney who says he was retained by telegraph, by a friend of Mrs. Hood, at San Diego, had obtained a writ of habeas corpus for Dodds' release, but Dodds had been set at liberty before the writ arrived at the police station.

Mrs Hood has returned to San Diego to join her husband.

INSURGENCY CHECKED AT COOPERATIVE CONVENTION

Watertown, S. D., Jan. 28.—Insurgency in the South Dakota Farmers' Cooperative convention failed in the first election on the secretaryship at the closing session. F. L. Ryan, of Mount Vernon, nominated to contest the place of the veteran, J. T. Belk, of Utica, received 12 votes. The regu- nominated for places on the board of directors were elected as follows: J. W Anderson, Willow Lakes; Louis Kilwein, Britton; William Seipp, Groton; E. H. Day, Clark; F. O. Simonson, Vermilion; Charles Borson, Lyman H. G. Solem, Baltic. O. D. Peterson, of Corsica, was reelected president without opposition. In the final resolutions Wilson adherents were and secured approval of the administration's joint committee bill, providing a federal credits system.

ITALIANS LIKELY TO BE ATTACKED

General Von Koevess, Conqueror of Montenegro, Now Moving Toward Port of Durazzo.

Paris, Jan. 28.—A dispatch from Milan says that several sections of the army of General Koevess, having met no resistance at San Giovanni Di Medua and Alessio are now marching on Durazzo, according to the Athens correspondent of the Secolo. Their advance guards were reported on Wednesday near Kroia, and it is said that General Koevess tried to enlist Albanian volunteers, and when they refused to join offered to buy their arms, thus hoping to disarm the population and protect himself against attack.

Bulgarians in southern Albania are said to be marching from Berat to join columns from Lake Ochrida. The Greeks, it is added, have sent reinforcements to Koritsa and Argyro-Castro, and uneasiness is expressed in military circles which are distrustful regarding the Bulgarian movements.

It has been reported that the Italians have an army of from 30,000 to 50,000 at Durazzo, where they landed several weeks ago.

FRENCH BLUEJACKETS SEIZE GREEK VILLAGE

Paris, Jan. 28.—A dispatch to the Matin says that French bluejackets have occupied the small town of Antiphilo on the coast of Asia Minor, opposite Caselorizo.

A Havas dispatch from Salonika says the French marines landed from a warship, which was supported by two armed trawlers and took prisoner the local garrison consisting of a captain and 25 men They destroyed the telegraph wires, seized a number of documents and permitted Greek families which had been driven away to return to their dwellings.

RUSSIANS WAKING UP TRAVELER DECLARES

New York, Jan. 28.—Numerous German submarines have been sighted in the war zone around the British Isles during the last few weeks, according to passengers who arrived today on the steamship California from Liverpool and Glasgow. The sailing of the steamer was delayed one day, owing to the reported presence of the U boats and the California was escorted by torpedo boat destroyers until safely outside the war zone.

The Russians are "waking up in every way," according to Dr. Frederick W. Eastman, a passenger on the California, who has been acting as a Red Cross surgeon in Russia and Serbia for more than a year.

"Heretofore the Russians have fought solely as a duty," said Dr. Eastman, "but they are now strongly antagonistic to the Germans and Austrians, and are entering the war with a vengeance."

EIGHT MEN OF CREW OF GARBAGE BOAT LOST

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 28.—Eight men, the crew of steam schooner Aberdeen, were given up for lost today when wreckage from the boat began coming ashore two miles and a half below the harbor entrance. The Aberdeen carried garbage to sea for the city of Oakland. Capt. P. M. Knudson, of Oakland, Cal., was in command.

Two years ago the Signal, another Oakland garbage carrier, was wrecked at the entrance of the bay without loss of life.

THROW COIN AWAY TO EVADE POLICE

Newsboy Finds $7,800 In the Street Near Flat Where Five Robbers Suspects Are Taken.

Chicago, Jan 29 - Identification of Eddie Mack and four men arrested this morning as the robbers who raided the Washington Park National bank yesterday and stole $15,000, was made today by J Garland Stahl vice president of the bank according to Captain Nicholas Hunt chief of chief's detectives.

The prisoners were confronted by Stahl in the offices of Morris Hoyne state's attorney Stahl who was formerly manager of the Boston American baseball club fired two revolvers in the hands of one of the robbers yesterday He was positive in his identification

Mack is said by the police to have a long record as a pickpocket

More than half of the stolen $15,000 is now in possession of the police

The police raided rooms recently rented in a west side apartment building and arrested five men and three women. While they were breaking down the door a newsboy in the street outside saw a pasteboard box fall at his feet.

He kicked it and $10 and $20 bills flew out over the sidewalk. The detectives appeared with their prisoners and took charge of the box of money. It totalled $7,800, and many of the bills were identified by the cashier of the bank.

Captain Hunt said that he was fairly certain the five men who robbed the bank had been captured.

Chicago, Jan 28.—Wires of a police alarm system in the city treasurer's office by which half a dozen policemen could be summoned immediately, were cut about a week ago, it was learned today. They have been repaired and the clerks supplied with revolvers. The treasurer has been known to handle $1,000,000 in one week.

YUAN SHI KAI FAILS TO ALLAY SUSPICIONS

Shanghai, Jan. 29.—The official notification of the postponement of the coronation of Yuan Shi Kai was so indefinite that it does not appear to have altered the south Chinese opposition to him.

This is evidenced by newspapers in the international settlement which ridicule the instructions by the post-office authorities that the publications could not be transmitted through the mails unless they were dated the first year of the Chinese empire, instead of according to western calendars, by printing the former in the minutest of type.

The moderates furthermore have been embittered by the fact that 76 prominent residents of Shanghai, including former Premier Tang Shao-Yi; Liank Chi-Chao, the scholar; former Minster of Foreign Affairs Wang Chung-Wei, and Wen-Tsung-Yao have been proscribed and are afraid to leave their homes for fear of violence.

Japan's ideas of the situation are shown by the arrival of General Aoki, former commandant at Port Arthur, who has been stationed at Shanghai for the present with orders to report direct to the general staff at Tokio.

FEAR FOR VESSEL AND 300 PERSONS

Steamer Apham, With 166 Passengers and Crew of 134, Is Many Days Overdue.

London, Jan 29.—Grave anxiety is felt regarding the British steamship Apham, which left Dakar for Plymouth on January 11, with 166 passengers and 134 in the crew When about four days out, wireless communication with the vessel suddenly ceased A dispatch from Hull to Lloyds says that the British steamship Tregantle reports having passed at sea on January 16 a life boat with the name Apham painted on the stern and the bow knocked away

The Apham is many days overdue on the 10-day trip from Dakar, Senegal, West Africa, for Plymouth

A report from Lisbon recently announced that mines had been discovered in the Bay of Biscay

The Apham was of 7,781 tons gross. She was owned by the British and African Steamship Navigation company.

[illegible] TISH WORKERS [illegible] RE UP IN ARMS

[illegible] vention Votes to Demand [illegible] astic Revision of Law Which They Claim Coerces Workmen.

[illegible] stol, England, Jan 29—The la[illegible] conference adopted by a show of hands, with one dissenting vote, a resolution brought forward by the independent labor party, demanding drastic revision of the munitions act with a view to preventing the pretext of the war being used for greater coercion and subjection of labor

The labor conference today, by a card vote of 1,674,000 against 269,000 confirmed the action of the executive committee of the labor party in parliament in allowing labor representatives to assume offices in the coalition government

The munitions act complained of requires that skilled and unskilled and female labor be employed in government work without distinction as to whether or not they are union or non-union The labor leaders have been bitterly opposed from the start to this measure, insisting that only skilled labor be employed in certain kinds of work. Where the government or employers have refused to comply with their demands, strikes frequently have resulted. This has delayed the production of munitions and other war material and, according to Lloyd-George, minister of munitions, has cheated the British armies out of more than one victory.

The attitude of labor has greatly embittered the opposition, who charge that the British casualties have been greatly augmented by the fact that the armies were not properly equipped and could not be properly equipped as long as the workmen hamper the output of munitions. The army, now 4,000,000 strong, is very hostile toward organized labor because of its uncompromising attitude. Defenders of the government's policy argue that it is not a matter of coercing labor so much, as obtaining definite necessary results from labor in the present crisis.

"This conference, in view of the unprecedented situation that exists, expresses the opinion that the best interests of the nation would be served by the labor party representation remaining in the coalition government"

The card vote for the resolution was 1,622,000 against 495,000.

W E. Cross, seconding the resolution, drew attention to what he said the danger of a schism in the labor movement. He hoped that a united vote for the resolution would do much to prevent that.

MEDICAL MEETINGS BROUGHT TO A CLOSE

At the close of the session of the Sioux Valley Medical association Mrs. Maud McCreery, of Green Bay, Wis., district organizer for the cause of woman suffrage, addressed the doctors and asked their support in the future campaigns. WARRING POWERS URGED TO ADOPT NEW SUBSEA CODE

United States Asks All Belligerents to Make General Agreement on U-Boat Issue.

WOULD PROTECT NEUTRALS

Unless Nations Comply Foreign Armed Merchant Ships Will Be Denied Entrance to Harbors.

Washington Jan 28—The United States [illegible] all European belligerents to make a general agreement to square their submarine warware with the principles of humanity and international law has taken the position that under changed conditions of naval warfare merchant ships should carry no armaments whatever

All the powers have been notified that unless they subscribe to such principles armed merchantmen will be denied entry to American ports except under the conditions which apply to warships

Such a proposal now in the hands of the belligerent governments has been transmitted in a note which is substantially as follows

Appeals to All.

It is assumed that all of the governments addressed are equally desirous of protecting their own subjects and citizens who are noncombatants from the hazard of submarine warfare.

Realizing the appalling loss of life of noncombatants which results from the destruction of a merchant vessel without removing passengers and crews to places of safety which is held to be violative of the principles of humanity and international law, the United States at the same time does not feel that a belligerent should be deprived of the right to use submarines in view of the usefulness which they have developed.

That a formula may be found completely within the rules of international law and of humanity which will require in its adoption only a trifling change in the practices which have obtained in the past and before the war, which formula would be just and fair to all belligerents, it is proposed that.

What Is Sought.

First A noncombatant has the right to traverse the high seas in a merchant ship and entitled to fly a belligerent flag and rely upon the rules of international law and the principles of humanity if the vessel is approached by a belligerent war vessel

Second A merchant vessel of any nationality should not be subjected to attack until the belligerent warship has warned her to stop.

Third Any belligerent owned merchant vessel should promptly obey any order from a belligerent warship to stop.

Fourth. No such merchant vessel should be fired upon unless she tries to flee or to resist [illegible] force and even in such cases any attack upon her by the warship must stop as soon as the flight or resistance ceases.

Fifth Only in case it should be impossible for military reasons for the warship entitled to fly a belligerent flag to [illegible] chant ship into port will she be justified in sinking such merchantman, and in that case passengers and crew must be removed to a place of safety

Many Obstacles.

The state department is fully appreciative of the obstacles which the adoption of these rules would place in the way of the operations of the submarines because of their structural weakness Before the present war maritime warfare on the high seas always has been conducted by battleships or cruisers carrying heavy guns. It is true that merchantmen were permitted to carry defensive armament, but these were light compared with the warships and did not change their nature as merchant vessels This was based upon the superior defensive strength of the warships and the limitation upon their armament was for the purpose of limiting their power of resistance to contact with pirates and privateers.

The appeal to the foreign powers concludes

"The introduction of the submarine into naval warfare has changed all of this. This craft is almost without powers of defense beyond the ability to submerge to escape an enemy A gun even of light caliber on a merchant ship successfully could defend her against a submarine. There are now no pirates and the practice of privateering has been abandoned by civilized nations by general agreement

Rules of War Changed.

"Therefore, there can now be no reason for the maintenance of even small caliber guns on merchant ships unless it is designed to make them superior to the submarines, and thereby deprive that class of warships of their undoubted right with safety to warn and search such merchantmen. In reality, therefore, any such armament of a merchant vessel now might be regarded as offensive armament.

"If submarines should be required to stop and search merchant vessels before attacking them and to remove the passengers and crews to places of safety, it is not fair that the submarines should be compelled to expose themselves to destruction at the hands of merchantmen Therefore, by a general agreement among the belligerents submarines should be required to adhere strictly to the present provisions of international law to stop and search merchant ships to ascertain their belligerent character and to remove the passengers and crews to safety before sinking them.

"On the other hand, merchant vessels should not be permitted to carry any armament at all.

"There is grave doubt of the legal right to carry armament on merchant ships, and it is submitted that all nations should be animated by a desire to save the lives of innocent persons and these should not insist upon the exercise of any supposed technical right

"Is your government willing to make such a declaration conditional on a similar declaration by its enemies?

"The United States government has been very much impressed with the arguments that have been advanced in certain quarters that any merchant vessel that carries guns in any position capable of use against warships has forfeited her noncombatant character and may be regarded as an auxiliary cruiser and is seriously considering the announcing of a purpose to [illegible] vessels on that basis because of changed conditions in maritime warfare resulting from the introduction of the submarine and its defensive character."

Who will be the winner?

Nancy, Grade Short Horn 7 years old, owned by G. H. Carlron, has given 7717 pounds of milk containing 337 pounds of butter fat for 10 months.

Net, Grade Short Horn 10 years old owned by E. J. Arnold, has given 7361 pounds of milk containing 336 of butter fat, for 10 months

Greeny, Grabe Short Horn 7 years old owned by Emil Beier, has given 8904 pounds of milk containing 334 pounds of butter fat for 9 months.

What the heifers are doing.

Josephine, Pure Bred Holstein 2½ years old owned by R. W. Elder, has given 7684 pounds of milk containing 283 pounds of butter fat for 10 months Her nearest rival is her stable mate Zuanna, Pure Bred Holstein 3 years old giving 6645 pounds of milk containing 247 pounds of butter fat, for 10 mouths.

Did it pay these men to feed these high priced feeds?

The average cost of feed for these 5 cows is $22.06. The average production being 306 lbs of butter fat. The average price of butter fat being 31c per lb. Therefore 306x31 equals $94.86 minus $22.06 leaves a balance of $72.80. $72.80 profit, can you get that out of a steer in one year? Is it worth $1.50 to know whether your cows are keeping you or you are keeping them?

NORTHERN LUMBER CO.

N. L. PALMER, Manager

Hancock County Short Course Feb. 14 to 19

A big event is coming soon—an event of significance to every farmer, farmer's wife, son and daughter in Hancock county.

It is an event that will bring "pay dirt" to every person who is big sighted enough to take advantage of it.

It is the Hancock county winter short course and farmers' week at Klemme, February 14th to 19th.

During that week the town will be turned over to the service of the farmers. The biggest men in agriculture in the country will be here to tell the farmers of their life long work and experience in their special lines.

Best methods of farming, backed up by experience, told in plain, understandable English—that's what every farmer wants to hear. That's exactly what he will get at Klemme, February 14-19. But that's not all.

There will be a chance to meet fellow farmers, talk things over with them heart to heart, and learn first hand what they are doing.

Work on the farm is not heavy at this time of year. A more remunerative vacation could not be taken than this week of learning. Plans ought to be made now. The farmer who comes to Klemme will return home a better farmer, a bigger producer and a wiser man.

Tickets are now being offered for sale, purchase one or more when you have the opportunity.

Remember—February 14th to 19th.

BASKET SOCIAL AND PROGRAM

The R. N. A. will hold a basket social and program at the opera house on the evening of Friday, February 11. Everyone is cordially invited and all ladies are kindly requested to bring baskets.

Local Items

Mr. and Mrs. John Bock Jr. are rejoicing over the safe arrivel of a baby boy which came to live with them Thursday, February 3rd.

The Smith Concert Co at the opera house Tuesday evening was greeted by a very small audience but was one of the best musical ever given in Klemme and were deserving of a packed house.

W. H. Krueger was released from quarantine from smallpox the later part of this week and left for his home at Clear Lake, South Dakota. He had a very light case and owing to the precaution taken there is but little chance of any new case developing.

PUBLIC OPINION THE MOST POTENT COURT

Protects the People and the Possessor of Original Constructive Genius

If a person uses an imitation unknowingly and never discovers that it is an imitation he may be able to get along with it and think he is doing well enough. The use of an imitation is a doubtful expedient even though the original may be more difficult to obtain. It always pays to get the best. For one should always remember that an imitation in any line is an attempt to profit through the reputation, efficiency, and good will which the reliability and excellence of the original has established. The obvious intention is to share in the general prosperity of that line of endeavor without paying the price of worthiness. In any product representing self sacrificing effort and patient investigation there is but one authentic original and its characteristic qualities that compelled attention and won approval can never be copied with success or applied with equal efficiency by any other agency. An imitation is a loosing proposition for those who use it when its work is compared with the work and efficiency of the model from which it takes its being.

With these deductions presented for its consideration public opinion, the most potent court in existence, will operate to protect the individual and also the possessor of the ingenuity which has been turned to good account. Each person is an active unit in the making of this verdict. He is looking out for himself, he feels that he is entitled to the best, and he will choose that which appeals to him most. If he makes an error it is not intentional but due to unreliable information, and this stimulates him to exercise better judgement in the future. The people want to know the truth for it protects them, the man of [illegible] wants them to know it for it protects him and means the doom of the imitator. The working out of this happy result may be stated as follows:—Two eminently worthy activities—original productive genius on the one hand and individual best interest on the other, constantly seeking a more perfect realization and both being in harmony with the universal tendency attaining individual success. The universe is in harmony.

Having pursued the subject thus far it is yours to decide whether you will use Dr. A. T. Still's original product of constructive genius, Oteopathy, the Science of Healing by Adjustment in preference to any one of its several imitations. Respectfully,

Dr. R. W. Shultz,
Osteopathic Physician.

CARPENTER FOR SUPERVISOR

The announcement of A. C. Carpenter for supervisor of this district will be sound in its proper place in this issue. Mr. Carpenter has lived in this county for the past 38 years and needs no introduction to the voters of this district. He has seen this country develop from frog ponds and a vast wilderness to its present high standing and thinks he knows the needs of the county when it comes to the supervisorship. He taught school in Avery and Twin Lake townships and also served as principal of the Klemme schools one year. Below will be found a few words to the voters from the pen of Mr. Carpenter.

I believe in publicity, and the economical handling of the public funds. I am opposed to the concrete or macadamized road movement organized in some parts of the state. I believe that the first principle of road building is to [illegible] and that roads should be graveled as rapidly as the finances of the county will permit, will be sufficient for all practical purposes.

A. C. Carpenter.

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece hood.

It is handsomely finished in [illegible] with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch, all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

In long the easy operating Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and [illegible] The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a genuine mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 85 four passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

The value of safety first regulations and first aid provisions has been eloquently shown by the report of the inspector of mines for St. Louis county, Minnesota, within which most of the mines of the Mesaba and Vermilion ranges are located, which presents a striking contrast in the number of accidents in the year ended June 30, 1915, and in a like period 10 years ago. Ten years ago the number of fatalities to 000 men was 7 48 whereas the number was only 2 09 last year There were 4 fatal and 28 serious accidents, with total of 11,436 men employed, and a production of 19,931,274 tons of ore.

Prof Ulric Dahlgren, of Princeton university, predicts that the time will come when the luciferous substance of chemical composition, carried by fireflies, certain fish and animals, will be used for illuminating houses, etc He believes that this will come about when the nature and proportions of the chemical constituents of these substances are discovered, and says they will give a light having an efficiency of 90 per cent instead of the 15 per cent produced by lights now in use

As the effect of laughing is to increase the action of the diaphragm, it moves at every ejaculation in laughing every time one says the syllable "ha" the diaphragm hops up and down and bakes up the contents of the stomach A hearty laugh is an excellent aid to digestion, not simply because of the pleasant state of mind, which makes the condition favorable for all functions of the body, but because of the actual mechanical assistance given to the process of digestion

Rotterdam, Holland's great seaport, which since the war began has become more active than ever before, is to improve its facilities for shipping by deepening the channel to the North sea to 38 feet and later on to 41 feet at high tide The work will require a dredging of more than 10,000,000 cubic yards and cost about $1,000,000. Other contemplated improvements will bring the total to be expended to more than $2,000,000

The Pribilof seal herd, at the end of the breeding season of 1915, contained about one third of a million animals of both sexes and all ages, or about 40,000 more than last year. The pups born this year numbered 103,526. The rapid increase in this herd is due to the act of congress, which has suspended the killing of seals in the Pribilof islands, except a small number of males killed annually for food by the natives

MOTHER LOCATES SON IN IOWA HOME AFTER SEARCH OF 30 YEARS

Young Man Clings to Foster Parents, But Plans to Visit His New Found Mother.

Webster City, Ia., Feb 5.—Stolen from his cradle by his own father 30 years ago, later placed in a children's home in Des Moines and adopted by a family at Lehigh, David Brundage now finds himself the heir to an estate, all because his mother, during all these 30 years, has never once ceased her search for him. Brundage is now 33 years of age and makes his home in Lehigh with his foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Brundage. Mrs. C. Thompson, of Randall, Wash., is the mother in the case, and a letter just received from her by the Brundage family states that she located her son only a few days ago. The mother pleads with the foster parents to tell her something of her son and his whereabouts, whether he is dead or alive and if he is happy.

Mr and Mrs. Brundage adopted the baby in 1887 He was a healthy youngster and grew up with the other Brundage children. Many people in and about Lehigh did not even know he was an adopted child Every attention was lavished upon him And while young Brundage is anxious to learn all he can of his mother and other blood relatives, yet he signifies his intention to remain with his foster parents.

A. E. Watkins, a Randall, Wash., attorney finally located the boy for his mother and a letter to him conveys the information that an estate is held in trust for young Brundage. As yet however, the Brundage family have not been apprised of the amount. It is likely that Brundage will make a visit to his mother.

RICH FARMER BLOCKED IN EFFORT TO GET MARRIED

Hampton, Ia., Feb. 5.—Repeated attempts of H. G. Myers, Lee county pioneer and rich farmer, to marry a second time seem due to be balked Mr. Meyers' wife died last March and some time ago he began seeking another mate. Through a matrimonial agency he got into communication with Mrs. Mary Mau, of Chicago, who described herself as a middle aged widow, good looking and the owner of considerable property. They became engaged, then Meyers began to encounter trouble.

Mrs. Mau came here and the pair tried to get a marriage license but failed on account of the lack of competent witnesses They tried again at Eldora, but Meyers' relatives had heard about it and enlisted the aid of Sheriff Schweiger. The sheriff halted further matrimonial steps.

Meyers' heirs say Mrs. Mau induced him to deed her 12 acres of right good Franklin county farm land Meyers' daughter has been appointed his temporary guardian and further attempts at marriage seem forestalled

THORNE SAYS RAILROADS HAVE HURT IOWA INTERESTS

Des Moines, Ia Feb 5.—"The railroads have blacklisted Iowa in such a way as to arrest the commercial development of the state," Clifford Thorne, chairman of the Iowa railroad commission, declared, in opening the arguments in the interior Iowa rate case being heard by an examiner for the Interstate Commerce commission.

"This is a fight to place the manufacturers and jobbers located at the interior cities of Iowa upon an equality with those of neighboring states and with those located on the Mississippi and Missouri rivers," continued Mr. Thorne. "We are also struggling to place Iowa cities located upon the Mississippi river on an equality with St. Louis."

Thorne proceeded to tell how the railroads have made special rates for the manufacturing plants of Chicago, St. Louis and other commercial centers, all of which crippled Iowa in an industrial way. Some relief was gained a short time ago by a decision of the commission Further reductions in favor of Iowa are now desired.

A. E. KEPFORD MAY GET HIS OLD STATE JOB BACK

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 5.—A. E. Kepford, former state tuberculosis lecturer, may return to his old position with the state. The members of the state board of control consider offering him the position again, it is reported.

When Mr. Kepford resigned a year ago as lecturer for the state, the position was not filled, although there were many applicants for the place. The job carries a salary of $2,000 a year.

MUSCATINE AROUSED BY "SPOOKY" MANIFESTATIONS

Muscatine, Ia., Feb. 5.—East Muscatine is suffering from an epidemic of spooks Residents of that part of the city complain of hearing unearthly noises at all hours of the night and of seeing scary looking apparitions floating about the roofs of houses. Tapping on windows and doors is one of the favorite pastimes of the "hants," it is said

Police officers have been detailed to keep on the watch in East Muscatine all night but their presence has not diminished the visitations. However, the job has proved a highly obnoxious one for the police. Officer Faulhaber was made a target for a revolver bullet fired by an overwrought woman last night. Her aim was bad, however.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY COUPLE HELD ON ADULTERY CHARGE

Westfield, Ia., Feb. 5.—J. O. Bliss and Mrs. Arthur W. Oaks, both married, were arrested at the latter's home, the information charging them with adultery At the hearing before the mayor they were placed under $2,000 bonds to await the action of the grand jury Both have children. The husband of the woman left here six weeks ago, after giving Bliss a severe beating, it is alleged COUNCIL BLUFFS—Edwin Brown and Leon Nehll, each about 22 years of age, were found in a car of oranges here when it was opened They had subsisted on oranges for three days. They got into the car at some far western point. They said they suffered more from the cold than their scanty fare.

BELIEVED AMES CAPTURE FRUSTRATED BANK BURGLARY

Ames, Ia., Feb. 4.—Ten alleged crooks were arrested here, last night, in the city pest house, by Night Patrolman Miller, on a report that some crime experts were in town to blow a bank A Chicago detective trailed the gang from Des Moines. The local police officer was notified and made the capture. It is said one of the gang squealed" on the plans. The 10 men now are in jail, awaiting investigation

DECIDE THAT WOMAN WAS NOT INSULTED ON PULLMAN JOURNEY

Finding Reported for Company in Mrs. Nicola's Suit for $10,000 Damages.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 5.—The Pullman Car company won the sensational damage case brought against it by Mrs. Anna Nicola, of Kansas City, when the jury after an all night session brought in a verdict today in favor of the corporation.

Mrs. Nicola sued for $10,000. She alleged that on the night of March 2, 1915, when enroute from Kansas City to Des Moines in the lower berth of a Pullman car on the Great Western, a man in the berth above leaned over and "peeked" in, that he called her "dearie" and asked her to take a drink of whisky.

She asserted that, later, he accused her of stealing his watch and that thereupon she was forced by the Pullman crew to disrobe and be searched.

The company claimed that Mrs. Nicola and a man from Cedar Rapids, Ia. boarded the train and that they represented themselves to be man and wife Other evidence was produced, tending to show discrepancies in the woman's story

HAWARDEN MAN SECURES PATENT FOR CAR DOORS

Hawarden, Ia., Feb. 5.—L. T. Kenny of this city, has received notice of the allowance of his patents on outside and inside car doors. The special feature of the outside door is an automatic track lock, in the closing movement which prevents the door from being pushed ahead in switching operations thus acting as an important safety device. In unlocking the door can be moved freely. The inside, grain, door is a permanent attachment that can be moved out of the way when not in use, but available when needed, operating to prevent a great annual loss in the removal and destruction of temporary grain doors.

SHENANDOAH—Edward Gordon, one of the trio that robbed the Read-Gwynn bank at Imogene, March 20, 1909, and who was released about a year ago, is in a middle western city and making good, according to letters he has written to Elber Read, of the First National bank, of Shenandoah Read befriended the man when he was arrested and during his imprisonment and it was to Read only that the convict revealed his true name His name is not Gordon The latter name was adopted by the convict to shield his wife and child and now that he is again free he has resumed his real name

CEDAR RAPIDS—Thomas K Ryan, who helped build the Union Pacific railroad and also the Muscatine Western, now a part of the Rock Island, died here Tuesday night aged 82. His many experiences as a pioneer railroad man included frequent attacks of hostile Indians along the right of way when he acted as guard Monsigner James P Ryan, of Davenport brother of the deceased, will conduct the funeral here Friday

ZEPPELIN RAIDS TO BE MADE AN ISSUE

London, Feb. 3.—William Joynson-Picks, member of the house of commons, has given notice that on the reassembling of parliament he will present the following resolution

"This house humbly represents to his majesty the desirability of placing the air service of the country on a firmer and stronger basis and regrets that up to the present adequate arrangements have not been made to guard the country from invasion by hostile air craft."

It is expected the situation will be discussed before parliament by Earl Kitchener and A. L. Balfour, first lord of the admiralty.

UNCLE JOE GETS HIS DATES SLIGHTLY MIXED

Washington, D. C., Feb. 3.—Former Speaker Cannon rose in the House today to taunt the democrats about failing to observe calendar Wednesday, one of the reforms inaugurated when he gave up the gavel.

"So it is," conceeded Mr. Cannon, abashed as he sat down.

DR. REEVES, LEMARS, IS SENTENCED TO PRISON FOR ASSAULT ON WIFE

Enters Plea of Guilty, Rather Than Have Case Reviewed in Court Action.

LeMars, Ia., Feb. 4.—Dr. J. L. Reeves, whose wife formerly was Miss Mabel McDonald, a Morningside trained nurse, was sentenced yesterday at LeMars by Judge William Hutchinson to serve a term not exceeding one year in the state penitentiary at Fort Madison, as provided by the indeterminate sentence law, for committing an assault on his wife at their family home in LeMars last May.

A plea of guilty to County Attorney C. D. Roseberry's information, charging assault with intent to commit great bodily injury, was entered by Dr. Reeves. He was indicted for assault with intent to commit murder but his wife refused to prosecute him. When this was learned the new information, providing for a light prison sentence, was drawn up by the county attorney of Plymouth county.

Testimony before the grand jury of persons who live near the Dr Reeves home in LeMars, showed that Dr Reeves inflicted three bullet wounds on his wife and then swallowed a quantity of morphine in an attempt to end his life. When the morphine failed to act he tried to shoot himself with the same revolver that he used to assault Mrs Reeves. The gun failed to work.

Plymouth county court officials declared last night that Dr. Reeves preferred to serve time in prison rather than face trial despite the fact that his wife would not prosecute him and that everything was favorable for a "not guilty" verdict. A review in court of his desperate act was described by him to officials as "100 times worse than serving a year in prison."

Dr. Reeves is 44 years old. He graduated in medicine from Drake university at Des Moines. For the last 20 years he has been a practicing physician in LeMars. He was married to Miss McDonald, whose parents still reside in Morningside, a number of years ago. It was his second marriage.

CITIZENS ASK THAT STATE BOUNDARY BE REESTABLISHED

Logan, Ia., Feb. 4.—A number of Harrison county citizens have petitioned the Iowa executive council to take steps to reestablish the boundary line between Iowa and Nebraska—specifically, the boundary between Harrison and Pottawattamie counties, on the Iowa side, and Burt, Washington and Douglas counties, on the Nebraska side.

It is cited that the supervisors of Harrison county appointed two men as commissioners to survey the accretions and cutoffs along the Missouri river, west of Harrison county, eight years ago for taxation and police purposes, and that the plats of the commissioners are now on file at Logan Also, it is contended that the commissioners omitted cutoffs and accretions belonging to Harrison county, and ignored previous surveys, ignored district court and supreme court decisions of Iowa and Nebraska on title to accretions and cutoffs west of Harrison county on the Missouri river.

House roll No. 684, 33d legislative assembly in Nebraska, was a bill introduced by the representatives of Douglas and Sarpy counties Nebraska, authorizing the governor of Nebraska to appoint three commissions to act in conjunction with a like commission from the state of Iowa in ascertaining the true and correct boundary line between the state of Iowa and the state of Nebraska so far as relates to the boundary line between Douglas and Sarpy counties, in Nebraska, and Pottawattamie county, Iowa, but the bill failed to pass. However, a similar bill was introduced and passed in a former session of the Nebraska legislature, but the Iowa legislature neglected to cooperate with the Nebraska on the matter of a commission to fix the boundary line between the two states.

The many changes made in the channel of the Missouri river have complicated land titles and location along that stream to a great extent.

FARM HAND TAKES POISON, BUT IS SAVED BY PROMPT WORK

LeMars, Ia, Feb. 4.—Claud Johnson, a young man who has been working on farms in this vicinity, attempted to commit suicide by swallowing a dose of strychnine, but prompt medical aid thwarted his intention, and he will recover. Johnson bought the strychnine in a local drug store, saying it was for his employer's hogs and gave a check for the purchase. The check was found later to be a forgery, and the sheriff was put on Johnson's track. Johnson had gone to Seney and hired a room in a boarding house, where he made his attempt to end his life He is very ill from the effects of the poison When he is better he may be arraigned on a charge of forgery His relatives live at Muncie, Ind

GERMANY FINALLY REFUSES TO ADMIT THAT LUSITANIA SINKING WAS ILLEGAL ACT

"We Are All Resolved to Take Upon Us This New Enmity If It Cannot Be Averted," Says Kreuz Zeitung, of Berlin—People of Germany Rendered Suspicious of America's Intentions By President's Appeal For Immediate Preparedness.

GRAVITY OF SITUATION EMPHASIZED BY PRESS

Berlin, Feb. 5 (via London).—Information reaching the Associated Press today indicates that under no circumstances will Germany admit that the sinking of the Lusitania was an illegal act

The new instructions forwarded to Ambassador von Bernstorff according to this information, contains simply one phrase of the new formulation of the proposed note of regret for the sinking of the Lusitania. The suggested sentence is short, consisting of only eight words, and does not contain the word "illegal." It represents the extreme limit of Germany's concessions in the Lusitania case.

"Does America Want War?" They Ask.

Throughout the German Empire in the streets today, every German is asking: "Is it possible that after all the United States wants war with Germany. What else can this mean?"

Everywhere is this question linked with President Wilson's statement of warning to the United States that war is an immediate possibility, that she must be prepared. If the feeling of the German empire can be judged by statements of its citizens and expressions of the press, the situation is gravely delicate.

The Kreuz Zeitung interprets "President Wilson's present warlike course" as dictated to some extent by political considerations It says that both the American and European press have regarded the president's attitude throughout the war as being influenced by the approaching campaign, but that no one considered such an interpretation of his utterance especially unfriendly of him, regarding it as a thing to be expected.

The view is entertained here that one of the most serious crises of the war has arisen in connection with the Lusitania case and that it is impossible to foresee the outcome from any indications here The result of the negotiations appears to hinge solely on the word "illegal."

United States Insistent.

In the way of an agreement between the United States and Germany, stand only these seven letters, expressing the conception which President Wilson and Secretary Lansing insist must be embodied in the German formula expressing regret for the loss of American lives aboard the Cunarder.

The Associated Press is informed positively and authoritatively that Germany cannot and will not designate as illegal the sinking of a liner by any submarine.

Virtually no other difficulty in the way of settlement remains and the new instructions, forwarded to Ambassador Von Bernstorff on Tuesday, contain merely the new formula, by which it is hoped to satisfy Washington without humiliating Germany.

Although the suggested sentence according to a reliable version, consists of only eight words and does not contain the word, "illegal," or characterize the sinking of the Lusitania as such, it goes, otherwise, to the furthest extent possible toward meeting American desires.

"You Cannot Humiliate Germany" Says Foreign Under Secretary

Dr. Alfred Zimmermann, under secretary for foreign affairs, in an interview with the Associated Press, expressed the hope that the new formula, forwarded to Ambassador Von Bernstorff would offer a possible basis of settlement. However, he made no effort to conceal the gravity of the situation and was most explicit in his statements that Germany had reached the extreme limit of concessions and under no circumstances would concede the illegality of her submarine campaign in the war area.

He Warns America.

"The government is willing to do everything in its power and has done everything in its power to meet American wishes," he said, "but there are limits beyond which even friendship snaps.

"I do not understand America's course. We had thought the submarine issue and the Lusitania question on the way to arrangement—had agreed to pay indemnity and all that—when the United States suddenly made its new demands, which it is impossible for us to accept.

"You must not push your demands too far. You must not attempt to humiliate Germany."

The Point That Sticks.

Dr Zimmermann left no doubt that the whole crisis centered on Secretary Lansing's demands that Germany disavow the sinking of the Lusitania as an act contrary to international law

The under secretary declared repeatedly that Germany could not possibly admit this procedure was illegal

He asserted again and again that if the United States desired to drive matters to a breach, Germany could go no further to avoid it and that the breach, with all its lamentable consequences, must come.

The most regrettable phase of the situation, he asserted, was that there existed no really important reason for a breach, no conflicts of interests between Germany and the United States. Germany, he said, was counting on reciprocal development of trade with America after the war. These, however, would be dashed, or at any rate their development would be hampered greatly, if a breach were to come now

Assuming a more serious tone, the Kreuz Zeitung adds:

"At the moment, it seems best to emphasize the point on which the German people are most completely agreed namely, that nobody, of course, would regard a conflict with the United States as a slight matter, but that we are all resolved, nevertheless, to take upon us this new enmity, if it cannot be averted without sacrificing our self-respect and dignity; without laying upon ourselves fetters that hinder our freedom of movement in the struggle for existence."

The Vossische Zeitung and the Tageblatt both hold that the latest instructions sent to Ambassador Von Bernstorff are not so sweeping as generally supposed. The Tageblatt says the language used was very reserved and could not warrant any hasty or far reaching conclusions.

Situation Is Grave.

George Bernhard, editor of Vossische Zeitung, draws the conclusion that the Lusitania negotiations have reached a point where German statesmen are called upon to make a decision of the utmost gravity. Germany's agreement to pay indemnity for the loss of American lives and to submit to the tribunal at The Hague the question of whether the torpedoing of the Lusitania was in accordance with international law, he says, does not appear to have satisfied the American government which insists that Germany admit she was in the wrong. This would deprive submarine warfare of any legal basis. Herr Bernhard cannot believe that Ambassador Von Bernstorff's new instructions empower him to abandon entirely Germany's previous position. He says that everything now rests with President Wilson, who under the American constitution enjoys powers such as European monarchs can scarcely exercise. It is precisely because of this situation that Germans must indulge in no illusions.

Looks to Colonel House.

Herr Bernhard does not believe an immediate decision by Washington is likely, inasmuch as the return of Col. E. M. House doubtless will be awaited. He continues:

"If President Wilson wholly rejects our new proposals without indicating willingness to accept a compromise, then the German government would be placed in the position of yielding further or of letting developments take their course. Yielding, however, would mean abandonment of the whole submarine warfare. * * * We can only express the hope that America will still recognize Germany's concessions If that is not the case, we can nevertheless expect with certainty that no decision will be taken calculated to cast doubt on the dignity of the German people or to interfere with their vital necessities."

RUSSIANS NOW HOLD MILLION PRISONERS

Admitted Czar's Casualty List Thus Far Will Total 3,000,000 Men.

London, Feb. 4.—The Russians themselves calculate their casualties thus far at 3,000,000 and say 1,000,000 German and Austrian prisoners have been sent to the interior of Russia, according to a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company.

The Copenhagen correspondent apparently drew his information from the American Red Cross detachment, which has been serving many months at the Russian front, and which, he says, sailed from Bergen yesterday for New York.

The dispatch says the members of the detachment describe the hospitals of Russia as admirable in work and equipment.

It is said Russia no longer needs foreign assistance in hospital work, although many physicians from other countries are still at the front.

MOHR CASE TO JURY.

"I Will Yield Everything But the Vital Points"-WILSON.

"America has drawn no fine points, no new issues in her international relations; she has merely asserted the rights of mankind when the life of mankind is threatened in a world aflame with war. She has rested upon what is already written plain on the documents of international law. I am ready to yield everything but the vital points."—From President Wilson's speech in St. Louis yesterday.

PARLIAMENT BUILDING OF CANADA IS LAID IN ASHES: LOSS PUT AT SIX MILLIONS

Two Women Guests of Wife of Speaker Sevigny Lose Lives —Family of House Leader Have Narrow Escape From Death—Number of Policemen and Firemen Killed and Injured When Ruins Collapse.

RIGID INVESTIGATION WILL BE STARTED SOON

Part of Great Library of 200,000 Volumes Rescued By Soldiers — Spectators In Part of Structure Where Blaze Started Declare Infernal Machine Caused Conflagration—Fire Spread Rapidly.

Ottawa, Ont., Can., Feb 5.—Two women and three men are known to have perished in the fire which swept through the central portion of Canada's magnificent parliament building, last night, destroying the chamber of commons and senate. Several others are reported missing and it is feared that they are buried in the ruins.

All night long, firemen, police and soldiers fought to save the $6,000,000 structure. They were successful in saving the beautiful library building and the east and west wings of the main edifice.

Immediately after the fire started, a report was spread broadcast that it was caused by the explosion of an incendiary bomb. The fire started in the reading room of the house of commons and several persons who were present at the time, including Mayor Medric Martin, of Montreal, asserted that it was preceded by an explosion, which knocked down several persons

Reject Bomb Theory.

The bomb theory was, however, rejected today by Colonel Sherwood, commissioner of dominion police, who insisted that the conflagration was accidental.

The two women who lost their lives were Mme. Bray, wife of H. A. Bray, of Quebec, and Mme. Morin, wife of Louis Morin, of Beauce, Quebec. The men whose bodies are still buried in the debris are: Alphonse Des Jardins, a dominion policeman, Alphonse Des Jardins, his uncle, an employe in the building, and Robert Fa...ning, a waiter.

Among those reported missing is R. B. Law, a member of parliament for Yarmouth, N. S. Mr. Law is understood to have been at the house at the time the fire broke out and has not been seen since. He was alone in the city and the management of the hotel where he was stopping said that he left there last night to go to the house and that every effort to trace him since had failed.

J. B. Laplant, assistant clerk of the commons, is also among those reported missing.

William S. Loggie, a member of parliament for Northumberland, N. B., is reported m...ing.

Mr. ...dee Thought Safe.

It was stated last night that Frederick F. ...dee, the chief liberal whip in the house of commons, also was missing, but it was subsequently learned that he went to Sarnia, Ont., yesterday morning and that he could not have returned before the fire.

The financial loss is difficult to estimate, but the contents of the building were of great value. At an early hour today it was believed that the parliament library in a rear wing had been saved. While the fire was burning soldiers carried out many of its 200,000 volumes.

The parliament building was rated as one of the finest gothic structures on this continent. It covered four acres on parliament hill.

Several persons who were burned or otherwise hurt in fleeing through the corridors before the swift rush of the flames or in escaping from the windows are in hospitals today. One of those most severely injured is Martin Burrell, minister of agriculture, who was burned about the head. Dr. McNeill Clark, member from Red Deer, suffered burns about the hands. Sir Robert Borden, the Canadian premier, escaped without injury.

Heard An Explosion.

The origin of the fire can be determined only by an investigation, which, it is understood, will begin as soon as possible. The fire started in the reading room of the house of commons, and Col. George Bradbury, a member of the house from Manitoba; Mayor Medric Martin, of Montreal, and Constable Helmer, who were standing in the entrance of the library, agree that it was preceded by an explosion, which blew open the doors of the library and knocked down persons standing near. They say they believe the explosion was caused by a bomb or infernal machine.

In the reading room were thousands of loose papers among which the flames leaped with almost amazing rapidity. Smoke rolled in dense volumes out through the doors and into the chamber of the house of commons, where that body was sitting. With the spreading of the alarm, members of the house of commons, spectators in the galleries and attendants fled in the panic for windows, doors or fire escape. So swift was the rush of the flames that many narrowly escaped.

STOCK SHIPPERS GIVE VIEWS ON NEW LADING

Chicago, Feb. 4.—The ideas of livestock shippers as to the proper form for a uniform bill of lading were presented today before Lawrence Satterfield, examiner for the Interstate Commerce commission. Announcement was made that hearings on the uniform bill of lading question, would be held by Examiner Satterfield at San Francisco, February 14; at New Orleans, February 21, and at Atlanta, February 28. The final hearing before the commission will be in Washington, April 10. The hearings began in New York, January 24.

SHIP SINKS; 160 PERISH

Shanghai, Feb. 5.—The Japanese liner Daijin Maru was sunk Wednesday night in a collision with the steamship Liman and 160 lives were lost.

Twenty-one persons were saved. The Liman, badly damaged, is returning to Hongkong.

The Daijin Maru, of 1,576 tons gross and 243 feet long, was built at Kobe in 1900. She was owned in Osaka.

The Liman is owned by the China Navigation company, of London. She is 300 feet long, of 2,211 tons gross and was built at Greenock in 1903.

SLAY EACH OTHER TO CHEAT ENEMY

Athens, Feb. 2, (via London, Feb 4)—A vivid description of the thrilling experiences connected with the sinking of the Italian steamship Brindisi, which recently struck a mine in the Adriatic, is given by Marie Lemos, of Irving Park, Chicago, one of the Red Cross nurses who survived. She said:

"The steamship with her decks covered with dead sank with hideous rapidity. I was shot into the water, which was full of struggling youths trying to keep afloat, but disappearing one by one within sight of land.

"We struck a mine at 9 30 o'clock in the morning and the ship began to sink immediately. We tried to lower a boat, but the ship heeled over so that everybody in the boat was thrown into the water. Miss Hample, my companion, could not swim, and never came up. I managed to scramble back aboard the Brindisi, where I found some 200 Montenegrins, who were unable to swim.

"These men said they would not die by the enemy's hand. They sang their national anthem and then one squad shot the others and finally killed themselves. The decks were covered with dead, and were awash with blood.

"When the ship began to founder, I slipped back into the water and swam to a plank on which several men were clinging, but who dropped one by one. Finally, after being three hours in the water, I was picked up and taken to San Giovanni Di Medua.

"As soon as the 143 persons rescued were safely ashore, the Montenegrins lined up and resang the national anthem. While the men were signing an Austrian aeroplane squadron bombarded the town, killing 18 of those who just had been saved."

EXPLAINS TRANSFER OF U. S. ADMIRAL STANFORD

Washington, Feb. 4.—Why Rear Admiral Stanford, former chief of the bureau of yards and docks, was assigned to the Mare island navy yard and then suddenly transferred to the Philadelphia yard was explained by Secretary Daniels today as due to a general feeling prevailing on the Pacific coast that the admiral was opposed to the development of the Mare Island yard.

"The admiral had made statements that the yard could not be developed advantageously," the secretary said. "Those interested in the station, felt that the department ought not to send a man there who held such an opinion and were opposed to him for that reason. The department did not provoke a feeling of dissatisfaction there, so Admiral Stanford was assigned to Philadelphia and another officer will be sent to Mare Island."

MORGENTHAU IN BERLIN EN ROUTE TO AMERICA

Berlin, (via London), Feb. 4.—Henry Morgenthau, American ambassador at Constantinople, arrived in Berlin yesterday on his way to the United States. He was accompanied by his son, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

Morgenthau will remain here a day or two before leaving for New York by way of Rotterdam or Copenhagen.

President Reads Latest Dispatches on Train But Refuses To Discuss Case

Wilson Party When Informed of Latest Turn In Lusitania Affair Admit Outlook Is Unfavorable—Secretary Lansing Silent Pending Receipt of Official Communication From Berlin—Count Von Bernstorff In Dark.

Washington, Feb. 4.—Secretary Lansing and Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, will confer on the Lusitania negotiations late today.

Washington, Feb. -In the absence of official information, Secretary Lansing today refused to discuss any phase whatever of the Lusitania negotiations. It appeared at the state department, however, that if officials regarded the situation as seriously as it is reflected in Berlin dispatches, it was not permitted to appear on the surface. Something definite may take form after President Wilson returns to the capitol this afternoon.

Secretary Lansing said today that no word had reached him of Germany's latest answer to the Lusitania negotiations. Early today the instructions had not reached Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador.

President Wilson returned to the capital from his western speaking trip shortly after 1:15 o'clock this afternoon. He went at once to the White House.

President Wilson read the Berlin dispatches on the situation, while his train was running between Baltimore and Washington. He made no comment, but members of his party said they regarded the situation as "unfavorable." It was said that the president had not finished considering the official dispatches he received last night on his train.

Count von Bernstorff declined to discuss the Berlin dispatches because he had not received his government's answer, which was supposed to have started from the Berlin foreign office on February 1.

When Count von Bernstorff recently transmitted the last draft of the agreement to Berlin after having submitted it to Secretary Lansing, the ambassador, believed it would be acceptable to his government.

COLLIER IS SUNK BY ZEPPELIN; CREW LOST

London, Feb 4.—The collier Franz Fischer, which left Hartlepool Monday afternoon was sunk at sea by one of the raiding Zeppelins that visited England. Thirteen of the crew, including the captain, were drowned.

Three men were saved, Chief Engineer Burch, Steward Taylor and Seaman Charles Hillier. The Franz Fischer was an enemy vessel employed as a coaling collier.

Hillier, who is a native of New Foundland, described the disaster as follows:

"About 10:30 o'clock Tuesday night we heard a noise overhead such as we had never heard before. Presently a Zeppelin came right on top of us and dropped a bomb which fell near the engine room. A tremendous explosion followed, the vessel remaining afloat only two minutes.

"There was no time to launch lifeboats. We all went under with the ship. When I came up again I caught hold of a life belt. After swimming for some time, I came across the chief engineer and the steward, who had also managed to get hold of life belts. By their aid we kept afloat for an hour.

"It was pitiful to hear the cries of some of the other men who had come to the surface after the disappearance of the vessel, but soon their cries ceased and we concluded they were all lost."

SCHOOLS OF MEXICO TO BE REOPENED MONDAY

Washington, D. C., Feb. 4.—General Carranza, after formally decreeing Queretaro the capital of Mexico, for at least a year, has notified his embassy here that he will go to Guadalajara. He expects to return to Queretaro in a few weeks, meanwhile visiting Morela, capital of Michoacan.

The Escobedo theater at Queretaro is being prepared for the convention at which nominations for the presidency will be made. The convention has not yet been called.

So great progress has been made in the campaign against typhus in Mexico City that schools will be reopened Monday.

LOCHNER AND EVANS DEPART FROM BERLIN

Berlin, (via London), Feb. 4.—Louis Lochner, secretary of the Ford peace expedition, and H. C. Evans, of Des Moines, Ia., one of the delegates, departed from Berlin last night for Switzerland after a stay here of several days.

Mr. Lochner received a cablegram from William Jennings Bryan, announcing his acceptance of membership in the permanent peace commission. Henry Ford also sent a cablegram in which he said his confidence in the peace project was undiminished and that he would soon return to Europe.

HIRAM JOHNSON OUT FOR THE NOMINATION

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 4.—The name of Gov. Hiram W. Johnson, of California, was filed with the secretary of state late yesterday as a candidate for the progressive nomination for president in the March 14 primary election.

The average speed of the phonograph record under the needle is 1.82 miles an hour.

RAILWAY CAPITAL HARD TO OBTAIN

Chicago, Feb. 4.—Alarmed at the increasing difficulty at getting new capital for electric railway extension and improvements as reflected in a decrease of more than 36 per cent in the amount so invested during the last five years as compared to the previous five years, the executives of the principal street and interurban systems of the United States represented in the American Electric Railway association, met here today to discuss means for meeting the situation. It was stated that 37,000 miles of electric railway with annual receipts of more than $500,000,000 were represented.

Practically all of the utilities represented are under the control of state or city commissions with power to fix the rates which the companies are allowed to charge. That the manner in which this power should be exercised has had much to do with bringing about the present state of financial affairs was the opinion of practically all the speakers.

Col. Timothy S. Williams, president of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit System of New York, said:

"The attitude of investors toward public utility securities has been due not merely to the imposition of restrictive and sometimes retaliatory legislation affecting returns in the shape of interest or dividend, but to doubt as to the integrity of the investment itself, owing to the uncertainty of valuation and to fear that the power of valuation for rate purposes may be used to depreciate the value of property for governmental acquisition."

N. T. Gurnsey, of New York, general counsel for the American Telegraph & Telephone company led the discussion on valuation, pledging for practical, rather than theoretical methods in determining for rate making and other purposes the value of public utility properties.

TO FIT YOUNG MEN FOR FOREIGN SERVICE

Washington, Feb. 4.—Fifteen prominent American educators and business men have been appointed by Commissioner of Education Claxton, as a committee to investigate and report on the means for establishing in schools and colleges courses of study best adapted to fit young men for careers in the foreign service of the country.

Dr. Glen Levin Swiggett, of the University of Tennessee, will act as chairman of the committee, which is expected to carry on its investigation both here and abroad.

SUGGESTS DEMOCRATS READ DEFENSE SPEECHES

Washington, Feb. 4.—All the speeches on preparedness made by President Wilson on his present middle west trip will be printed as a public document. The House yesterday voted that this be done.

"Better apportion the copies if you want democratic members to read them," advised Republican Leader Mann, whose recent speech in the House in support of the preparedness program won much admiration.

BRITISH SAILORS DECLINE TO SAVE ZEPPELIN'S CREW

Trawler Sails Away Leaving Germans Clinging to Wreckage of Their Disabled Gas Bag.

FEARED CAPTURE, CLAIM

Outnumbered, Britons Anticipated Teutons Would Turn on Them—Raiders Are Probably Lost

Grimsby, Feb 5.—Skipper William Martin, of the trawler King Stephen, who has arrived here, reports that early Wednesday morning in the North sea he saw the Zeppelin L-19 with her boats and a portion of her envelope submerged. He noticed from 17 to 20 members of the crew clinging to the envelope.

They asked to be taken off, but as the men on the Zeppelin outnumbered the trawler's crew, the skipper declined to accede to the request. Instead he came straight into Grimsby and reported the matter to the admiralty authorities.

Offered to Pay Rescuers.

"The cabins of the Zeppelin were under water and part of the envelope was also submerged, but there was a large portion above water, still floating with a good deal of buoyancy. On a raised platform on top of the envelope were seven or eight of the airship's crew, who hailed us in broken English saying:

"'Save us! Save us! We will give you plenty of money!'

"The group in the platform soon increased, as a number of other men came up the companionway leading to the platform. We counted 22 Germans and we heard sounds as of hammering proceeding from the interior of the airship, which led us to believe that there were even more men on board, either attempting repairs or imprisoned in some part of the airship.

Had Crew of Nine.

"We carried a crew of only nine and had no weapons. The skipper felt that it would be injudicious to take the crew of the Zeppelin aboard, as the Germans outnumbered us and he feared that they would take possession of the trawler and take it as a prize to Germany. We therefore left it as wreckage and proceeded in seach of a British naval ship, to which we told of the occurrence."

The Zeppelin probably was disabled by the Dutch coast artillery, which fired on her while she was attempting to return to Germany over Dutch territory. A dispatch from Nes, in Ameland, Wednesday, said:

"Zeppelin L-19, while passing over the town of Hollum, Ameland, recently, was shot at and hit by Dutch soldiers."

Uphold Trawler's Act.

The newspapers this morning generally support the action of the captain of the trawler, King Stephen, in refusing to re...e the crew of the airship. The Daily Mail says:

"The captain acted wisely, as the crew of the Zeppelin were in no immediate danger. Every British sailor afloat would rescue his foes in danger, so long as they could be expected to act honorably, but the German has proved that nobody dares to trust him."

KENYON TO CHECK UP CERTAIN EXPENDITURES

Washington, Feb. 4.—Senator Kenyon, who prodded the bureau of animal industry sharply in the investigation of hoof and mouth disease matters at Chicago, intends to look into the manner in which the funds allotted to it to stamp out this disease have been expended. Recently in the House, Representative Mann cited numerous expenditures utterly unrelated to hoof and mouth quarantine, which were extracted from the fund appropriated by congress. Mann's statements have caused a big stir. The Senate committee on agriculture, of which Senator Kenyon is a member, will look into the facts.

RAISE BIG MISSION FUND.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 4.—In a report today to the Northern Union conference of Seventh Day Adventists, in convention here, President Charles Thompson, Minneapolis, said that the North American division of the church raised $615,565.95 for foreign missions in 1914, or an average of $8.55 per member.

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Adv.

QUEER GIFTS TO ROYALTY

Odd Ways In Which People Have Shown Their Devotion to the Race That Ruled Them.

New Year in the fifteenth century was not an occasion which was welcomed without some regrets, for many were taxed to meet the requirements of royalty on that day. Each titled gentleman had the form and value of his gift to the king prescribed. Regulations provided that an earl should appear at the royal presence chamber at eight o'clock New Year morning to deliver a five-shilling purse containing 20-shilling coins to the lord chamberlain for the king.

Next the earl visited the jewel-house, where he received a ticket which entitled him to a gift of 18 shillings 6 pence, the 6 pence of which he was required to give for a box for the ticket. The same morning he went to another office to select a piece of silver plate weighing about 30 ounces, but left it until afternoon, when he returned for it. At that time he gave the man who handed it to him 40 shillings in gold, 2 shillings for the box and 6 pence to the porter.

A young prince ten years old is said to have given great pleasure to his father in 1604 by presenting him with a volume of short Latin poems. There is a record that in 1610 a dainty little eight-year-old princess, having a special liking for sweets, received a New Year present of a pair of fat oxen from the Corporation of Coventry.—Exchange.

Venison From Alaska.

Another great possibility of the future of Alaska is the raising of reindeer for the United States markets. I have visited the reindeer herds, and the slaughter houses at Nome, where the deer are even now being killed, to be sent in cold storage to San Francisco and Seattle. The shipping of venison has already begun and the time is not distant when fresh deer meat from Alaska will be sold in all of our cities, just as fresh Alaska salmon and halibut are sold today.—Correspondence of the Christian Herald.

Undeserved Punishment.

"Gadsworth is suffering from a psychological jag," said the first citizen of a dry town.

"What do you mean by that?" asked the second citizen.

"He spent three hours last night in a vain attempt to locate a quart of liquor."

"Well?"

"And this morning he woke up with a headache."

FOOD FACTS
What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent physician down in Georgia went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food, and I also know from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that this food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and patients gain, just as I did in strength and weight, very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely and go to the mountains, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was not quite as well as when I left home. My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change.

"I began to use Grape-Nuts and in two weeks I could walk a mile, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers I consider it a duty to make these facts public."

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body will work wonders.

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SAGE TEA DARKENS HAIR TO ANY SHADE

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark, glossy soft and abundant.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

"I love you not!" he cried, and smote
Her full upon her lily throat.
She would have wept, she would have wopen,
Save that the parlor door was open.

"Elizabeth—Miss Crumpitts," he said, after they had been sitting on the parlor sofa for five silent minutes. "I—I want to say, I—er—want to tell you"—. He mopped his neck nervously with his handkerchief, with his initials woven in the corner, thus: J. W. P. B. V. T. R. L.

"Yes, yes! Go on!" she said encouragingly.

"I want to say," he said desperately, "I want to let you know how-er-how"——. Panting, he slid one finger inside his collar and pulled it violently.

"Yes, yes!" she smiled. "Go on!" (She had said that before).

"I want you to know—er—I—oh, Miss Crumpitts"—

"Yes, yes! Go on!" (That made the third time.)

He [illegible] it out:

"I want you to know my collar is so tight I fear I shall have to go home and change it!"

She gave him a contemptuous look and his hat.

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching, if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin drinking phosphated hot water. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and clean, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous days poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food in the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel, like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your druggist or storekeeper a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish tang which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.—Adv.

Doing His Part.

Honestly, now, would you fight for your country if war broke out?"

Well," answered the thoughtful man, "maybe I wouldn't fight, on account of gas bombs, liquid fire and things like that, but I would gladly sacrifice my business and work night and day to raise recruits."

QUIT MEAT IF KIDNEYS BOTHER AND USE SALTS

Take a Glass of Salts Before Breakfast If Your Back Is Hurting or Bladder Is Irritated.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acids of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

"CASCARETS" ACT ON LIVER; BOWELS

No sick headache, biliousness, bad taste or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

TWELVE MILLIONS FACE DEATH FROM STARVATION IN POLAND, SAYS PADEREWSKI; PIANIST BEGS AID FOR DYING COUNTRYMEN

Jewish refugees in Poland; group of starving Polish Jews; Paderewski pleading for aid for starving countrymen.

Twelve million people in Poland—mostly Jews—face death from starvation if food fails to reach them within the next few days. This is the tragic situation in his native land announced by Ignace Jan Paderewski, the famous pianist, in an appeal for his suffering countrymen.

PRINCIPAL CAUSES OF DEATH ARE GIVEN

Washington, D. C.—According to a preliminary announcement with reference to mortality in 1914, issued by Director Sam L. Rogers, of the bureau of the census, department of commerce, and compiled by Mr Richard C Lappin, chief statistician for vital statistics, more than 30 per cent of the 898,059 deaths reported for that year in the "registration area" which contained about two-thirds of the population of the entire United States, were due to three causes -heart disease tuberculosis and pneumonia—and more than 60 per cent to 11 causes—the three just named, together with Bright's disease and nephritis, cancer, diarrhea and enteritis apoplexy, arterial diseases diphtheria, diabetes, and typhoid fever

The deaths from heart disease (organic diseases of the heart and endocarditis) in the registration area in 1914 numbered 99,534, or 150.8 per 100,000 population. The death or mortality rate from this cause shows a marked increase as compared with 1900, when it was only 123.1 per 100,000

Tuberculosis Leads.

Tuberculosis in its various forms claimed 96,903 victims in 1914, of which number 84,366 died from tuberculosis of the lungs (including acute miliary tuberculosis) As a result of a more general understanding of the laws of health, the importance of fresh air, etc., due in part, no doubt, to the efforts of the various societies for the prevention of tuberculosis, there has been a most marked and gratifying decrease during recent years in the mortality from this scourge of civilization In only a decade—from 1904 to 1914 the death rate from tuberculosis in all its forms fell from 200.7 to 146 8 per 100,000, the decline being continuous from year to year. This is a drop of more than 25 per cent. Prior to 1904 the rate had fluctuated, starting at 201 9 in 1900. Even yet, however, tuberculosis has the gruesome distinction of causing more deaths annually than any other form of bodily illness except heart diseases, and over 40 per cent more than all external causes--accidents, homicides and suicides combined.

Pneumonia (including bronchopneumonia) was responsible for 83,804 deaths in the registration area in 1914, or 127 per 100,000—the lowest rate on record. The mortality rate from this disease like that from tuberculosis, has shown a marked decline since 1900, when it was 180.5 per 100,000. Its fluctuations from year to year, however, have been pronounced, whereas the decline in the rate for tuberculosis has been nearly continuous.

The only remaining death rate higher than 100 per 100,000 in 1914 was that for Bright's disease and acute nephritis, 102.4. The total number of deaths due to these maladies in 1914 was 67,545, more than nine-tenths of which were caused by Bright's disease and the remainder by acute nephritis. The mortality from these two causes increased from 89 per 100,000 in 1900 to 103.4 in 1905, since which year it has fluctuated somewhat.

Next in order of deadliness come cancer and other malignant tumors, which filled 52,420 graves in 1914. Of these deaths, 19,899, or almost 38 per cent, resulted from cancers of the stomach and liver. The death rate from cancer has risen from 63 per 100,000 in 1900 to 79.4 in 1914. The increase has been almost continuous, there having been but two years—1906 and 1911—which showed a decline as compared with the years immediately preceding. It is possible that at least a part of this indicated increase is due to more accurate diagnoses and greater care on the part of physicians in making reports to registration officials

Diarrhea and enteritis caused 52,407 deaths in 1914, or 79.4 per 100,000 This rate shows a marked falling off as compared with the rate for the preceding year, 90.2, and a very pronounced decline as compared with that for 1900, which was 133.2 Nearly five-sixths of the total number of deaths charged to these causes in 1914 were of infants under 2 years of age

Apoplexy was the cause of 51,272 deaths, or 77.7 per 100,000 The rate from this malady has increased gradually, with occasional slight declines, since 1900 when it stood at 67.5

Arterial diseases of various kinds atheroma, aneurism etc -caused 15,044 deaths, or 22.8 per 100,000, in the registration area

Decline Noted.

No epidemic disease produced a death rate as high as 18 per 100,000 in 1914. The fatal cases of diphtheria and croup which are classed together in the statistics but practically all of which are of diphtheria numbered 11,786, or 17.9 per 100,000, in that year, the rate having fallen from 43 in 1900. This decline of nearly 59 per cent is relatively greater than that shown by any other important cause of death The rate has not fallen continuously, but has fluctuated somewhat from year to year

The deaths, or 16.2 per 100,000 The rate from this disease has risen almost continuously from year to year since 1900 when it was 9.7 per 100,000.

The mortality rate from typhoid fever has shown a most gratifying decline since 1900, having decreased from 35.9 per 100,000 in that year to 15.4 in 1914, or by 57 per cent This decline has been almost as great, relatively, as that for diphtheria, and has been greater than that for any other principal cause of death. The total number of deaths due to typhoid fever in 1914 was 10,185. The marked decrease in the mortality from this disease gives emphatic testimony to the effectiveness of present day methods, not only of cure but of prevention. The efficacy of improved water supply and sewerage systems, of the campaign against the fly, and of other sanitary precautions is strikingly shown by the reduction of the typhoid mortality rate to the extent of more than five-ninths in 14 years.

Whooping Cough, Measles, Fever. Fever.

The principal epidemic maladies of childhood—whooping cough, measles and scarlet fever--were together responsible for no fewer than 15,617 deaths of both adults and children, or 23.7 per 100,000, in the registration area in 1914, the rates for the three diseases separately being 10.3, 6.8 and 6.6, respectively. In 1913 measles caused a greater mortality than either of the other diseases, but in 1914 whooping cough had first place. In every year since and including 1910, as well as in several preceding years, measles has caused a greater number of deaths than the much more dreaded scarlet fever. The mortality rates for all three of these diseases fluctuate greatly from year to year. The rates for measles and scarlet fever in 1914 were the lowest in 15 years, while that for whooping cough was considerably above the lowest recorded rate for this disease, 6.5 in 1904, although far below the highest, 15.8 in 1908.

Railway and Street Car Accidents.

Deaths due to railway accidents and injuries totaled 7,062, or 10.7 per 100,000 This number includes fatalities resulting from collisions between railway trains and vehicles at grade crossings. The death rate from railway accidents and injuries is the lowest on record and shows a most marked and gratifying decline as compared with the rate for 1913, which was 13 per 100,000, and a still more pronounced drop from the average for the five-year period 1906—1910, which was 15 per 100,000.

Deaths resulting from street-car accidents and injuries numbered 1,673, or 2.5 per 100,000. This rate, like that for railway fatalities, is the lowest on record and shows a material falling off as compared with 1913, when it was 3.2 and as compared with the average for the five-year period 1906-1910, which was 3.7.

Suicides.

The numbers of suicides reported in 1914 was 10,933, or 16.6 per 100,000 population Of this number, 3,296 accomplished self-destruction by the use of firearms, 3,000 by poison, 1,552 by hanging or strangulation, 1,419 by asphyxia, 538 by the use of knives of other cutting or piercing instruments, 619 by drowning, 225 by jumping from high places, 89 by crushing, and 85 by other methods.

Where Money Ruined Happiness.

In the November Woman's Home Companion an article is contributed by Alice Woods Emery entitled "My Conversion to Suffrage" It is the story of a woman who found out by experience what her vote meant to herself and her community Following are a few facts which lead to an unhappy marriage

My guardian did not altogether approve of him chiefly because of the slenderness of his resources but I insisted that I had plenty of money, that this was the man I wanted For a little while I was entirely satisfied, but before long it dawned upon me that the snug fortune which my father had left had been the chief factor in winning for me the addresses of the man I had married

"Our home was in a state where the husband had control of the wife's finances, but even if this had not been the case I daresay I would have put my fortune in his hands That is, I would have done so at first After my little girls were born it was different. One of the first things my husband had done after our marriage was to buy a fine estate in the country, (with my money) and present it to me. The deeds were made out in my name, and I had the privilege of paying for repairs and improvements. The bills for taxes came to me, the assessments were sent to me If one of them fell into my husband's hands he would toss it over to me with some jest about his being too poor a man to keep up such an establishment, and that the expenses must come out of the pocket of the moneyed member of the firm. The fact that the only income I had for myself was from the investments that were in my native state and so beyond his control, and that they were insignificant with those which he managed to suit himself apparently did not influence him at all.

"My husband combined a love for the worst features of life about town with a devotion to country sports of a costly character. After a while I ceased inquiring what he had done or where he had been during the days and weeks he spent in the city. He rode to hounds, and this obliged him to keep good horses and a corps of grooms and stable men. He owned a motor boat and two motor cars and subscribed heavily to the fund for good roads. Besides this, he was always keen for village and country improvements and voted for them, no matter what the cost would be to the taxpayers."

THOSE WHO WOULD SHED BLOOD IN MEXICO

By United States Senator John Sharp Williams.

A lot of you have been trying to excite yourselves and trying to excite the American people lately about 19 American citizens who were killed upon Mexican soil. Killed by whom? By the Mexican government? No. Killed by anybody pretending to represent the Mexican government? No. Killed by bandits killed by robbers, robbed of their clothes and of their money when they were killed so as to prove that their murderers were robbers, and yet a lot of you seem to want to shed Mexican blood and have Mexicans shed your blood because of it—oh, I beg your pardon, not your blood, but the blood of some of your fellow American citizens. None of you want to have your blood shed, not a blessed one of you. A lot of you seem to want to shed the blood of Mexicans and to have Mexicans shed your national blood, we will call it—if there is any such thing—because 19 American citizens were killed by robbers and bandits upon Mexican soil—upon Mexican soil, remember that.

FREEDOM OF SEAS AND NEUTRAL SHIPS

(From Speech of United States Senator Knute Nelson, of Minnesota.)

Mr President, this war has been prolific on the part of all the belligerents of violations of the rules of international law as we have understood it heretofore. The senator from Georgia (Mr. Smith) deserves great credit for calling attention to the manner in which the British governmen in one way or another has violated the rules of international law in respect to American commerce. Most of our commerce during the war has filtered into or through the little neutral countries of northern Europe — Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. Most of the commerce which has been held up by the British orders in council has been commerce and traffic plying to those countries.

Now while in no manner justified, on the contrary I entirely agree with the conclusions reached by the senator from Georgia in respect to the conduct of Great Britain, yet in this connection I want to present to the Senate another side of the picture. There are those four little countries that I have referred to in northern Europe. I have a list in my hand here of the number of merchant ships of those countries which have been sunk by German submarine boats and German mines since the war began up to the 14th of this month, and the list is perfectly startling. These are merchant vessels, traders. I will say that I have compiled this list from the leading commercial newspapers of the city of New York that have from day to day published an account.

The total number of vessels sunk by submarines, mines, and by warships—the latter being only one—is 134. One hundred and three have been sunk by German submarines, 30 have been sunk by mines, some of them German and perhaps some of them English, and one was sunk by a war vessel.

I have been able in this list to give the names of the vessels and to give the date when they were torpedoed or sunk. It appears from this list of 134 vessels that the total number of Danish ships sunk is 15, the total number of Swedish ships sunk is 27, and the total number of Norwegian ships sunk is 81.

As I said the other day, since the German merchant marine has been eliminated from ocean traffic most of the trade traffic is carried on by our ships, some by the English, and to a large extent by these neutrals.

I am unable to give in this list the tonnage of all the vessels. In some instances the tonnage has been given. Neither am I able to give a list of the people who have been destroyed when the ships were sunk, but it is a horrible record. In many instances many of the poor sailors, the crews on these vessels, have perished by reason of the submarines.

Now, there is this difference, to which I want to call the senator's attention, between the British method and the German method. The British have held up our ships, taken them into port, searched their cargo and taken out what they conceived to be improper and either confiscated it or commandeered it, but in the main they have let the ships go; they have not destroyed the ships. The Germans have not only destroyed the cargo but they have destroyed the ships, and in many instances they have killed the crews on these vessels.

Of course these four little neutral countries of Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden are, in the face of these great powers, helpless. They have to submit to this treatment. I bring this to the attention of the Senate in order that when the great country of the United States intervenes in this matter it will see to it that the traffic of these neutral countries is protected—protected not only in the interest of our commerce, but in the interest of fair play to these neutral nations.

PRO-GERMAN PAPERS ABUSE AMERICAN FREEDOM

From the Milwaukee Journal.

With their minds centered upon interests other than those of America, some German language newspapers, in Milwaukee and elsewhere in the United States, have for months engaged in fierce, bitter, unjust and unpatriotic attacks upon America and America's government. They have scathingly condemned everything that America has done in defense of her plain rights and have praised or condoned everything that Germany has done, even though to the great injury of America.

They have misrepresented the great body of honest, patriotic American citizens of German blood for whom they pretend to speak; they have not hesitated to do everything in their power to confuse and deceive and mislead these people, and, what is still more deplorable, they have beyond doubt put these people, for whom they pretend to speak even when they publish articles that go to extreme limits of incendiarism, in a cruelly unjust light in the eyes of many fellow citizens.

German language newspapers of this kind, when criticized for deliberately creating dissension in the body politic of America and for their seditious utterances in the interest of a foreign country, raise a clamorous outcry, claiming such criticism to be invasion of "the sacred liberty of the press."

These same German language newspapers, however, do not hesitate to go so far as to recommend boycotts against representatives of the national government and even state and city officials, as well as American newspapers published in the English language, which defend America and America's government from traitorous attacks made upon them by partisans in the old world conflict.

These German language newspapers deem it a crime for an American newspaper to speak up for America. They act as though "the sacred liberty of the press" is a monopoly belonging to them alone and not existing for newspapers that give undivided allegiance to this, their own country.

Their course brings to the very fore a most grave and acute issue. It is this: Have German language newspapers the right to attack and embarrass the government of the United States, in the interest of Germany, or the right to attempt to prevent American newspapers from defending the government of America against attacks made upon it in the interest of Germany? Does proper freedom of the press protect sedition on one hand and on the other prevent Americans from defending America?

A more momentous question has never confronted the people of any country. It is a question that is closely and inseparably interwoven with the life and nationalism of America.

By all means let this question be determined as soon as possible. It cannot be decided too quickly.

Whispering Hope.

Soft as the voice of an angel,
Breathing a lesson unheard,
Hope with a gentle persuasion,
Whispers her comforting word.
Wait till the darkness is over,
Wait till the tempest is done,
Hope for the sunshine tomorrow,
After the shower is gone.

Whispering hope, oh, how welcome thy voice,
Making my heart in its sorrow rejoice

If in the dusk of the twilight,
Dim be the region afar,
Will not the deepening darkness
Brighten the glimmering star?
Then when the night is upon us,
Why should the heart sink away.
When the dark midnight is over,
Watch for the breaking of day.

Hope, as an anchor so steadfast,
Rends the dark veil for the soul,
Whither the Master has entered,
Robbing the grave of its goal.
Come, then, oh, come, glad fruition,
Come to my sad, weary heart,
Come, oh, thou blest hope of glory,
Never, oh, never depart.

WONDERFUL PROGRESS IN CANADA

It Is Over the Hill—Splendid Bank Clearings, and the Crop Returns Reveal Vast Possibilities for the Future.

"There are opportunities for investment in Canada now that may prove attractive to American capital Land prices in the west are low and wages less than on this side of the line and whatever the outcome of the war, the future of the Dominion is assured as one of prosperity in the development of its vast resources." Chicago Tribune

A short time ago the Canadian government asked for private subscriptions to a loan of fifty million dollars. Less than a month was given for completion of the subscription On November 30th, the day upon which subscriptions were to cease, it was found that 110 million of dollars had been subscribed or 60 million dollars more than the amount asked. If there were any so pessimistic as to imagine that Canada was passing through a period of hard times the wonderful success of this subscription should put aside all doubts of Canada's rapidly increasing prosperity.

The bank clearings of Winnipeg for 1915 were a billion and a half of dollars. Think of it. Then, in addition there were the bank clearings of the other cities throughout Western Canada. Regina, Saskatoon and Moose Jaw also show big increase in clearings. The Winnipeg statistics show that the city has done the biggest financial, commercial and industrial business in its history in 1915. A billion and a half are big clearings representing business on a per capita basis of over $7,000 per head for every man, woman and child in the city, and has gone ahead of big manufacturing cities like Buffalo, and runs a close second to Detroit It has shown bigger bank clearings than the middle west cities of Minneapolis and Duluth, and has exceeded Los Angeles, Seattle and other noted shipping centers. It is now side by side with the ten biggest cities in North America in amount of bank clearings. But because the war helped Canada recover quickly from a natural economic depression it does not follow that, at the end of the war, the country must suffer a relapse, and straightway return to a state of inactivity and hard times.

A Winnipeg paper, with a well-known reputation for conservatism in economic matters says:

Canada's undeveloped fields should prove a mighty factor after the war in adjusting the country's business from one period to another. The staggering figures of this year's crop, showing increases in production of 50 per cent over last year, give a slight idea of the future wealth stored in vast stretches of prairie plain yet untouched by the plow. The Northwest Grain-Dealers' Association on September 1 estimated that the wheat crop of the three Prairie Provinces would amount to 250,800,000 bushels. On November 10 that estimate was increased to 307,230,000 bushels. The Dominion government on September 13 estimated the Western wheat crop at 275,772,200 bushels, but on October 15 those figures were changed to 304,200,000 bushels.

Monetary Returns for the Western Crop.

And the amount of money which the west is receiving for its grain has not yet been wholly appreciated. Up to the 10th of December the Canadian west had received some 170 million dollars for 182 million bushels of its grain crop, of which 149 million bushels was wheat. The average price of No. 1 Northern wheat for September was 93⅞ cents; for October 98½ cents, and for the first three weeks of November $1.03¾. On the 10th of December there was fully 120 million bushels of wheat to be marketed. This would leave about 30 million bushels for local consumption in the Prairie Provinces.

Bradstreet says:

"Confidence seems to have returned in Canada; grain crops are exceptionally large, prices pay the farmer, and the war-order lines provide work and aid in circulating much money. Credit is more freely granted, and interior merchants are disposed to buy rather liberally."—Advertisement.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued)

"Yes," I said, "I promise."

"And I," said the doctor. Then he looked at his watch. "It's time we were getting back," he added.

He took us over in his car, and we found the jury, under the guidance of Simmonds, just coming out of the house, each member smoking a fat black cigar at the expense of the state. They had been viewing the body and the scene of the crime, but as they filed back into their seats, I noted that they seemed anything but depressed. The lunch had evidently been a good one.

Sylvester was recalled to finish his testimony. He explained the system of curves and angles by which finger prints are grouped and classified, and the various points of resemblance by which two prints could be proved to have been made by the same finger. There was, first of all, the general convolution, whether a flexure, a stria, a sinus, a spiral, a circle, or a whorl. there was, secondly, the number of ridges in the convolution; and there was, thirdly, the angles which these ridges made. If two prints agreed in all these details, their identity was certain. He then proceeded to show that the prints made that morning by Swain did so agree with the photographs of the prints on the garments. Finally the witness was turned over to me for cross examination.

"Mr. Sylvester," I began, "are you willing to assert that those finger prints could have been made by no man in the world except Mr. Swain?"

Sylvester hesitated, just as I hoped he would do.

"No," he answered, at last, "I can't assert that, Mr. Lester. There may be three or four other men in the world with finger prints like these. But the probabilities against any of these men having made these prints are very great. Besides, it is a thing easily proved—the number of persons who might have committed the crime is limited, and it is an easy thing to secure prints of their fingers."

"That is what I was about to propose," I agreed. "I should like the finger prints taken of every one who was in the house Thursday night."

"Do I understand that your case stands or falls upon this point?" asked the coroner.

"Your Honor," I answered, "my client cannot explain how the prints of his fingers, if they are his, came to be upon that robe. The one thing he is certain of is that they were not placed there by him. Not once, during the entire evening, was my client near enough to Mr. Vaughan to touch him, not once did he so far lose consciousness as to be unable to remember what occurred. We have racked our brains for an explanation, and the only possible one seems to be that the prints of the real murderer resemble those of my client. And when I say the real murderer" I added, "I do not necessarily mean one of the persons whom we know to have been in the house. Outside of these finger prints, there has been absolutely no evidence introduced here to prove that the crime might not have been committed by some person unknown to us."

"You can scarcely expect the jury to believe, however," Goldberger pointed out, "that this supposititious person had finger tips like your client's."

"No," I agreed, "I make no such assertion, my hope is that we shall soon have the prints of the real murderer; and when I say the real murderer," I added, looking at the jury, "I believe every one present understands who I mean."

The coroner rapped sharply; but I had said what I wished to say, and sat down. The witnesses of the morning were ordered to be brought out. Sylvester arranged his ink pad and sheets of paper.

"It seems to me," remarked the coroner, with a smile, "that you and Mr. Godfroy would better register, too. You were within striking distance."

"That is right," I agreed, and was the first to register, but Sylvester, after a glance at my prints, shook his head.

"Your thumb is a left sinus," he said. "You're cleared, Mr. Lester."

Godfroy came forward and registered, too, and after him the three servants. In each case a shake of Sylvester's head told the result.

Then Simmonds came from the house, and Silva and Mahbub after him, and the coroner explained to Silva what was wanted. I fancied that the yogi's brow contracted a little.

"The registration of the fingers," he said, "of the foot or of the palm, is with us a religious ceremony, not to be lightly performed. By some, it is also held that the touch of ink, unless compounded by a priest of the temple according to a certain formula, is defiling, and, above all, it is impossible for a believer to permit such relics of himself to remain in the hands of an infidel."

"The relics, as you call them," Goldberger explained, "won't need to remain in our hands. My expert here can tell in a minute whether your prints resemble those of his photographs. If they do not, they will be returned to you."

"And if they do?"

Goldberger laughed.

"Well, you can have them back, anyway. In that case I guess we can persuade you, later on, to make another set."

The yogi flushed angrily, but controlled himself.

"I rely upon your promise, sir," he said, and laid his fingers first upon the pad and then upon the paper.

He stood with closed eyes and moving lips, his inked fingers held carefully away from him, during the breathless moment that Sylvester bent above the prints. Then the expert looked up and shook his head.

"No resemblance at all," he said, "and held out the sheet of paper on which the prints were.

Silva accepted it silently, and rolled it into a ball in the palm of his hand.

"Now for the other fellow," said Goldberger.

Silva glanced at his follower doubtfully.

"I am not sure that I can make him understand," he said, and for some moments talked energetically to Mahbub in a language which I suppose was Hindu. Mahbub listened, scowling fiercely, speaking a brief sentence now and then. "He would know," Silva asked, at last, turning to the coroner, "whether blood is a constituent of that ink."

"It is a purely chemical compound." Sylvester explained. "There is no blood in it, nor any other animal matter."

This was repeated to Mahbub, and, after some further hesitation, he advanced to the table.

A moment later, Sylvester was bending above the prints. Then he looked up, his face red with astonishment, and motioned for me to approach.

"Look at that," he said, and laid the prints before me.

My heart was leaping with the hope that the incredible had happened; that here lay the clue to the mystery. But the first glance told me that such was not the case. The prints resembled Swain's not at all. And then, when I looked at them again, I perceived that they resembled no other prints which I had ever seen.

For the prints of all 10 fingers were exactly alike, and consisted, not of whorls and spirals, but of straight lines running right across the finger. Sylvester was staring at them in bewilderment.

"These," he said, when he could find his voice, "are the most remarkable prints I ever saw."

"Do they resemble those on the robe?" asked the coroner.

"Not in the least."

"Then that settles that point," said Goldberger, with what seemed to me a sigh of relief.

"There is one thing, though," said Sylvester, eyeing Mahbub curiously, "I wish I knew the secret of these extraordinary prints."

"I can tell it to you," said Silva, with a little smile. "It is not at all extraordinary. The system of finger print identification has been in use among the Hindus for many centuries, and was adopted by the English courts in India nearly 100 years ago, after every other method had failed. The caste of Thuggee, which was at war with all other castes, and especially at war with the English, evaded it by stimulating on the fingers of their male children the formation of these artifical ridges. It became a sacred rite, performed by the priests, and has been maintained by the more devout members of the caste, although the need for it has ceased."

Sylvester looked at the prints again.

"I should like to keep these," he said. "They would be a great addition to my collection."

Silva bowed.

"Mahbub will have no objection," he said. "To him, they are of no importance, since there are many hundreds of men in the world with finger tips identical with his. That is all?"

Goldberger nodded, and the two strange figures walked slowly away toward the house.

CHAPTER XVI.

MISS VAUGHAN'S STORY.

Sylvester was still bending in ecstasy over those strange finger prints the absorbed ecstasy of the collector who has come unexpectedly upon a specimen wonderful and precious.

"Well," he said, looking up, at last, "I've learned something now today. These prints shall have the place of honor. They might not be a means of identification among the thugs, but I'll wager there's no collection in America has a set like them! They're unique!"

"But not in the least like the photographs," put in Goldberger, drily.

"No," and Sylvester flushed a little as he felt himself jerked from his hobby. "None of the prints we have taken this afternoon resemble the photographs in any way."

"But those made by Mr. Swain do resemble them?"

"It is more than a resemblance. They are identical with them."

"What inference do you draw from that?"

"It is more than an inference," Sylvester retorted. "It is a certainty. I am willing to swear that the finger prints on the robe worn by the murdered man were made by Frederic Swain."

"You realize the serious nature of this assertion?" asked the coroner, slowly.

"I realize it fully."

"And that realization does not cause you to modify it in any way?"

"It cannot be modified," said Sylvester, firmly, "however serious it may be, however reluctant I may be to make it—it cannot be modified because it is the truth."

There was a moment's silence, then Goldberger turned to me.

"Have you any questions to ask the witness, Mr. Lester?"

"No," I answered; "I have none."

Sylvester bent again above his prints, while the coroner and the prosecutor held a brief consultation. Then Goldberger turned back to me.

"Have you anything further, Mr. Lester?" he asked. "Our evidence is all in, I believe."

I was driven to my last entrenchment.

"I should like to call Miss Vaughan," I said, "if Dr. Hinman thinks she is strong enough."

Swain's chair creaked as he swung toward me.

"No, no!" he whispered, angrily. "Don't do that! Spare her that!"

But I waved him away, for it was his honor and welfare I had to consider, not Miss Vaughan's convenience, and turned to Dr. Hinman, who was evidently struggling between two duties. One was his duty to his patient; the other his duty to a man cruelly threatened, whom his patient's testimony might save.

"Well, what do you say, doctor?" asked the coroner.

"Miss Vaughan is no doubt able to testify," said the doctor, slowly, "but I should like to spare her as much as possible. Couldn't her deposition be taken privately? I think you mentioned something of the sort."

Goldberger looked at me.

"I shall be satisfied," I said, "to question her in the presence of Mr. Goldberger, reserving the right to put her on the stand, should I deem it necessary to do so."

"Very well," agreed the doctor. "I will prepare her," and he hurried away toward the house.

Swain was gripping my arm savagely.

"See here, Mr. Lester," he said in my ear, his voice shaking with anger, "I'm in deadly earnest about this. Take Miss Vaughan's deposition if you wish, but under no circumstances shall she be hauled before this crowd, in her present condition, and compelled to testify."

"Why not?" I asked, surprised at his vehemence.

"Because, in the first place, her testimony can't help me, and, in the second place, I won't have her tortured."

"She wouldn't be tortured."

"Look around at these reporters and these photographers, and then tell me she wouldn't be tortured!"

"How do you know her evidence won't help you?"

"How can it?"

"It will confirm your story."

"Can it explain away the finger prints?"

At the words, I suddenly realized that there was one person within striking distance of the murdered man whose prints we had not taken—his daughter. Not that they were necessary . . .

Dr. Hinman appeared at the edge of the lawn and beckoned. As I arose from my chair, Swain gave my arm a last savage grip.

"Remember!" he said.

But I kept my lips closed. If Miss Vaughan really loved him, and could help him, I would not need to urge her to the stand!

Goldberger joined me and together we followed Hinman into the house and up the stairs. He opened the door at the stair head, waited for us to precede him, followed us into the room, and closed the door gently.

Miss Vaughan was half sitting, half reclining in a large chair. The blinds were drawn and the room in semi-darkness, but even in that light I could see how changed she was from the girl of whom I had caught a glimpse two days before. Her face was dead white, as though every drop of blood had been drained from it, her eyes were heavy and puffed, as from much weeping, and it seemed to me that there still lingered in their depths a shadow of horror and shrinking fear.

"This is Mr Goldberger," said the doctor, "and this is Mr Lester."

She inclined her head to each of us, as we took the chairs the doctor drew up, and I fancied that her cheeks flushed a little as her eyes met mine.

"I have explained to Miss Vaughan," the doctor continued, "that an inquiry is in progress, as the law requires, to determine the manner of her father's death, and that her story of what happened that night is essential to it."

"It will, at least, be a great help to us," said Goldberger gently, and I saw how deeply the girl's delicate beauty appealed to him. It was a beauty that no pallor could disguise, and Goldberger's temperament was an impressionable one.

"I shall be glad to tell you all I know," said Miss Vaughan, "but I fear it will not help you much."

"Will you tell us something, first, of your father's mental state?" I suggested.

"For many years," she began, "father had been a student of mysticism, and until quite recently he remained merely a student. I mean by that, that he approached the subject with a detached mind and with no interest in it except a scientific interest."

"I understand," I said. "And that had changed recently?"

"It has changed completely in the last few months. He became a disciple, a convert anxious to win other converts."

"A convert to what?"

"To Hinduism—to the worship of Siva."

"That is the cult to which Francisco Silva belongs?"

"Yes; he is a White Priest of Siva."

"And this change in your father has been since the coming of this man?"

"Yes."

"Do you know anything of him?"

"Only that he is a very wonderful man."

"You know nothing of his past?"

"No."

"Did your father wish you to become a convert?"

"Yes, he desired it deeply."

"A priestess of Siva, I believe it is called?"

"Yes."

"And the yogi also desired it?"

"He believed it would be a great destiny. But he urged only for my father's sake."

"So you determined to appeal to Mr Swain?"

The color deepened in her cheeks again.

"I decided to ask his advice," she said.

"Please tell us what happened that evening."

"Mr. Swain met me at the arbor in the corner of the grounds, as I had asked him to, and convinced me that my father's mind had given way under his long study of the occult. We decided that he should be placed in a sanatorium where he could have proper attention, and Mr. Swain was to make the necessary arrangements. All I would have to do would be to sign some papers. We were just saying goodnight, when my father appeared at the entrance of the arbor."

"This was about midnight, was it not?"

"Yes."

"Why did you choose that hour for the meeting?"

"At that hour my father and the yogi were always engaged in invoking an astral benediction."

Even I, who knew the significance of the words, paused a little at them. The doctor and Goldberger were hopelessly at sea. After all, the words were a very good description of the weird ceremony.

"Well," I said, "and after your father appeared, what happened?"

HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.

Richmond, Va.—"After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the Change of Life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2812 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

WHAT IS URIC ACID?

THE CAUSE OF BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM, LUMBAGO

Ever since the discovery of uric acid in the blood by Scheele, in 1775, and the bad effect it had upon the body, scientists and physicians have striven to rid the tissues and the blood of this poison. Because of its overabundance in the system it causes backache, pains here and there, rheumatism, gout, gravel, neuralgia and sciatica. It was Dr. Pierce who discovered a new agent, called "Anuric," which will throw out and completely eradicate this uric acid from the system. "Anuric" is 37 times more potent than lithia, and consequently you need no longer fear muscular or articular rheumatism or gout, or many other diseases which are dependent on an accumulation of uric acid within the body. Send to Dr. Pierce of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., for a pamphlet on "Anuric," or send 10 cents for a trial package of "Anuric" Tablets.

If you feel that tired, worn-out feeling, backache, neuralgia, or if your sleep is disturbed by too frequent urination, go to your best store and ask for Dr. Pierce's "Anuric."

Dr. Pierce's reputation is back of this medicine and you know that his "Pleasant Pellets" for the liver and his "Favorite Prescription" for the ills of women have had a splendid reputation for the past fifty years.

Seed Corn Test to be Made by Short Course People

One of the big features of the Short Course this year will be a germination corn test that has been put on by the Ames People. There has been from 50 to 75 samples of seed corn gathered from local farmers, in and around Klemme which is being used for this work

Every farmer who has entered corn for this test has been asked the amount of seed he has on hand, when selected before or after frost, if he will buy or sell and how much. This data will be used to help to make a market for farmers who have seed to sell and those who will have to buy.

If you are at all interested in the seed corn situation, make plans and come in and see the seed corn or test. This alone will be worth the price of a full course ticket. Remember the course commences Monday.

Mas Nelson Injured

Mrs. Tom Nelson, Sr., received some very serious injuries in a runaway accident near the Arnold place, Wednesday. She and Mrs. Behringer were making a drive out in the country to visit some of their friends and enjoy a cutter ride, in turning out to pass a team the cutter upset and Mrs. Nelson's scalp received an ugly cut extnding the full width of her forehead. Medical aid was summohed as soon as possible and she was able to be brought home that evening. She is resting nicely at present, and many friends are glad to know that her injuries are not more serious and that she will in all pobalbilities be able to be about in a shor time.

Hancock County Short Course Feb. 14 to 19

A big event is coming soon—an event of significance to every farmer, farmer's wife, son and daughter in Hancock county.

It is an event that will bring "pay dirt" to every person who is big sighted enough to take advantage of it.

It is the Hancock county winter short course and farmers' week at Klemme, February 14th to 19th.

During that week the town will be turned over to the service of the farmers. The biggest men in agriculture in the country will be here to tell the farmers of their life long work and experience in their special lines.

Best methods of farming, backed up by experience, told in plain, understandable English—that's what every farmer wants to hear. That's exactly what he will get at Klemme, February 14-19: But that's not all.

There will be a chance to meet fellow farmers, talk things over with them heart to heart, and learn first hand what they are doing.

Work on the farm is not heavy at this time of year. A more remunerative vacation could not be taken than this week of learning. Plans ought to be made now. The farmer who comes to Klemme will return home a better farmer, a bigger producer and a wiser man.

Tickets are now being offered for sale, purchase one or more when you have the opportunity.

Remember—February 14th to 19th.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this: he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest

SHORT COURSE A GREAT SUCCESS

Grand Weather Tended to Bring Out Good Attendance

The Short Course which is in session this week is now drawing to a close and each session has been well attended as we have been blessed with some extremely nice weather—in fact it could have not been better if made to order.

Tha course this year has been the best of three with the one exception that it did not contain any beef or dairy cattle class work, and those especially interested in these lines have been rather disappointed. The Domestic Science Class for ladies has been the largest attended. This makes the second year for this work and we suspect the ladies will have a course again next year but the men will have to feel content to wait five years as this makes their third years work.

It is hard to say at this time but it is thought that the Commercial Club who guaranteed the course will have to stand a deficiency which they will gladly do as they believe the course will prove a power for good among the farmers, and if it proves of benefit to the farmer it will also prove so to the business man.

We will give a full report of the prize winners next week.

PUBLIC OPINION THE MOST POTENT COURT

Protects the People and the Possessor of Original Constructive Genius

If a person uses an imitation unknowingly and never discovers that it is an imitation he may be able to get along with it and think he is doing well enough. The use of an imitation is a doubtful expedient even though the original may be more difficult to obtain. It always pays to get the best. For one should always remember that an imitation in any line is an attempt to profit through the reputation, efficiency, and good will which the reliability and excellence of the original has established. The obvious intention is to share in the general prosperity of that line of endeavor without paying the price of worthiness. In any product representing self sacrificing effort and patient investigation there is but one authentic original and its characteristic qualities that compelled attention and won approval can never be copied with success or applied with equal efficiency by any other agency. An imitation is a loosing proposition for those who use it when its work is compared with the work and efficiency of the model from which it takes its being.

With these deductions presented for its consideration public opinion, the most potent court in existence, will operate to protect the individual and also the possessor of the ingenuity which has been turned to good account Each person is an active unit in the making of this verdict. He is looking out for himself, he feels that he is entitled to the best, and he will choose that which appeals to him most. If he makes an error it is not intentional but due to unreliable information, and this stimulates him to exercise better judgement in the future. The people want to know the truth for it protects them, the man of original ideas and constructive genius wants them to know it for it protects him and means the doom of the imitator. The working out of this happy result may be stated as follows:—Two eminently worthy activities—original productive genius on the one hand and individual best interest on the other, constantly seeking a more perfect realization and both being in harmony with the universal tendency toward perfection, by the law of reciprocity benefit each other in attaining individual success. The universe is in harmony.

Having pursued the subject thus far it is yours to decide whether you will use Dr. A. T. Still's original product of constructive genius, Osteopathy, the Science of Healing by Adjustment in preference to any one of its several imitations. Respectfully,

Dr. R. W. Shultz,
Osteopathic Physician.

FROM THE SUNNY SOUTH

John Schuler Writes Interesting Missive to Klemme Friends

Tampa, Florida. Feb. 1, 1916.

I thought that perhaps some of the Klemme people would be interested in heering a little about Florida. We are located at Tampa a city of 65,000. It is the ideal place to live for the winter. The temperature is somewhat warmer in winter than our warmest weather last summer. It now averages 80 degrees in the shade during the day.

We called on Henry Ridder's family who live at Arcadia, a town of 4500. Mr. Ridder has 40 acres of land suitable for orange and grape fruit culture, also a fine farm at Arcadia, where we were entertained for a week, having a delightful time, discussing old times and friends.

Arcadia has 7 large packing houses for fruit and is destined to become one of the most important fruit shipping points of the state.

It is wonderful to be able to go out in the garden and pick strawberries, oranges, grape fruit, and any vegetable that we grow in the north, also to hear the mocking bird, oriole, and wild canaries.

The children go to school at 8.30 and are dismissed at 2:15, which gives us lots of time to get around.

We have been well so far, and enjoy every day as we have only had two cloudy in two months so far. Hoping these few lines will interest some of our friends. I am,

Yours truly,
John Schuler.

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights
Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3½-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large, and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted, when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car . . . the famous Overland Six, seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Call, telephone or write for demonstration.

THE KLEMME TIMES

M. M. MAGNER, Publisher.

KLEMME, IOWA

The singular fact that window panes broken by the explosion of Zeppelin bombs invariably fall outward is being accounted for in London on the theory that the explosion forces a wave of condensed air against the window, suddenly compressing the air in contact with the inner surface, so that it acts like a cushion. The compressed air inside travels across the room in the form of a wave and is reflected back by the wall on the opposite side. By the time the wave returns to the window, a rarefied wave has taken the place of the compressed air outside the compression within, combined with the decrease of pressure without, forces the glass to fall outward

When the Sioux Indians wish to bore a hole in wood to make a pipe stem or a musical instrument they remove the pith from one end for a distance of an inch or so and place in the cavity a wood boring larva taken from a dead ash tree In order to accelerate the borer's work they sometimes heat the wood below it The larva quickly cuts a smooth round hole, following the pith of the wood The Indians regard the larva and the tube made in this manner as sacred When the work is done the larva is carefully returned to the tree from which it was taken

Prof M E Jaffa, of the California state board of health, denies that, as is generally believed, denies that as is generally believed, lye peeled peaches are more injurious to health than hand peeled fruits To food value, quality and flavor are unchanged, and it is impossible to distinguish one from the other except by the knife marks of the hand peeled product, he says Analyses show that the acidity of the fruit is not affected by the use of lye in the peeling process.

Scientists at the Paris medical college have found by a series of experiments that, as physiologists have long asserted, tobacco smoke has an injurious effect on the heart, but that this effect is not dependent on the amount of nicotine contained in the tobacco, in fact, smoke from the combustion of materials other than tobacco appeared to be about as harmful The deleterious effects are attributed to the multiple products of combustion in the smoke.

Levelers, members of an organization bent on removing all class distinctions and leveling all titles, who were powerful in the English parliament in 1647, were first heard of in Germany during the 16th century, when two men Munzer and Storck by their teaching quickly acquired wide influence and accumulated a following of 40,000 men

It is related that a friend of Browning's, finding him puzzled over the numerous Browning societies that had sprung up in this country, declared them to indicate how much the poet meant to America "Yes" replied Browning dryly, "but it isn't very flattering to think you can't be understood without the aid of an organized effort"

Not satisfied with the 125,000,000 stars now visible through proper instruments, a well known astronomer, indicating sincere idealism, expresses the hope that 100-inch telescope will soon be invented and the belief that it will add no less than 100 new stars to these already included in mortal charts of the firmament

ONE OF IOWA'S OLDEST CONCERNS BURNED OUT LAST NIGHT IN DUBUQUE

Cooper Wagon and Buggy Co. Stock Losses Figured at $100,000.

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 12.—Fire at a late hour last night destroyed the A. A. Cooper Wagon & Buggy company warehouse on the levee, entailing a loss of $300,000 A great quantity of wagons, buggies and farm implements went up in smoke, the flames making such rapid progress after discovery that nothing was saved. In the list of destroyed property was nearly $100,000 worth of wagons ready for shipment to Europe.

The building was one of the old substantial brick structures, three stories high, which, in early days, was a part of the Ryan Packing company plant. It covered a solid block. The origin of the fire is unknown. The loss is said to be practically covered by insurance.

At midnight the Illinois Central passenger depot and the International Harvester company's warehouse plant, containing $500,000 worth of stock, were threatened

COMMERCIAL CLUB FORMED BY PEOPLE OF PRIMGHAR

Primghar, Ia, Feb 12—The farmers and merchants have organized a Commercial club in Primghar for the purpose of boosting the town along all legitimate lines There is a charter membership of 70 members, and the number is expected to reach 100 before many days.

Temporary quarters have been secured in the Hub hotel, until a building of their own is secured. The executive committee are considering several sites for a permanent structure which will be erected in the spring W W. Artherholt was elected president, and Alex Stewart, secretary

The Primghar high school basket ball team defeated the Sioux City high school's second team by the score of 25 to 19 The game was fast and clean throughout, and was anybody's game all the time. Sioux City's second team is about as good as the first team Primghar has the fastest team in its history, and has defeated all the teams in this section, and will be a likely contender for championship honors at the district contest at Sioux City.

At the local declamatory contest held recently, William Overcash was awarded first place in the oratorical class, Mary McCroskey first in the dramatic class, and Grace Griffin first in the humorous class Twelve boys and ten girls took part in the local contest, which was held in two sections

CLARKE URGES ALL TO TAKE ACTIVE INTEREST IN SEED CORN WEEK

Sets Aside Days of February 28 to March 4—Situation Serious.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 11.—Governor Clarke, in a proclamation issued today, designates the week of February 28-March 24 as "Seed Corn" week. The governor asks farmers to test seed corn and urges bankers and business men to actively interest themselves in the movement He states that the seed corn situation is serious.

Ames, Ia., Feb. 11—Northeastern Iowa seems to be "up against it" as far as seed corn for 1916 is concerned. Complete returns from the thorough canvass made in Chickasaw county to discover just how much seed is available for the coming planting show clearly that the situation is very grave.

In their reports to Director R. K. Bliss of the agricultural extension department of Iowa State college the men at work in Chickasaw county state that they located 60,000 bushels of 1914 crib corn that seemed to promise well as seed, but that when they came to test it, only 5,000 bushels out of the 60,000 proved good enough for seed This situation in Cherokee county is fairly representative of the conditions which prevail in the other counties in the northeastern corner of the state There is every reason to believe that seed will have to be shipped into the district by the carload from outside counties Chickasaw in a normal year plants between 60,000 and 70,000 acres to corn, requiring perhaps as much as 15,000 bushels of seed. Its 5,000 bushels is therefore, a long ways from enough.

Out of the 60,000 bushels of seemingly good 1914 crib corn located in Chickasaw county by the agents of the extension department, J C Eldredge and A M. Avery, 2,300 bushels tested 60 to 100 per cent strong, 6,040 bushels, 30 to 60 per cent strong; 7,920 bushels, 10 to 30 per cent strong, and 43,000 bushels less than 10 per cent strong. Preliminary reports from Worth county show an equally serious situation there, and the shortage will be heavy. Pocahontas county, on the other hand, seems to have more good seed than is needed for local use.

In importing seed corn, it is important that it be brought in from close by districts. Twelve years of experiments of the agricultural extension department with imported seed show that it is not as satisfactory as local grown seed

FRIENDS ARE REMEMBERED IN IDA GROVE WILLS

Ida Grove Ia, Feb. 11—The will of Mrs Sarah Poolman and Frank Fisher, two pioners of Ida county have been offered for probate in the office of the clerk of Ida county, and among the bequests are noted several substantial sums to those who have been kind to the deceased parties during their lifetime The will of Mrs. Poolman leaves her home in this city and about $3,000 in cash to Mrs Theodore Kephart and her family they having taken care of her for the past two years She has a brother and a half sister whose residence was in Pennsylvania when last she heard from them and they are given $1 each

Frank Fisher, was one of the wealthy citizens of Ida county, and leaves an estate of nearly $60,000 This is divided among three brothers and their children, and a number of nieces and nephews of his wife are given bequests of from $100 to $300 each To Miss Martha Bates, a nurse in the Mayo Bros hospital at Rochester, Minn., in which he had been a patient twice, during both times under her care he leaves a bequest of $500. To Mrs Ollie Bamberger, an Ida Grove lady, in whose home he has resided while in Ida Grove since his wife's death, he also leaves $500. An elder brother, whose home is in New York city, is made executrix, and authorized to close up the estate as soon as the law permits He is now here looking after the same

IOWA REFUSES TO LIFT ILLINOIS CATTLE EMBARGO

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 11.—Requests, made by Illinois stockmen and Dr O. E. Dyson, state veterinarian of Illinois, that the Iowa embargo, placed on Illinois cattle because of the hoof and mouth disease, be raised, were refused late yesterday by the Iowa animal health commission

Dr J I Gibson, Iowa state veterinarian, stated that recent hoof and mouth cases in Christian county, Illinois, were responsible for the refusal.

GRINNELL FACULTY IS FOR PREPAREDNESS PLANS

Grinnell Ia Feb. 11.—That a large per cent of the faculty at Grinnell are in favor of what they call "a moderate amount of preparedness," shown by the fact that 10 representative professors, heads of departments, when interviewed yesterday, declared themselves as favoring one of the strongest navies in the world for the United States Satisfaction was generally expressed with President Wilson's policy of putting the matter of preparedness directly before the people of the country in a personal tour

The men interviewed are a representative group of the Grinnell professors The list includes, President Main, Professors Macy and Cannaway, of the political science department; Prof W S Hendrixson, of the chemistry department, G. P Wyckoff, of the economics department, P F. Peck, head of the history department, Professors Nobel and Ryan, of the English department, J D. Stoops, of the department of philosophy, and E. T. Spenser, of the department of classics.

While they were, for the most part, all favorable to a larger navy, they were divided on the subject of a larger army. All were agreed that a great store of munitions and other military necessities should be laid up, and that a large number of officers should be trained who would be capable of handling a volunteer army in case of war

Aided by a favorable wind, which blew persistently for several days, the cotton boll weevil in Georgia made an advance of 100 miles in a few weeks, whereas its progress under normal conditions has been 50 miles in a year.

HEPBURN FUNERAL TO BE HELD THURSDAY P. M.

Clarinda, Ia., Feb. 9.—Prominent men from all over Iowa and many sections of the United States have signified their intention of attending the funeral services here at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon for Col. W. P. Hepburn, former member of congress, who died Monday.

The services will be in charge of the local G. A. R. post and the Masonic lodge. Rev. Abram S Woodward, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, will preach the sermon.

AGED IOWA WOMAN IS PLACED ON TRIAL; SON MAY BE STATE WITNESS

Mrs. Ida Meyer Charged With Murder of Her Daughterinlaw Last July.

Winterset, Ia., Feb. 10.—Mrs. Ida Meyer, aged 60 and reputed wealthy, was placed on trial here, yesterday, charged with complicity in the murder of her daughterinlaw, Mrs. Fred Meyer, on July 25, 1915.

The selection of jurymen was begun late yesterday and it was expected the jury would be complete today. A special venire of 76 men has been called. When court adjourned yesterday the defense had issued five peremptory challenges.

One of the sensations of the opening day was a report that Fred Meyer, the defendant's son, may be put on the stand by the state to testify against his mother.

Meyer himself was convicted of second degree murder in connection with the same case, last December, and was sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary. He is out on bond, pending an appeal to the supreme court.

County Attorney Phil R. Wilkinson is conducting the state's case, and John H. Gulher, member of the Iowa railroad commission, is chief counsel for Mrs. Meyer.

Each tentative juryman was asked yesterday whether he had heard reports that Mrs. Meyer had murdered her husband, and whether he had heard reports concerning her past life. Mrs. Meyer's husband was found dead in a cornfield about 10 years ago.

Mrs. Fred Meyer was found dead in her home near here on July 25, last. A bullet was found in her head and a revolver by her side. Her husband and motherinlaw claimed that the young woman had committed suicide.

AFTER YEARS OF MARRIED LIFE, WIFE ASKS DIVORCE

Fort Dodge, Ia., Feb. 10.—Mrs. Mary Henry, 58 years of age, has filed suit against her 60-year-old husband, Samuel Henry, against whom she makes sensational charges. Nine children have been born to the couple, eight of whom are living and have attained maturity.

Mrs. Henry is now living at the home of a daughter here. Judge Wright had granted a temporary injunction restraining the aged husband from molesting his wife. Hearing on that injunction will be held next Monday

Mattie J Loar has filed objections to the probating of the will of her mother, Mrs. Maria Johnston. The estate is estimated to be worth about $75,000. The usual charges of undue influence and that the deceased woman was of unsound mind are made.

LATTER DAY SAINTS CLOSE FINE MEETING

Logan, Ia, Feb. 10.—District convention and quarterly conference of the Latter Day Saints of western Iowa, closed here last evening, and regardless of unfavorable conditions of the roads and weather, the attendance was good From the reports from the different charges in the six counties, the church has gained in membership. Tithing report showed the free will offering to have been $5,563 90 for 1915. Elder W W. Baker, of Sioux City, delivered the Saturday evening sermon. Twenty-three delegates were selected to attend the general conference at Independence, Mo., April 6.

After an invitation from Sioux City, Moorehead, Missouri Valley and Woodbine, Missouri Valley was selected for the next place of meeting, June 1, 2 and 3.

Sunday morning at 8 o'clock the meeting of the elders took place; after which came the Sunday school work and in the afternoon Amos Berve preached; religio at 6 o'clock in the evening and preaching at 7:30. Elder Sidney Pitt, of Persia, was in charge of the conference at Logan.

CROOKED CREEK ROAD FOR SALE

Fort Dodge, Ia., Feb. 10.—Four junk firms are among the bidders who are expected to make offers for the Crooked Creek Railroad & Coal company's property, when the foreclosure sale is held. Attorneys for Sam McClure, receiver for the road, have prepared a decree to be sent to Judge H. T. Reed, of the federal court, for his signature, authorizing the sale of the property.

The First Trust company, of Milwaukee, the mortgagee, also will bid in the property, it is expected, in behalf of the holders of the $116,000 worth of bonds.

Claims against the property must be filed not later than February 29. The amount against the road now claimed is about $20,000.

The 18-mile stretch of light steel track, as crooked as its name indicates, was built between Webster City and Lehigh in 1872, when the coal mining industry at Lehigh was at its height. As the mines became exhausted, the fortunes of the road declined. Its lone locomotive became in disrepair for its duties of making one round trip a day. The receiver will secure an order allowing him to rent another locomotive.

AMES—There have been short courses and short courses in the midwest, but never another so large in point of attendance and enthusiasm as that just closed at Iowa State college. The registration went beyond the 2,200 mark and the total attendance actually went beyond the 3,000 mark. Only one other short course week anywhere ever drew a larger crowd—that in compact, thickly populated New York state a year ago. Men and women from every walk of life came to the college to draw dividends on their investment in it. There were farmers and their wives, of course, and something like 250 farm boys and girls; there were county engineers, clay and cement product manufacturers, bankers and other business and professional men, mechanics, club women, civic improvement leaders, contractors and builders, fruit growers and nurserymen, cattle, horse and swine breeders, poultrymen butter makers and ice cream makers, teachers of agriculture, tractor and automobile men, and besides, others who could not be classified easily.

IOWA CITY—Iowa City high school now leads the United States in the National Rifle association's interscholastic shoot, according to the latest figures from Washington, D. C., to the Iowa City high school officials. The total score of the "Little Hawkeyes" to date is 2,754. Placer county high, of Auburn, Cal., is a close second, with 2,752, and Ogden, Utah, is third, its total being 2,743.

MASON CITY—The Cerro Gordo County Cummins club will ask the Fourth district republicans to name C H McNider, of this city, banker and cement company head, as a delegate to the national convention.

GERMAN PLAN TO SINK ARMED SHIPS TO SHIFT BLAME

Teutonic Order Justifies Lansing Proposal That Arms Be Removed From All Merchant Craft.

CONCESSION TO AMERICA

Relieves United States of Responsibility For Lives of Citizens Lost on Armed Vessels.

Washington, Feb. 11.—On representations by the Italian embassy that her guns are to be used only for defensive purposes the department approved a request for clearance from New York of the Italian steamship, Taormina

Washington, D. C., Feb 1 Germany and Austria have formally notified the United States that beginning March 1, commanders of their submarines will consider armed merchantships of the entente allies to be warships and will treat them accordingly

Under such instructions, commanders would be at liberty to sink without warning any armed vessel, whether passenger or freight carrying

The notifications were presented orally to Secretary Lansing by Count Von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, and Baron Brich Zweidenek charge of the Austro-Hungarian embassy here. Notes from their governments are to follow.

The intention of the Teutonic allies is considered in official and diplomatic circles here to be a development of memorandum proposing the disarming of the merchant ships which Secretary Lansing recently sent to the entente powers. High officials of the state department seemed disposed to consider the development broad enough to warrant the claim that the fundamental questions involved in the conduct of submarine warfare have been settled, it was the contentions of the United States.

Can't Sink Unarmed Vessels.

This is based upon the belief that with Germany and Austria giving notice that they will sink without warning all armed ships, the two governments cannot legally claim the right to sink unarmed vessels That is the principle for which the United States has so vigorously contended since the beginning of the negotiations over the conduct of submarine warfare

In view of this situation American citizens, it is stated by high authority now may be warned that they will take passage aboard armed merchant ships at their own risk and be entitled to no more protection from the United States than if they had embarked upon a belligerent warship. Officials today seemed not to be able to conceive that any issue could arise in the future from a submarine warfare conducted under these rules.

Given Until March 1.

The German ambassador and the Austrian charge informed Secretary Lansing of the intention of their respective governments, after they had received by wireless a dispatch, of which the following is represented as being a paraphrase:

"The German and Austrian governments will instruct the commanders of their war vessels that from the end of this month they are to regard armed merchant ships of the enemy as auxiliary cruisers. Notice to this effect will be sent to all neutral governments Please so inform Mr. Lansing immediately."

It was said in Teutonic diplomatic circles that the effective date of the instructions was proposed solely for the reason that the central powers desired to give enemy merchant ships time to disarm, and so that the entente allies might have the chance to make their views conform to the suggestions put forward by the United States in its memorandum. This memorandum declared it was desirable that merchantships should be unarmed, and contained an intimation of an intention to regard armed merchantmen that come into American waters as warships.

Basis of Lansing Plan.

The United States acted upon the assumption that no war vessels of the central powers, except submarines were at sea, and that a single shell of even a small caliber, fired from a gun aboard a merchant ship, might sink any submarine that attempted to stop her It was recognized that submarines had a right to operate in accord with international law, but that their commanders could not be expected to endanger their vessels and crews in dealing with armed ships.

It was stated by a high authority here today that it was extremely doubtful that the Austrian and German governments would have issued the note to neutral governments had it not been for the American memorandum. Officials were much interested in dispatches from Berlin, which quoted Dr. Alfred Zeimmermann, under secretary of foreign affairs, as saying that the German government considered its note to be in harmony with the views of the United States.

Force Hands of Allies.

Secretary Lansing said today that none of the allies had replied to his note. Other officials suggested that the announced intention of the German and Austrian governments would force the hands of their enemies.

In the embassies of the allies here it was freely stated that, although word had not been received from their governments, not the slightest doubt prevailed that the suggestion of the United States would be rejected.

The view of the diplomats seemed to be that, as the enemy submarines surely would sink their merchantmen regardless of whether they resisted or not, ship masters would prefer to take their chances at saving their vessels by fighting, if they were unable to escape capture by flight.

Confronted with the virtual threat of the United States to classify armed merchant ships as war vessels, and therefore not entitled to enter American waters more than once in every six months or to remain more than 24 hours, it was said at one of the embassies here that if the United States, in face of the desperate need of ships to carry its product abroad, could afford to exclude from its parts allied merchantmen, the governments owning them could afford to send in only enough unarmed ships to take out foods consigned to themselves. There seemed reason to believe that the view obtained at the embassy fairly reflected at this time the position of other allied governments.

ROGRESSIVES TO PIN THEIR FAITH ON IOWA SENATOR

an Cut Issue Will Be Forced n Every State Where There Is No Bona Fide Favorite Son.

WAGE FIGHT IN SOUTH

ti-Conservative Forces Unite n Cummins to Prevent Hand Picked Delegate Rule at Chicago,

Washington, D. C., Feb. 12.—Back- of Senator Cummins have decided carry his campaign for the republican nomination into the south as well the east making a clear cut issue progressivelsm against conservaSenator Cummins has the almost animous backing of all the progresve members of congress and it is ir intention to make a nationwide at for instructed delegates to the cago convention.

enator Cummins' fight will be carinto every state where there is not ona fide "favorite son" candidate. In south an effort will be made to est away from the exfederal officeders some of the delegates which reactionaries now hope to send to icago uninstructed, but hand picked

All Progressives in Line.

The decision of the Cummins camp enter upon a nationwide campaign lowed a meeting of the entire Iowa legation with the exception of Sen- Cummins himself. It is also the ult of frequent conferences of the odd most ardent progressive republans in congress who do not want to the republican party tied and und to a reactionary platform and a re reactionary candidate. They ve become convinced that the conrvatives in their talk of "harmony d a welcome hand extended to the gressives," which is always coupled th a suggestion for uninstructed legates, was merely to sing the proessive element of the party to sleep, hile they carefully selected and hand cked the delegates to do the voting Chicago. All of these progressive publican congressmen do not pick mmins as their first choice for the mination, but as he is the only proessive republican in the race they e getting behind him.

Means Hard Fight in East.

National Cummins headquarters are be opened in Washington imediately and the fight in the eastern ates will be conducted from here hile the middle west fight will be ndled from Des Moines, where headarters already are opened The proessive republicans behind Cummins ow they are going up against a stiff me in the east, particularly where e G. O. P. state leaders largely have led the way for "uninstructed delestes" already. But this is their obct, as expressed by Senator Kenyon, Iowa, leader of the Cummins forces "We want to give the progressiv ement of the republican party an portunity to vote for a progressive ndidate or delegates instructed for im in every state where there is a tate primary. We won't go into any tate where there is a bona fide faorite son candidate. But we don't lieve that the progressive element of e party, which is the majority elent of the party, should be deprived an opportunity of expressing its dere for a forward looking platform and ndidate through default."

Gaining Strength Everywhere.

Many of the Cummins backers realse that he is not a particularly magtic candidate and has no great perpnal following. But they argue that has the respect of all, progressive nd conservative, and that his candiacy offers the only hope of a union of e progressives and republicans—save aat of Colonel Roosevelt or Senator orah—and they profess to see that any conservatives would rather have ummins than Roosevelt. The Cumins followers, however, have ented many former Roosevelt men and me of his friends.

STILL NO CLEW TO MAN WHO ROBBED U. P. TRAIN

Rock Springs, Wyo., Feb. 11.—Belief at the bandit who robbed several assengers on a Union Pacific limited ain Wednesday night, may have arded a train here within an hour, as expressed today by some persons ngaged in the search. No clew to his entity had been found early today, although two posses were participating in the search. Sheriff Matt Mcourt, of Green River, led one party nd the other was composed of Union acific agents.

MEN WHO LOST NAVAL CODE BOOK FACE TRIAL

San Francisco, Feb. 11.—Ensign Robert D. Kirkpatrick pleaded guilty today to charges of negligence and inefficiency before a court martial on the battleship Oregon, anchored in Man O' War row in the bay, in the proceedings to fix the blame for the disappearance last August, of a secret battleship signal code book from the destroyer Hull. Trial of Lieut. Herbert A. Jones, commanding the Pacific fleet torpedo division, held responsible as commanding officer, will be held late today.

TEXAS MEXICAN REVOLT LEADER IS CAPTURED

Brownsville, Tex., Feb. 14.—Aniceto Pizana, alleged leader of the "Texas revolution" held responsible for border troubles and general unrest last summer and fall, was captured yesterday and brought to Matamoras, Mexico, opposite here, according to an official report to Col. A. P. Blockson, commanding the United States border patrol today.

REPORT NEW TOLLS BILL.

Washington, Feb. 11.—The bill for a new standard of assessing tolls on ships passing through the Panama canal was favorably reported today by the House commerce committee. General Goethals urged favorable action on the measure, declaring it would mean great financial gain to the government.

DENY PEACE OFFERS WERE MADE BELGIUM

London Informed Berlin Will Insist on Annexation of Part of State.

London, Feb. 11, 2. p. m.—The Belgian legation announced today that the rumors which have been circulated that peace proposals recently were made by Germany to the Belgian government are devoid of foundation.

London, Feb. 11 —Recent information gathered in government circles in Berlin is that Germany holds a portion of Belgium which would be annexed to Germany in any settlement of the war which is undertaken.

This view is directly the reverse of the recent report coming through Italy that Germany had offered to evacuate Belgium as a condition of a separate peace.

There is no confirmation of the report of Germany's willingness to evacuate Belgium, but the contrary view that Germany desires to retain part of that country probably will be made known in confidential advices going to the American authorities, indicating a less favorable outlook than had been expected

DEATH ENDS FIFTY YEARS OF MISERY

Millie Fancher, Bed Ridden For Half Century, Was Known Throughout the Entire World.

New York, Feb. 12.—Miss Millie Fancher, who celebrated her "golden jubilee" as an invalid eight days ago, died today at her home in Brooklyn

Miss Fancher was known to thousands of people all over the world through the extraordinary correspondence she built up during the half century of her invalidism. Although bed ridden and only able to move her right arm, she worked unceasingly at knitting and embroidering, and is said to have used up 100,000 pounds of worsted

In 1866, when Miss Fancher was 17 years old, and noted for her beauty, she was thrown from her horse and injured

A year later she was the victim of a street car accident which deprived her of the use of all her limbs, except her right arm For nine years she remained in a trance like condition, during which period her friends insisted she was clairvoyant. It was in these years tnat she built up her correspondence, dictating a total of 6,900 letters

During the 50 years of her imprisonment in a sick room Miss Fancher's chief nourishment was the juice of fruits.

CLIFFORD THORNE DENIES HE KNEW

Did Not Understand From Carmalt What Brandeis' Position Would Be, He Declares.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11.—Railroad Commissioner Thorne in the Brandeis case, has sent a letter to Chairman Chilton, of the committee in which he dwells on features of testimony of Examiner Carmalt, of the Interstate Commerce commission. Frank Lyon's testimony, the testimony of Joseph N. Teal, of Portland, and of Lieutenant Governor Eshleman, of California, all these have appeared in behalf of Brandeis. Mr. Thorne points out that Teal and Eshleman had nothing to do with the eastern advanced rate case, and that Mr Brandeis opposed the advance affecting the client of Mr Lyon, the Pittsburgh Coal company.

"Of course Mr. Lyon had no complaint," says Mr. Thorne. Mr Thorne, in an anlysis of Carmalt's testimony, indicates he did not get the impression from the statement Carmalt made to him that Mr. Brandeis would take the position the revenues of the eastern roads as a whole were inadequate. Mr. Thorne has departed for Iowa.

APPAM RULING WILL SOON BE PUBLISHED

Washington, Feb. 11.—Disposition of the British liner, Appam, brought into Hampton Roads by a German prize crew has been decided upon by the United States and will be announced later. Although there is no official confirmation, the indications are that the ship will be permitted to remain in American waters as a prize for the Germans indefinitely under the terms of the Prussian-American treaty.

100 ARE POISONED AT BANQUET TO BISHOP

Chicago, Feb. 11.—More than 100 distinguished persons who suffered ptomaine poisoning at the banquet last night at the University club, given Archbishop George W. William Mundelein, of the Chicago archdiocese today had fully recovered. Prompt first aid measures administered by physicians present prevented any after effects.

It is said that the poison was transmitted through bullion served at the banquet.

NEW POSTMASTERS.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 11.—The president today nominated the following Iowa postmasters: Lloyd F. Anspach, Bussey; Edgar M. Pelly, Central City; E. E. Cole, Woodbine. The president withdrew the name of W. D. Cromie, Woodbine. Nebraska, E. A. Brown, Friend. Essie Beatty, Brady. J. M Liggett, Farnam; A. R. Kovanada, Table Rock.

EDISON BATTERY IS BLAMED FOR DISASTER

Naval Counsel Declares New Storage Device Lacks Ventilation System.

New York, Feb. 12.—Responsibility for the explosion upon the submarine E-2 at the New York navy yard, which resulted in five deaths, was placed upon the Edison Storage Battery company by Lieut. C. W. Nimitz, counsel for Lieut. Chas M Cooke, commander of the vessel, who summed up the evidence in the case this afternoon before the naval court of inquiry

Commander W. S. McGrann, U S. A., retired, who has represented the Edison interests, declared on the contrary that they could not be held at fault due to the accident.

Lieutenant Nimitz contended the storage batteries from which it had been asserted hydrogen gas and escaping prior to the explosion, was installed absolutely in accordance with the directions of its manufacturers as to ventilation system. He asserted that the instructions for the care and operation of the battery were incomplete in regard to ventilation.

SIX CHILDREN ARE HURT SLIDING

Six Suffer Broken Legs and Arms and Seven More Painfully Injured In Omaha Accident.

Omaha, Neb., Feb. 12.—Six youthful coasters suffered fractured arms and legs and seven more were shaken up badly and painfully bruised, last night, when a big bobsled, traveling down California street at express train speed, smashed into a telephone pole.

All members of the party are of prominent Omaha families.

The injured:

Ray Richardson, broken right leg and internal injuries.

Ben Lake, broken leg.

Eugene Oglebay, right leg broken

Warrent Best (son of County Commissioner Frank Best), torn ligament and sprains.

ALEXANDER LANDS ON SHIP BILL FOE

Representative of Chambers of Commerce Does Not Represent American People, He Says.

Washington, D. C, Feb. 12 —Hearings on the administration's new ship bill opened in the House commerce committee with a clash between Chairman Alexander and W. H. Douglas, of New York, chairman of the merchant marine committee of the United States chamber of commerce.

Douglas opposed government operation and quoted referendums of the chamber of favor of subsidies.

"I resent the proposition that you stand for the American people," declared Chairman Alexander hotly.

"Who are the members of your subcommittee that make reports on the sentiments of chambers opposed to this bill?"

Douglas mentioned Paul E. Bates, of Portland, Ore., as one.

"Well," responded Mr. Alexander, "I have some idea of the power that directed this report. I told the member of the Portland chamber last summer to make sure that no railroad man directed the writing of this report over another man's shoulders. Individual members told me their views never had been sought."

SWISS RESENT HUGE GERMAN BOND PLUNGE

Federal Insurance Fund Virtually All Invested In Teuton Securities.

Paris, Feb. 12.—A Geneva dispatch to the Journal says that public opinion in Switzerland is deeply moved by the revelation that responsible officials of the federal insurance directorate transferred all the federal insurance funds with the exception of 600,000 francs into German bonds and stocks since the war began. This discovery, the dispatch says, was made by the board of auditors of the federal council during the periodical examination of the insurance records.

The Swiss federal council in 1911 passed the federal insurance law for the purpose of which several million francs were appropriated.

The Swiss law alluded to was in two parts, the first providing for insurance against illness and the second for insurance against accident, which involved the establishment of an annual fund of 8,000,000 francs. Opposition was made to the second part of the measure, on the ground that so large an appropriation would endanger the national treasury and that it was a doubtful adventure for the state to undertake a form of business which had previously been regarded as the proper domain of private companies. Both parts of the law were finally adopted by 250,000 against 220,000 on the referendum vote by the Swiss people.

SHIP HITS MINE.

London, Feb., 11.—A Reuter dispatch from Rotterdam reports the arrival at The Hook of Holland of a pilot steamer carrying 10 men from the Norwegian steamship Vaarli, which struck a mine near Terschelling, a Dutch island in the North sea, and sank.

GIRL STUDENT FOUND DEAD; CAUSE MYSTERY

Poison Found In Body—Man's Tracks Also Discovered Near Scene of Crime.

Chicago, Feb. 11.—An autopsy performed late last night by the coroner's physician on the body of Miss Marion Frances Lambert, the 18-year-old high school student, which was found last night in a wooded section of Lake Forest, Ill., served to but deepen the mystery surrounding the death of the girl. The body was found by the girl's father.

A statement issued by the coroner today said that enough poison had been found in the girl's stomach to cause death. The nature of the poison has not been determined.

Detectives today continued their efforts to find the man who accompanied Miss Lambert into the woods. His footprints were found paralleling hers to the spot where the body was found From there the tracks led to the tracks of the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, where the trail was lost.

Police officers have been unable to find anything that might furnish a motive to support either murder or suicide theories.

WOMAN HELD FOR MURDER OF BABY

Father of Child Also Held—Mother Confesses In Sordid Story Involving Missouri Man.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 11.—Geneva fazel Scott, pretty young woman, is held on the charge that she was associated with a young man at Princeton, Mo., in the murder of her baby. The sheriff from Princeton arrived in Des Moines today to take the young woman to Princeton Upon hearing her story, he telephoned the authorities in that city to hold Edgar Bowers, said to be a well known young farmer in that vicinity.

Miss Scott was arrested at Fort Dodge Wednesday night and brought to Des Moines yesterday. When arrested she made a full confession.

Miss Scott tells a sad story. The baby, it is said, was born in Des Moines last September Two weeks later the girl went to the young man, whom she says was its father, and demanded that he support her and the infant. He gave her $50 for the child.

A few weeks ago the baby's corpse was found in a pond near Princeton, the authorities say. Miss Scott was a traveling saleswoman

FIRST VOLUNTEER OF CIVIL WAR IS DEAD

Col. J. R. King, of St. Paul, Noted Indian Fighter, Passes Away.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 12.—Funeral arrangements were completed today for Col. Josiah R. King, civil war veteran and Indian fighter, who died of heart trouble at his home late yesterday, 84 years of age. Burial will take place here tomorrow.

Minnesota historians assert King was the first to answer President Lincoln's call for volunteers for the civil war, enlisting promptly when he received information from a private dispatch sent to Minnesota by the state's governor, who was in the president's office when the call was signed.

RUSSIA WILL ISSUE BILLION DOLLAR LOAN

Petrograd, via London, Feb. 11.—Newspapers of this city report that the government has decided to issue in the near future a new interior loan of 2,000,000,000 rubles at 5 per cent under the same conditions as the preceding one.

Under normal exchange conditions the equivalent in American money of 2,000,000,000 rubles would be approximately $1,000,000,000. The preceding Russian loan issued last November was for 1,000,000,000 rubles. It was sold at 95, pays 5½ per cent and runs for 10 years.

MORGAN IN LONDON.

London, Feb. 11.—J. Pierpont Morgan arrived in London this morning by special train from Falmouth, where, last evening, he landed from the Holland-American line steamer Rotterdam, on which he had come from New York. He was met at the station here by Lord Sunliffe, governor of the Bank of England.

MAJOR NORMOYLE DIES.

Oswego, N. Y., Feb. 11.—Major James E. Normoyle, Third United States infantry, in command of Fort Ontario here, died suddenly today of blood poisoning

GARRISON QUITS CABINET AS PROTEST AGAINST ALL COMPROMISE WITH "PORK"

OPPOSES NATIONAL GUARD

Secretary of War Who Quit Cabinet

Lindley M. Garrison.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Secretary Garrison has resigned from the cabinet because President Wilson declined to insist without compromise upon the adoption of the continental army plan by congress The resignation was tendered and accepted yesterday and with Mr Garrison, the assistant secretary of war, Henry C Breckenridge, left the service of the government

Today the president finds himself personally in charge of the administration's plans for strengthening the army and working out a definite military policy He has not selected a successor to Mr Garrison and it is rewarded as probable that even after the new head of the war department is named, the president, who had made a careful study of the problem, will continue to handle the preparedness plans to a great extent himself.

Secretary Garrison's basic objection to the proposed national guard legislation is that he believes the military to be effective must be under the single control of the federal government. He holds that under the constitution, complete federalization of the guard is impossible and that if the states retain partial control, then the militia is under 48 separate authorities, plus the 49th, the federal government.

His Plan Not Last Word.

He holds that such a system is in "irreconcilable conflict" with efficiency. He does not regard the continental army plan as ideal by any means, but a step in the direction of breaking from the plans of state control of the country's reserve force.

He regards the national guard system as a "pork barrel" proposition in the broad sense, that in supporting it, as he sees it, members of the House and Senate are not really working for a strong and cohesive military force, but are playing for the political favor of the local national guard elements; in other words, are yielding to local and not national consideration.

The reasons for Secretary Garrison's resignation and its acceptance by the president are disclosed in lengthy correspondence made public between them.

Wilson Wouldn't Yield.

The correspondence revealed that while the secretary left the cabinet principally because the president would not "irrevocably" support the continental army plan, his opposition to the administration's program for setting a definite time for Filipino independence as outlined in Senator Clarke's amendment to the Philippine bill, was an important factor.

Secretary Garrison contended that only a federal continental army, instead of a reorganized national guard could be the main military dependence of the country, while the president contended that no one plan could be enforced on congress. It was upon these two contentions that the break between the president and his secretary of war came.

Assistant Secretary Breckenridge, who shared Secretary Garrison's views, resigned because of loyalty to his chief. His resignation was also accepted.

Major General Scott, chief of staff of the navy, automatically became secretary of war ad interim.

Successor Not Known.

There was considerable speculation here today over a possible successor to Secretary Garrison. Those talked of most prominently in that connection included Representative Sherley, of Kentucky, chairman of the House fortifications subcommittee; Secretary Lane, of the interior department, and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt of the navy department.

It is expected that the president will appoint a successor immediately.

Although Mr. Garrison first suggested that he leave the cabinet last month, Mr. Wilson did not formally accept his resignation until late yesterday afternoon when informed that Mr. Garrison had left for New York and that rumors of his resignation were current. The president then dictated the letter of acceptance and dispatched it immediately.

It was not until 8 o'clock last night that formal announcement of the Garrison and Breckinridge resignations was made at the White House.

Expressions of regret over the turn of affairs were general in administration circles. The president thinks highly of Mr. Garrison's ability and his name was seriously considered when the appointment of a successor to Justice Lamar on the supreme bench was under consideration

Not in Harmony With Bryan.

Mr. Garrison has been the warm friend of most of the other cabinet members, although he and former Secretary of State Bryan differed radically on many subjects.

When the president went into the middle west recently to speak on national defense, it was understood that he undertook the trip partially at the suggestion of Mr. Garrison. During the tour the president spoke at every meeting in favor of the Garrison army plan, but said that he was not particular about details as long as a reserve of approximately 500,000 trained men was secured. It was said that Mr. Wilson's failure to refuse any compromise on the subject in his speeches was the direct cause of Mr. Garrison's resignation.

Mr. Garrison's last day as a member of the cabinet almost passed without any outward evidence of the step he was contemplating. He was at his office early and throughout the morning busily occupied with routine affairs. After lunch, he dictated a speech which he had promised to deliver in the afternoon before the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce of the United States, in defense of his continental army plan.

It was not until he announced suddenly, late in the afternoon, that he was leaving the city and would not deliver the address that there was the slightest suspicion that anything unusual had happened

GARRISON WON'T FIGHT PRESIDENT

Will Not Emulate Bryan, He Says—Out of Politics For Good He Tells Interviewers.

New York, Feb. 12.—Lindley M. Garrison, former secretary of war, announced here today that he intended to retire "absolutely" from politics and public life. I said he would not discuss his resignation from any political angle.

Mr. Garrison intimated, however, that he might do "something" in the matter of giving support to the movement in favor of a continental army, the issue upon which his resignation hinged.

As to his future plans Mr. Garrison said he expected to resume the practice of law, but where and when he was not certain.

An intimation of his plans came in response to a question put by newspapermen as to whether he "would give his moral support to those who continue urging the policy of a continental army."

No Bryan Stuff For Him.

"I cannot answer that question," said the former secretary, "because it would infringe upon politics. I say this to you now so that later if I do decide to do something you will not say that I tried to deceive you.

"I will not discuss my resignation from the cabinet from any political angle whatever, either as regards the present situation, or the situation to be produced, or assumed to be produced. The facts will be disclosed to any one who will carefully read the correspondence between myself and the president. That correspondence cannot be misinterpreted by anyone.

"I intend to retire absolutely from politics and public life. Get it out of your heads that there was anything political in my action."

Mr. Garrison was asked by interviewers if he intended "to follow the example of Mr. Bryan and come out publicly against any of Mr. Wilson's policies."

"Absolutely not," was the reply.

Not After Governorship.

"Would you accept the nomination for governor of New Jersey?" was another question.

"I would not accept the nomination for governor of New Jersey if the certificate of election was handed to me on a silver platter," he said.

Mr. Garrison said that he had no knowledge of the intention of any other members of the cabinet to resign.

In respect to his own resignation, he said that he had consulted with no other cabinet member, although Assistant Secretary Breckenridge had been aware of his intention.

"I assumed," he said," if Mr. Breckenridge remained in the same state of mind, he would resign also."

SCHOONER IS BURNED; THREE OF CREW HURT

New York, Feb. 11.—The four masted schooner, John Bossert, of this port, was virtually destroyed by fire five miles at sea off the highlands of Navesink, N. J., early today. Captain Pressey and the crew of seven men were taken off the burning vessel by the pilot boat New York, and were brought ashore by the crew of the Seabright coast guard station. Three of the sailors were severely burned.

"THE WOLF" LOSES OUT.

New York, Feb. 11.—The United States circuit court of appeals denied today the motion of David Lamar, the so-called "Wolf of Wall street" to reinstate his appeal against his conviction of impersonating Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, in an effort to defraud J. P Morgan and company and the United States Steel corporation.

Eiko Buss,

WAITING

It seems to me I'm always waiting, for this or that or t'other thing; and that's why woe my soul is freighting —that's why I do not smile and sing.

I've waited years in railway stations, for trains that do not run on time; and at such times when observations were forceful, rather than sublime. How drearily the hours go dragging, when you are waiting for a train! The lazy minutes keep on lagging, and each one gives to you a pain. The jays and rubes, in restless pageant forever slam the depot doors, the weary, sad-eyed station agent, is answering ten thousand bores. You cannot sleep, there's such a milling, there's such a noise of sounding brass; and so you pace the platform, killing the sluggish minutes as they pass.

I've waited for my favorite barber, to use his lather and bay rum, and read "Spoon River" and "The Harbor" before he said my turn had come.

I've waited often for the waiter to bring my modest meal to me; the "liver-and" and boiled potater, the slice of pie and cup of tea. And I could see my whiskers turning to silver gray, before he brought the grub for which I had been yearning, with fever in my dome of thought. No doubt he searched o'er land and water, to get the 'tater and the tea; no doubt a steer he had to slaughter, to get that "liver-and" for me.

I've waited long for a remittance from one who owes me fifteen bones; he ought to send that little pittance, for which my hungry spirit groans. It surely is the proper caper to pay old debts like that, I think; but he's mislaid his pen and paper, or else he cannot find his ink. The men I owe are always writing, they jack me up each passing day, the words they use are often blighting, requesting me to call and pay.

I'm waiting, waiting, waiting always, for this or that or t'other thing; and that's why tears roll down my gallways, that's why I do not smile and sing.—By Walt Mason from Judge.

THEY DO SAY

That bookishness is excused in a school teacher as part of her trade, but there are a lot of people who think bookishness is a polite name for shirtlessness.

That some women when they see a man, have a look in their faces indicating the wrongs of their sex for a good many years back.

That when love spoils, it is about the worst mess imaginable.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray, streaked and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just an application or two, of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the tea; you can get from any drug store a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," ready to use. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color, thickness and lustre of your hair and remove dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and lustrous, glossy, lustrous and abundant.

HEAVY MEAT EATERS HAVE SLOW KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have bladder trouble—Take glass of Salts.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

ROSES

Once, walking down a shady street,
Sweet Cecily I chanced to meet.
A knot of crimson roses pressed
Just where the lace crossed on her breast.
A charming hat she wore, a-tilt,
With other roses on it spilt.

Red roses, tell me true, I prayed,
Does she love me, this little maid?
Mutely they drooped, nor seemed to hear;
When Cupid whispered in my ear,
And shyly pointed to her cheek,
And there I found a rose could speak!

Their Foolishness

"Goody, goody, goody!" said the small boy flattening his nose against the window. "Snow! Now I can get out my sled!"

"Kin I go, too?" anxiously begged the small girl. "And kin I go skating when you go, Buddy?"

"Aw, you're only a girl, Susie," reminded the small boy unkindly. "But I'll see!"

"H'm!" said the small boy's father. "The kids don't have the winters we had when I was a boy!"

"I should say the didn't!" fervently agreed the father of the small girl. "Wow!"

"It's a shame too," pursued Buddy's father, lighting another cigar. "The mild weather lessens the joys of childhood, and all that! I remember distinctly the huge falls of snow we used to have, and how I'd trudge along the newly shoveled off sidewalk with the snowbanks towering way above my head on either side."

"Uh-huh," interrupted Susie's parent. "Do you know what I can remember most clearly is helping shovel off these selfsame walks! 'Oscar,' my dad would say as he reached for his woolen muffler, 'put on your high overshoes and warm clothes and come on out! There are 397 miles of walks and paths to be cleared off!' I believe he gave the figure as something slightly lower, but according to my recollection my estimate is nearer correct! Snow is peculiar stuff. The first shovelful seems full of feathers and the one hundredth is loaded with pig iron."

"Oh, it wasn't as bad as all that!" protested Buddy's father. "I remember playing that we were going swimming and seeing who could dive farthest thru the bigest snow bank. It was great."

"Oh, yes," said Susie's papa, "I remember that distinctly. I was in the crowd on that occasion, and the snowbank in question was at the bottom of the hill from our place. The incident is firmly implanted in my memory because I got such an all fired licking when I reached home and you got another! Don't say you've forgotten it! My legs were soaked to my hips, there was a plaster of snow across my shrinking chest inside my apparel, and snow in my ears, nose and hair. My fond mother, as she disrobed me, began with feminine exclamations of surprise, which rapidly degenerated into those of alarm and wrath, her emotions culminating as I have above stated. She said she had to do something to start my circulation and ward off pneumonia as well as teach me better, and a licking was the only thing she could think of that filled all requirements of the bill. At 12, she stated, I should have known better!"

"Oh, well," said Buddy's father, in some confusion. "I do remember that now! They were rather severe on us, I think—just boyish high spirits! But the joy of waking to find a world all white and sparkling——"

"Oooogy, ooogy!" shuddered Susie's papa. "Shall I ever forget, if I live to be a hundred the sensation of crawling out of bed on a morning like that? With no steam heat invented and the base burner in the sifting room below gone out in the night? Or the wholesome pleasure of smashing the ice in the water pitcher and incidentally cracking the pitcher, when it came to washing my face? Honest, how many times those winter mornings did you go unwashed? I'd plow thru hip high snow to school, and not know for hours after I got there whether I had any toes or not!"

"It was wholesome and healthy for us!" declared Buddy's father. "I don't see why you are such a kill joy! I'd be glad if my son could have the pleasure of those good old fashioned winters, and it would do Susie good too, to be hardened and——"

"Good heavens, what's the trouble?" both fathers asked in chorus as their offspring tumbled yelling into the room.

"Buddy, he—he put snow d-down my neck!" chattered Susie. "And w-w-washed my f-face in snow, he did!"

"Aw, she tumbled me in a snowbank first and got me all covered and——"

"Go upstairs this minute!" roared Buddy's parent. "And get on dry clothes—don't you know any better than to give little girls pneumonia by putting snow on them? I'll attend to you later!"

"I'll take Susie home at once!" said her alarmed parent. "If she should get a chill—and you'll be well punished for what you did to Buddy!"

The two parents stared helpless at each other. "You'd think children would have at least a scrap of sense," said Buddy's father. "The idea of their acting so!"

"I don't see where they get their foolishness!" commented Susie's papa. "We never acted that way when we were boys!"

Most Unfortunate.

An old darky appealing to a lady for aid told her that by the Dayton flood he had lost everything he had in the world, including his wife and six children.

"Why," said the lady. "I have seen you before and "I have helped you. Were you not the colored man who told me you had lost your wife and six children by the sinking of the Titanic?"

"Yeth, ma'am," replied the darky, "dat was me. Most unfort'nit man dat ever was. Can't keep a fam'ly nohow."

FIND THE MORAL.

A dog, so the Modern Fable goes, carrying a large, juicy bone in his mouth, was walking along a narrow plank which spanned a brooklet. Happening to glance downward, the canine was surprised to see his luncheon reflected in the clear waters.

"Well, well," he thought to himself, cross-eyeing the real bone; "this is certainly food for reflection!"

Saying which, he proceeded to bore his friends for the next three weeks with his brilliant sally.

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomaine-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from any druggist or storekeeper, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels.—Adv.

Times Change.

"What? You need new clothes again? When I was a boy I wasn't ashamed to wear garments that were patched."

"Yes, dad, but you know you didn't associate with such refined people as I do."

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH BOWELS

No sick headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv.

POLLY'S PRISONER.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was a bright spring day. The beautiful valley of Virginia lay a carpet of soft green, down which the silver thread of the river ran, and far over toward the east the blue mountains lifted in a purple haze.

But Polly was not thinking a bit about these things. She was worrying about her party, for her 10th birthday would be tomorrow and there was not a sweet thing in the house. Polly's father and brother were in the army, the farm was all torn up, the fences burned to keep warm, most of the cattle used by the soldiers, and things looked awfully blue to this little confederate girl just budding into life in the midst of the desolation of war.

Polly sat on the stump of an old tree and cried at the gloomy prospect. Then she caught sight of a horse coming down the road, its galloping feet beating a tattoo swiftly on the hard pike. The horse was specked with foam and the soldier wore a blue uniform.

"Goodness," exclaimed Polly, running up on the porch and hiding behind a big chair, "it is a Yankee!

When the rider got in front of the house, he leaped from his horse, gave it a blow that sent it flying down the road, then he ran up on the porch, through the front door and burst into a small study, which had only one door. In a few minutes five men in gray came by the house and kept on at a gallop, evidently thinking they were chasing the union soldier Another minute and they had vanished beyond the hill.

Now it happened that this afternoon Polly was the only soul on the farm. And here she was alone with that dreadful Yankee

Like a flash she ran into the hall and turned the key, which was on the outside of the study door.

"I have got you now, Mr. Yankee man," Polly piped in shrill tones through the closed door The young soldier came to the door, tried to open it, shook, kicked and swore gently under his breath

"Say, little girl, you let me out," he commanded

"Oh, no," returned Polly "You are a bad Yankee man, and my papa is coming to get you. If it hadn't been for you Yankees, I could have had my birthday party"

The man laughed "Well, aren't you going to have one, anyway?" he demanded, talking through the door

"Of course not—we haven't anything sweet in the house," said Polly, sadly. "Not a raisin, or candy, or a bit of preserves. I did want some candles, too, awfully—10 of them, to stick around a cake."

"Well, kid, I'll tell you what I will do," said the man seriously. "You let me out and I will ride back to General Sheridan's camp tonight and see that you have goodies sent you in time for your party"

"Oh, will you? Honest Injun, really, truly?" cried Polly in delight, never doubting that the man would keep his word 'Well, be sure to bring them yourself" She unlocked the door, and in a moment the man had sprung out and vanished down the road.

The next day, Polly spent all the morning watching the road, but not a sign of anyone came in sight. But, as she sat at dinner, there was the clatter of hoofs, jingling of chains, and the creaking of wagon wheels out in the yard Polly flew to the door

There at the front gate was a big sutler's wagon, drawn by two stout mules, and perched on the seat was Polly's beaming Yankee man In a trice he leaped down and handed out three big boxes Polly did not give him a second glance, but raised the lids at once Then she clapped her hands with delight, for there in the first box was a big frosted cake, with 10 candles stuck in its sides in the other box were oranges and bananas, and in the third candy and raisins, sugar, coffee and tea.

"Oh, you dear, sweet Yankee man!" cried Polly with tears of joy

"I told the general about your freeing me," said the young soldier, and he gave me a flag of truce and these things to come over here."

Stuffed In Germany.

From Collier's Weekly.

An American newspaper man named Gustav C Roeder has been scouting through Kaiserdom for the New York World and his interviews with eminent personages have been numerous. He was especially interested in Germany's economic problem, and his Teutonic informers never dropped a stitch They told him that German industry is free of debt; that the food shortage is a mere corrective of overeating, and as war triumphs of German technical resourcefulness described the new process of extracting nitrogen from the air (which was in operation in Norway a few years before the war) and the substitute rubber tires for autos (some of our motor trucks have had 'em for some time) They told him further how the Germans hate and detest the United States, and are planning to trade with us after the war Mr Roeder swallowed and printed everything just as Prof George B. McClellan of Princeton university acted as medium for a lot of their official misinformation about Belgium last summer Teutonic efficiency is versatile and stuffs a sausage, a professor or a journalist with equal neatness and dispatch.

The Supreme In Nerve.

"What has become of the candidate who used to have his photo taken beside a load of hay?"

"He may be a little out of date. However no candidate has as yet mustered up the nerve to have his photo taken beside a stock ticker"

The Loom of Time.

"Man's life is laid in the loom of time
To a pattern he does not see."
—Henry Ward Beecher.

While the weaver works and the shuttles fly
Till the dawn of eternity,
Some shuttles are filled with silver thread,
And some with threads of gold,
While often but the darker hue
Is all that they may hold.
But the weaver watches with skillful eye
Each shuttle fly to and fro,
And sees the pattern so deftly wrought
As the loom moves sure and slow.
God surely planned the pattern—
Each thread the dark and fair,
Is chosen by His master skill
And placed in the web with care.
He, only, knows its beauty,
And guides the shuttles which hold.
The threads so unattractive
As well as the threads of gold.
Not till each loom is silent
And the shuttles cease to fly,
Shall God enroll the pattern,
And explain the reason why
The dark threads were as needful
In the weaver skillful hand
As the threads of gold and silver
For the pattern which he planned

DISCOVERS GOVERNOR OF HUMAN MACHINE

Little Adrenals, Capping Kidneys, Regulate Red Corpuscles in Blood.

From the Atlanta Georgian.

That all animal life would perish after emotional excitement but for the little organs on top of the kidneys is the conclusion or Dr Paul D. Lampson. These rush millions or red corpuscles to the rescue, he declared, after a series of wonderful experiments at the Johns Hopkins university Dr. Lampson, of the pharmacological laboratory, announced his discoveries to the National Academy of Science, Washington.

Dr. Lampson's experiments comprised removing one internal organ after another from animals under the influence of ether. The removal of none or all all of them affected the increase of red corpuscles, after the injection of epinephrin, until he got to the liver He thus demonstrated that the liver is the source of the red cells or corpuscles in the blood.

Epinephrin, as used by Dr. Lampson, was taken from sheep glands. It is present in the human body, and ether does not affect it, making it the logical substance for the experiments here described

He found that the governor which controls the increase of the red cells, same as a governor regulates a steam engine, is the adrenals.

The adrenals are small bodies capping the kidneys in man and other vertebrates. In man they are one or two inches long, less in width and about one-fourth of an inch thick, and have little vessels and nerves.

As their function was formerly unknown, his discovery of their use as the guardian and savior of animal life from its own paroxysms of emotions and even temporary brainstorms and insanity is one of the most important of modern times. He concludes

"It has been found that the red count is under nervous control, as shown by the increase in the number of red corpuscles after stimulation of the vago-sympathetic trunks, after asphyxia of the brain alone, and after emotional excitement, such as fear, rage, etc.

"It was also shown that the adrenals play a part in this mechanism, as epinephrin has been proved to be one of the most powerful means of increasing the number of red cells, and as the chief physiological stimuli which produce the increase, namely, asphyxia, exercise, fear, rage, etc., all cause a relax stimulation of the adrenals, and an increased epinephrin output

"Removal of the adrenals was found to exclude the increase in the asphyxia, fear and rage, and after the injection of pituitrin (extract from mucous glands), although these same animals responded to the injection of epinphrin by the usual increase in number of red cells. Furthermore, removal of the adrenals is followed after several hours by a complete loss of control of the red count."

TRACHOMA.

Trachoma is a disease of the eyelids that is infectious. That means that the watery discharges from the afflicted is capable of producing the disease in the eyes of those who are well.

As the disease advances the lids become granulated It is sometimes referred to as granulated or granular lids. It is no new disease, as it was known in ancient times.

"Trachoma—A Menace to America," is the striking title of bulletin No 6 of the national committee for the prevention of blindness The article is prepared by the field secretary of the committee, Gordon L. Berry

That trachoma is a menace to America will strike even physicians with startling force The report states that there are 33,000 cases of the disease in the state of Kentucky alone, chiefly in the mountain region of the eastern port of the state. Also out of the 323,000 Indians in the country, nearly 65,000 are afflicted At this rate one in five of all the Indians have the disease The report also states that the disease is prevalent in the mountains of Virginia and West Virginia, in southern Illinois, Arkansas, in the mountains of Missouri, and along the Atlantic seaboard

The report quotes a statement from one of the most prominent New York ophthalmologists, who said, "I don't believe there is any part of the country where trachoma cannot be found"

Dr. A. T. McCormick, secretary of the Kentucky state board of health, is quoted as saying: "Trachoma presents a problem more largely economic than any other in the whole field of preventive medicine. No one ties with the disease. Half of those that have it are eventually made blind The economic usefulness of every patient is greatly decreased. It would be conservative to say that the average earning capacity of persons having trachoma is less than one-fourth of the average earning capacity of well individuals. It is slowly but surely contagious, and spreads through families, schools, institutions, or communities when an initial case is introduced"

The disease is essentually chronic, and may last a lifetime. It is difficult and most discouraging to treat. In the Ophthalmic Record for October, 1915, Dr. Frank Allport, while recognizing the difficulty, and with the statement that he has no new process of treatment, states flatly, "I believe that this disease can be cured in a large majority of cases."

The treatment he outlines is such as an oculist must apply under consistent servation for three months. Such treatment cannot be carried out successfully in sparsely settled places. The hope of the future lies in efforts to prevent trachoma, and this lies largely in the education of all the people of the country concerning the disease and its infectious nature. Every afflicted family should be sought out and instructed in methods of destroying the infection before it can affect others.

The Story of the Lazy Servant

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Once there was a lazy servant who wished she was rich.

So a fairy appeared and gave her a lamp.

"Rub that lamp," explained the fairy, "and you can have what you want."

But the lazy servant was not impressed.

"It's just a scheme to get the brasswork polished," she yawned.

And so her fortunes remained as they were.

Men Old Fogies at 25.

An editorial in the Woman's Home Companion quotes the late William James, the psychologist, as saying:

"'Most men are old fogies at 25.' At that age they have acquired a few hard and fast opinions, a working knowledge of some job sufficient to support them, and a routine of existence which neither varies nor expands until they die."

HOW ASSOCIATED PRESS COMBS WORLD FOR NEWS

(From Philadelphia Ledger.)

One dollar a word was paid to have the speech in the reichstag of Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg flashed to this country. The same amount was paid for the countless punctuations which appeared in the speech.

An audience composed of bankers, merchants, clubmen, society women, clerks, stenographers and laborers heard Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, quote various prices as to what it costs to have the news flashed to this country from different regions of the world.

Mr. Stone spoke at the annual meeting of the Franklin Institute. His lecture was on "Supplying the World With News."

Seated in one of the back rows was a white bearded old man. Both pockets of his fur lined overcoat were filled with newspapers. Some of the pages which were visible contained the latest war dispatches. When he heard Mr Stone tell what it cost to have Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech cabled to lower Broadway in New York, where the main offices of the Associated Press are located, he leaned over to a man who was sitting beside him and whispered.

"And I paid only a few pennies to read the speech

Mr Stone gave a historical sketch of the Associated Press. He described the methods which were adopted in gathering the news of the Russo-Japanese war, the Martinique earthquake disaster and the death of Pope Leo XIII in Rome. The annual budget of the Associated Press is more than $3,000,000, according to Mr Stone Touching upon the methods of getting the news in countries which are located thousands of miles away, Mr. Stone gave several illustrations. He described a wreck, a fire and other disasters interesting from an international viewpoint.

"Now, assume that a fire has broken out in Benares, the second city of the Hindus, on the banks of the Ganges," said Mr. Stone, "and 400 or 1,000 persons have lost their lives. Not far away, at Allahabad or Calcutta, is a daily paper having a correspondent at Benares, who reports the disaster fully Some one on his paper sends the story, or so much of it as is of general rather than of local interest, to the agent of the Reuter Company at Calcutta, Bombay or Madras. And thence it is cabled to London, Hongkong, Sydney and Tokio. At each of these places there are Associated Press men, one of whom picks it and forwards it to New York.

Combs the World for News.

"If the thing happens in Zanzibar the story goes either to Cairo or to Cape Town, and by the same process finds its way to London and on to use in this country. Thus the wide world is combed for news, which in an incredibly short time is delivered and printed everywhere.

"When Pope Leo XIII died in Rome the fact was announced by an Associated Press telegram in the columns of a San Francisco paper in nine minutes from the instant when he breathed his last. And this message was repeated back to London, Paris and Rome and gave those cities the first information of the event.

"When Port Arthur was taken by the Japanese in 1894 it came to us in New York in 50 minutes, although it passed through 27 relay offices. Few of the operators transmitting it knew what the dispatch meant. But they understood the Latin letters and sent it on from station to station letter by letter.

"When Peary came back from his great discovery in the Arctic sea, he reached Winter Harbor, on the coast of Labrador, and from there sent me a wireless message that he had nailed the stars and stripes to the north pole. This went to Sydney on Cape Breton Island, and was forwarded thence by cable and telegraph to New York.

Interesting Domestic Service.

"For its domestic service other methods are adopted. The territory covered includes the United States proper, Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, the Islands of the Caribbean sea, Mexico, the Central American states and, by an exchange arrangement with the Canadian Press, Ltd., the British possessions on this continent.

"The organization is, as you have been told, co-operative in its character. As a condition of membership each one belonging agrees to furnish to his fellow members, either directly or through the association and to them exclusively, the news of his vicinage, as gathered by him for his own paper. This constitutes the large fountain from which our American news supply is drawn. But, as in the case of the foreign official agencies, if there be danger that an individual member is biased, or if the matter be one of high importance, we use our own trained and salaried staff men to do the reporting. For this purpose as well as for administrative work, we have a bureau in every leading city."

When the European war broke out, Mr. Stone said, all of the processes of civilization seemed to go down in an hour. The international relations for the exchange of news were instantly dislocated.

"However," Mr. Stone added, "we were able to impress the governments abroad with the value of an impartial and unpurchasable news service, as opposed to the venal type of journalism which was too common on the European continent.

SUCCESS IN FARMING DEPENDS ON THE MAN

From the Breeders' Gazette.

"Nine tenths of the success in farming comes from the man, possibly one-tenth comes from the land."

This is the confident assertion made the other day by a landlord who has watched the work of his 50 tenants for 40 years. One or another of the farms was cited which yielded only a meager rental in the hands of one tenant and had given satisfactory returns when tenants were changed Some other farms that had been profitable dropped to small returns when the best tenants bought farms of their own and moved away

One of the best and blackest farms on the estate was a dreary wilderness of weeds while one tenant made excuses year after year for crop failures. During the same year other farms of poorer land paid well and so did this farm pay handsomely after the inefficient tenant moved off and an enterprising man took up the task of growing crops instead of weeds.

The accounts of these 50 farms for 40 years are an instructive revelation of man's importance on the farm. They show how readily any man can correct his own system of management if he keeps accounts and practices what they teach him The man who has difficulty in making ends meet on a level black corn belt farm should be able to learn something from his neighbor a few miles away putting money in the bank from sand ridges or clay knolls.

Is it any wonder that almost anywhere one goes he will find some local farmers who assert that right there is the best place in the world to make money? One can also find some of the neighbors dissatisfied and bent on moving away The man has more to do with it than business conditions or the land.

Largest Statue in the World.

From the Wide World Magazine.

The largest monument of the human form existing in the east today, if not in the world, is the great reclining statue of Buddha, near Pegu, in Burma, around which the government has now erected a building with lattice steel pillars to protect it from the elements. This colossus was brought to light during the construction of the railway that runs northeast from Rangoon to Mandalay. While the permanent way was being banked up to protect the lines from occasional floods, the engineer in charge required for the purpose of his work a harder ballast than the alluvial deposit over which the line was running could give him. Less than a mile away was a tree-clad mount, and here it was thought, suitable material might be found The task of clearing away some of the trees took but an hour or so, and then shafts were sunk to find the needed stone Before the diggers had gone down more than a yard they struck an enormous and fairly preserved figure of Gautama. In actual length the statue is 180 feet, and 50 feet high at the shoulder The figure and its pedestal are of brick with plaster. Since its discovery the plaster has been renewed and painted over, the box at the head and the finger nails gilded, and the head dress decorated with glass jewels. The statue is thought to be about 500 years old, but no one knows its history, no reference whatever being made to it in Burmese legends or traditions.

The Local Farm Show.

From the Country Gentlemen.

In an Iowa town, a few years ago, the men and boys were bragging about their colts. A wide difference of opinion existed among the sidewalk judges. The hat was passed, a few dollars raised for premiums, and a neighborhood colt show was held. Many considered it a joke, and all sorts of colts were brought for exhibition. But a young fellow from the agricultural college did the judging, and he explained his reasons for commending or condemning so clearly, point by point, that everybody was keenly interested.

The next year the show was repeated, with a bigger crowd, fewer colts and better animals. Now the colt show is an important event, with classes for mule colts, teams and jacks, and the whole tone of breeding has been elevated with better sires.

Another town in Iowa, with maybe 500 population, is known as "the little town with the big horse show," because it has developed neighborhood resources in the same way.

The average farmer is skillful in using his eyes, but very often he lacks things upon which to use them—things like good standards in crops and live stock, for example. He can see what the neighbors have, and compare with that, and congratulate himself on standing up toward the head of the home procession. But he does not see the high standards assembled at great national shows, and so does not know where he stands in the bigger procession

County agents are beginning to realize that the mass of farmers can not visit the large shows, and, to overcome the handicap, local shows of all kinds are being organized, from corn and canning contests for boys and girls to neighborhood live stock shows.

The local show may seem like a poor affair when it starts, but there is a dynamic interest in it that soon leads to improvement. The start is made by bringing out what happens to be in the neighborhood, and growth begins when the best standards are applied, with the reasons how and why. And that works surely, through human nature, for good breeding and planting.

WHAT COURTSHIP CONSISTS OF.

(Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Who love would seek
Let him seldom speak,
For in love's domain
Silence must reign
Or it brings the heart
Smart and pain."

In this morning's budget of letters, I find one from a school girl named Emily. It amuses me vastly. She writes: "I have about finished with school. When I go home for the holidays, I am to return no more to books and learning. I was never allowed to have company—young girls and young fellows. That is to be changed now, I am to invite whom I please to call. Among all of the young gentlemen, no doubt I will find a beau. If there's courting to go on, will you please tell me what it consists of?"

The very frankness of the letter almost takes my breath away. I have not the least doubt as to the girl's sincerity. There are probably many other girls who are puzzling their pretty heads over the same thought.

If all courtships were alike, the answer could be summed up in a few words. But it has as many variations as there are men of different minds and moods. There are no two that tally exactly.

The average courtship begins somewhat in this way: A young man's eyes rest upon a girl whose sweetness and modesty attract him. He manages to secure an introduction. His next move is to be invited to call. If the impression which he has made upon the girl is favorable, she mentions him to her folks. Anticipating that he might prove to be a suitor, they casually mention that if she finds him interesting they have no objection to her inviting him to call, a permission which she takes advantage of the next time she meets him.

His first call is not a matter of much mention. Her family help entertain him. This makes him feel at home. If he cares for the girl he comes repeatedly under these conditions. More often than not, he is invited to dine. When he gets to calling regularly, that leads the old folks tacitly to understand that the daughter is the magnet which brings him there.

He invites her now and then to places of amusement, usually asking some one of her family to accompany them. The mother cleverly gives them a moment or two at the gate while she is fumbling with the key at the hall door. The man in love is quick to take advantage of such a moment. He clasps the girl's hand, tells her how pleasant he has found the evening, expressing the hope that she has found it quite as enjoyable.

Many such stolen moments of bliss set the love bark afloat. When he realizes he has met the one girl in all the world for him, he asks permission to woo and win her of her parents, being assured the girl will not say him nay. Then follow blissful days together, in which they plan for their future. There's a good bye kiss at the door, loving words whispered and answered back again, the joy of greeting perfect contentment in each other's presence. Both eager, set a date for the wedding. This is ideal courtship.

Why Go To Church?

From the Christian Herald.

Pastors and church workers often express surprise that people do not come to church. They mourn and wonder and ask one another, "Why do they not come?" It might help them solve their riddle to put the question the other way about: "Why should they come?" What is there in the church that will draw a crowd of people from the comforts of their homes or the pleasures and freedom of the open air? There has got to be a positive power, a definite attraction, something real and fascinating and magnetic, to pull the people into the church.

WHEN KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE GLASS OF SALTS

Eat Less Meat If Kidneys Hurt or Have Backache or Bladder Misery —Meat Forms Uric Acid.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain out part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Adv

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz Bay Rum, small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv

Too Many Such "Customers"

Montague Glass, the creator of Abie Kabibble and Perlmutter, says an acquaintance of his, a clothing manufacturer on the East side of New York, received a call from a city salesman representing a notions, trimmings and button house. The visitor began to spread out his samples.

"Put 'em up! Put 'em up!" said the manufacturer in a tired business man tone. "I wouldn't care to look at nothing what you got."

"But, Mr. Cohen—"

"'S 'nough! I won't look. Please go away!"

The salesman gazed at him admiringly.

"Mr. Cohen," he said, "I only want one thing—I wish I had only fifty customers like you."

"I told you I didn't wish to see anything what you got."

"Sure you did; and that's why I say I wish I had only fifty customers like you. Instead, I got two hundred."—Saturday Evening Post.

Johann, a soldier in a Bavarian Landwehr regiment, seemed to have something on his mind. Finally he spoke up. "If I only knew what sort of humor the captain was in," he said, "I would ask him for a furlough."

"Well," remarked Fritz, "there's one thing about it. If you go to him you'll at least he will not eat you. This is one of the days when nobody is allowed to have meat."

A GOOD CHANGE.

A Change of Food Works Wonders

Wrong food and drink cause a lot of trouble in this world. To change at first aid when a person is ill, particularly from stomach and nervous troubles. As an illustration: A lady in Mo. was brought around to health again by leaving off coffee and other articles of food that did not agree with her.

She says:

"For a number of years I suffered with stomach and bowel trouble which kept getting worse until I was sick most of the time. About four years ago I left off coffee and began using Postum. My stomach and bowels improved right along, but I was reduced in flesh and so nervous that the least thing would overcome me.

"Then I changed my food and began using Grape-Nuts in addition to Postum. I lived on these two foods pally for about four months. Day by day I gained in flesh and strength until the nervous trouble had disappeared. I feel that I owe my health to Postum and Grape-Nuts.

"Husband was troubled, for a time, with occasional cramps, and slept badly. Finally I prevailed on him to leave off coffee and use Postum. After he tried Postum for a few days he found that he could sleep and that his cramps disappeared. He never went back to coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum—sold by Grocers.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XVI—(Continued.)

"He was very excited and spoke to Mr. Swain in a most violent manner. Mr. Swain attempted to take me away from him, not knowing, at first, who it was had seized me; but I pushed him back and led my father away toward the house."

"Did Mr. Swain touch your father?"

"No; I was between them all the time. I was determined that they should not touch each other. I was afraid, if they came together, that something terrible would happen."

Goldberger glanced at me.

"Something terrible to your father?" he asked.

"Oh, no," she answered, quickly. Mr. Swain would not have harmed my father, but father did not know what he was doing, and might have harmed Mr. Swain."

It was my turn to look at Goldberger.

"After you left the arbor," I asked, "did you see Mr. Swain again?"

"No, I did not see him again."

"You went straight to the house?"

"Yes; father was still very violent. He had forbidden me to see Mr. Swain or to write to him. He had taken a violent dislike to him."

"Do you know why?"

"Yes," and she flushed a little, but went on bravely. "He believed that Mr. Swain wished to marry me."

"As, in fact, he did," I commented.

"Yes; or at least he did before his financial troubles came. After that he wished to give me up."

"But you refused to be given up?"

"Yes," she said, and looked at me with eyes beautifully radia t. "I refused to be given up."

I felt that I was rushing in where angels would hesitate to enter, and beat a hasty retreat.

"Was your father always opposed to your marriage?" I asked.

"No; he has wanted me to wait until I was of age; but he never absolutely forbade it until a few months ago. It was at the time he first tried to persuade me to become a convert to Hinduism."

"What occurred after you and your father reached the house?"

"Father was very angry and demanded that I promise never to see Mr. Swain again. When I refused to promise, he sent me to my room, forbidding me to leave it without his permission. I came up at once, more than ever convinced that father needed medical attention. I was very nervous and over wrought, and I sat down by the window to control myself before going to bed. And then, suddenly, I remembered something the yogi had told me—that father was not strong, and that a fit of anger might be very serious. I knew the servants had gone to bed, and that he must be downstairs alone, since I had heard no one come up."

"You had heard no one in the hall at all?" I asked

"No, I had heard no one. But I remember, as I started down the stairs, a curious feeling of dread seized me. It was so strong that I stood for some moments on the top step before I could muster courage to go down. At last I did go down and—and found my father."

She stopped, her hands over her eyes, as though to shut away the remembrance of that dreadful night.

"Have you strength to tell me just what happened, Miss Vaughan?" I asked gently.

She controlled herself with an effort and took her hands from her face.

"Yes," she said, "I can tell you. I remember that I stood for a moment at the door, looking about the room, for at the first glance I thought there was no one there. I thought, for an instant, that father had gone into the grounds, for the curtain at the other door was trembling a little, as though some one had just passed."

"Ah," I said, and looked at Goldberger.

"It might have been merely the breeze, might it not?" he asked.

"I suppose so. The next instant I saw my father huddled forward in his chair. I was sure he had had a seizure of some sort; I ran to him and raised his head. * "

"I do not remember anything more," she added, in a whisper.

For a moment we all sat silent. The only portion of her evidence which could in any way help Swain was her discovery of the swaying curtain, and even that, as Goldberger had pointed out, might easily mean nothing.

"Miss Vaughan," I said at last, "how long a time elapsed from the moment you left your father in the library until you found him?"

"I don't know. Perhaps 15 minutes."

"Was he quite dead when you found him?"

"Yes, I—I think so."

"Then," I said to Goldberger, "the murder must have been committed very soon after Miss Vaughan came upstairs."

"Yes," agreed Goldberger, in a low tone, "and by somebody who came in from the grounds, since she met no one in the hall and heard no one."

Miss Vaughan leaned toward him, her hands clasping and unclasping.

"Do you know who it was?" she gasped. "Have you found out who it was?"

"We suspect who it was," answered Goldberger gravely.

"Tell me," she began,

"Wait a minute, Miss Vaughan," I broke in. "Tell me, first—did you hear anyone following you across the garden?"

"Yes," she answered thoughtfully; "once or twice I fancied that someone was following us. It seemed to me I heard a step, but when I looked back I saw no one."

"Did that fact make you uneasy?"

"No," she said, with a little smile. "I thought it was Mr. Swain."

I saw Goldberger's sudden movement. I myself could not repress a little shudder.

"You thought that would be the natural thing for Mr. Swain to do, did you not?" the coroner inquired.

"Yes—I thought he might wish to see me safe." Then she stopped, leaning forward in her chair and staring first at Goldberger and then at me. "What is it?" she whispered, her hands against her heart. "Oh, what is it? You don't mean—you can't mean—oh, tell me! It isn't Fred you suspect! It can't be Fred!"

It was Dr. Hinman who laid a gentle and quieting hand upon her shoulder and it was his grave voice which answered her

"Yes," he said, "there are some things which seem to implicate Mr. Swain, but both Mr. Lester and I are certain he isn't guilty. We're going to prove it!"

She looked up at him with a grateful smile.

"Thank you!" she gasped. "I—wait a moment—I was silly to give way so. Of course you will prove it! It's absurd!" And then she stopped and looked at Goldberger. "Do you believe it?" she demanded.

Goldberger flushed a little under her gaze.

"I don't know what to believe, Miss Vaughan," he said. "I'm searching for the truth."

"So are we all," I said. "I am counsel for Mr. Swain, Miss Vaughan, and I have come to you, hoping that your story would help to clear him."

"Oh, I wish it might!" she cried.

"You know Mr Swain cut his wrist as he came over the wall that night?"

"Yes, he told me. He did'nt know it was bleeding, at first; then he felt the blood on his hand, and I wrapped his wrist in my handkerchief."

"Was it this handkerchief?" asked Goldberger, and took from his pocket the blood stained square and handed it to her.

She took it with a little shiver, looked at it, and passed it back to him.

"Yes," she said, "that is it."

Then she sat upright, her clenched hands against her breast, staring at us with starting eyes.

"I remember now!" she gasped. "I remember now!" I saw it—a blotch of red—lying on the floor beside my father's chair! How did it get there, Mr. Lester? Had he been there? Did he follow us?" She stopped again, as she saw the look in Goldberg's eyes, and then the look in mine. With a long, indrawn breath of horror, she cowered back into the chair, shaking from head to foot. 'Oh, what have I done!" She moaned. "What have I done!"

There could be no question as to what she had done, I told myself, bitterly: she had added another link to the chain of evidence about her lover I could see the same thought in the sardonic gaze which Goldberger turned upon me, but before either of us could say a word, the doctor, with a peremptory gesture, had driven us from the room.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE VERDICT.

Goldberger paused at the stair head and looked at me, an ironical light in his eyes. I knew he suspected that Miss Vaughan's story of the handkerchief was no great surprise to me.

"Well," he asked, "will you wish to put her on the stand?"

I shook my head and started down the stairs, for I was far from desiring an argument just then, but he stopped me, with a hand upon the sleeve.

"You realize, Mr. Lester," he said, more seriously, "that it is plainly my duty to cause Swain's arrest?"

"Yes," I assented. "I realize that. Under the circumstances, you can do nothing else."

He nodded, and we went downstairs together. I saw Swain's eager eyes upon us as we came out upon the lawn, and his lips were at my ear the instant I had taken my seat.

"Well?" he whispered.

"She cannot help you," I said. I did not think it necessary to say how deeply she would hurt him when her testimony was called for in open court, as, of course, it would be.

"And you won't put her on the stand?"

"No," I answered, and he sank back with a sigh of relief. Then something in my face seemed to catch his eye, for he leaned forward again. "You don't mean that she believes I did it?" he demanded hoarsely.

"Oh, no." I hastened to assure him, "she says such an accusation is absurd; she was greatly overcome when she learned that you were even suspected; she said. . . ."

But the coroner rapped for order.

"Have you any other evidence to introduce, Mr. Lester?" he asked.

"No, your honor," I answered, and I saw the cloud of disappointment that fell upon the faces of reporters and photographers. To have been able to feature Miss Vaughan would have meant an extra column. I could also see, from the expression on the faces of the jury, that my failure to put her on the stand made an unfavorable impression. There was, indeed, only one inference to draw from it.

Goldberger turned aside for a few words with the prosecutor, and I suspected that he was telling him of Miss Vaughan's discovery of the blood-stained handkerchief; but there was no way to get the story before the jury without calling her. They seemed to agree, at last, that they had evidence enough, for the jury was instructed to prepare its verdict. Its members withdrew a little distance under the trees, and gathered into a group to talk it over.

I watched them for a moment, and then I turned to Swain.

"I suppose you know," I said, "that they're certain to find against you? Even if they don't, the district attorney will cause your arrest right away."

He nodded.

"I'm not worrying about that. I'm worrying about Miss Vaughan. You won't forget your promise?"

"No."

"She'll have no one but you," he went on rapidly. "Neither will I! You must not fail us!"

"I shan't," I promised. "But you'd better think about yourself a little, Swain."

"Plenty of time for that when I'm sure Marjorie's safe. The minute you tell me she's at the Royces', I'll begin to think about myself. I'm not afraid. A didn't kill that man. No jury would convict me."

I might have told him that convictions are founded on evidence, and that the evidence in this case was certainly against him, but I thought it better to hold my peace. The more confident he was, the less irksome he would find imprisonment. So I sat silent until the members of the jury filed back into their places.

"Have you reached a verdict, gentlemen?" the coroner asked, after his clerk had polled them.

"Yes, your honor," the foreman answered.

"What is the verdict?"

The foreman held out a folded paper to the clerk, who took it, opened it, and read

"We, the jury i. the inquest held this 13th day of June. 1903, into the death of one Worthington Vaughan, residing in the Borough of the Bronx, City of New York, do find that the deceased came to his death by strangulation at the hands of Frederic Swain."

There was an instant's silence, and then Goldberger turned to the jury.

"Is this your verdict, gentlemen?" he asked quietly; and each juryman replied in the affirmative as his name was called. "I thank you for your services," Goldberger added, directed his clerk to give them vouchers on the city treasurer, and dismissed them.

Simmonds and the assistant district attorney came toward us, and I arose to meet them. Swain got up, also, and when I glanced at him I saw that he was smiling.

"I don't know whether you have met Mr. Blake Mr Lester," said Simmonds, and the prosecutor and I shook hands I introduced him to Swain, but Swain did not offer his hand.

"I suppose you've come to take me along?" he said, the smile still on his lips

"I'm afraid we'll have to."

"Would bail be considered?" I asked

"I'm afraid not," and Blake shook his head. "It isn't a bailable offense."

I knew, of course, that he was right and that it was of no use to argue or protest. Swain turned to me and held out his hand.

"Then I'll say goodby, Mr Lester," he said "I'll hope to see you Monday."

"You shall," I promised.

"And with good news," he added

"Yes—and with good news."

"Can we give you a lift?" Blake asked.

"No," I said, "thank you, but I'm staying out here for the present."

I watched them as they climbed into a car—Goldberger, Blake, Simmonds and Swain; I saw the latter take one last look at the house, then he waved to me, as the car turned into the highroad—at least, he was taking it bravely! The coroner's assistants climbed into a second car, and the four or five policemen into a third. Then the reporters and photographers piled into the others, the few stragglers who had straggled in straggled on again, and in five minutes the place was deserted As I looked around, I was surprised to see that even Godfrey had departed There was something depressing about the jumble of chairs and tables, the litter of paper on the grass—something sordid, as of a banquet hall deserted by the diners.

I turned away and started for the gate; and then, suddenly, I wondered who was in charge of the house. Who would give orders to clear away this litter? Who would arrange for the funeral on the morrow? How could Miss Vaughan do it, ill as she was? With quick resolution, I turned back toward the house. As I did so, I was surprised to see a man appear at the edge of the lawn and run toward me It was Hinman.

"I was afraid I'd missed you," he said. "Miss Vaughan wishes to see you. She's all alone here and needs some help"

"I'd thought of that," I said "I was just coming to offer it. Is she better?"

"Yes, much better. I think she has realized the necessity of conquering her nerves. Of course, we must still be careful"

I nodded, and followed him into the house. Then I stopped in astonishment, for Miss Vaughan was sitting in a chair in the library. She rose as I entered, came a step toward me and held out her hand.

"You must not think so badly of me, Mr Lester," she said. "I won't give way again, I promise you"

"You have had a great deal to bear," I protested, taking her hand in mine "I think you have been very brave. I only hope that I can be of some service to you."

"Thank you. I am sure you can. Let us all sit down, for we must have quite a talk. Dr. Hinman tells me that I shall need a lawyer."

"Undoubtedly," I assented. "Your father's estate will have to be settled, and that can only be done in the courts. Besides, in the eyes of the law, you are still a minor."

"Will you be my lawyer, Mr. Lester?"

"It will be a great privilege," I answered.

"Then we will consider that settled?"

"Yes," I agreed, "we will consider that settled."

"But it is not business I wish to discuss today," she went on, quickly. "There are other things more urgent. First, I wish to get acquainted with you. Have you not wondered, Mr. Lester, why it was that I chose you to deliver my letter?"

"I suppose it was because there was no one else," I answered, looking at her in some astonishment for the way she was rattling on.. The color was coming and going in her cheeks and her eyes were very bright. I wondered if she had escaped brain fever, after all

"No," she said, smiling audaciously, "it was because I liked your face—I knew you could be trusted. Of course, for a moment I was startled at seeing you looking down at me from a tree. I wondered afterwards how you came to be there."

"Just idle curiosity," I managed to stammer, my face very hot. "I am sorry if I annoyed you."

"Oh, but it was most fortunate," she protested; "and a great coincidence, too, that you should be Mr. Swain's employer, and able to get hold of him at once."

IS CHILD CROSS, FEVERISH, SICK

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver and bowels so nicely.

A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels, and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sours, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, system full of cold, has sore throat, stomach-ache or diarrhoea. Listen, Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it, and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Prizes Awarded to Western Canada for Wheat, Oats, Barley, Alfalfa and Grasses

The winnings of Western Canada at the Soil Products Exposition at Denver were easily made. The list comprised Wheat, Oats, Barley and Grasses, the most important being the prizes for Wheat and Oats and sweep stake on Alfalfa.

No less important than the splendid quality of Western Canada's wheat and other grains, is the excellence of the cattle fed and fattened on the grasses of that country. A recent shipment of cattle to Chicago topped the market in that city for quality and price.

Western Canada produced in 1915 one-third as much wheat as all of the United States, or over 300,000,000 bushels.

Canada in proportion to population has a greater exportable surplus of wheat this year than any country in the world, and at present prices you can figure out the revenue for the producer. In Western Canada you will find good markets, splendid schools, exceptional social conditions, perfect climate and other great attractions. There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

TO THOSE INTERESTED

Owing to inquiries both directly and indirectly concerning the two bright stars visible in the west in the evening; the undersigned wishes to submit the following through The Times:

The brighter of the two is Venus; the other Jupiter.

During the early part of the winter Venus was low in the western sky and Jupiter high. Venus is setting later from evening to evening, while Jupiter is setting earlier. By the 13th of February they were apparently quite close together. Now Venus is higher in the sky than Jupiter. Jupiter is moving away from the earth, is growing fainter and will morning star after April 1st. Venus will be evening star until July 3rd and is moving toward earth. It is growing brighter and tan be seen in the day time with the naked eye during the month of April, also latter part of March and fore part of May. Yours truly,

G. I. Schaper.

ELMER BARZ OBITUARY

Elmer Barz was the oldest son of Henry and Clara Barz. He was born on November 5th, 1911. Few have been the days of his pilgrimage on this earth. A few months ago diabetes made its appearance, which in spite of all efforts could not be checked. Gradually his strength was leaving him. The last week he was confined to his bed, and had to endure intense pains as it seemed in all members of his body. Saturday morning, February 5th at 7:15 o'clock he was relieved by death, and as we hope was taken to a happier life. He reached the brief age of 4 years and 3 months. The funeral took place on Monday, February 7th with funeral services at the Reformed church, Rev. Wm. P. Thiel officiating. His remains were taken to Calvary cemetery.

BASKET SOCIAL

There will be a Basket Social in the Stille school, District No. 7, two miles west of Klemme, Friday evening, February 23th. Kathryn Murray, Teacher.

S. J. Kirkwood sold his cafe the first of the week to W. A. Thompson of Eagle Grove and the new owner took possession Thursday. "Ikey" has been in the business here so long, both with his parents and alone, that it will not seem natural to have him out of the business. The new owner is an experienced man in the business and will undoubtedly make a success of the business. He is adding a lot of new equipment and fixing up the place in general. We are glad to say that S. J. and wife will continue to make Klemme their home but sorry to have Mr. and Mrs. A. K. leave. They will move to West Bend and make their home with their son, W. M.

That Osteopathy is the original and accredited System of Healing by Adjustment is a matter of history. Osteopathy has many imitators and some accomplish a certain amount of good. There is so much good in Osteopathy that even an imitation may bring some benefit. If this is possible in an imitation, how much better are one's chances with the original? If you wish the best, INVESTIGATE, then choose the one which is best prepared to give the most reliable service. When one's ability begins to fail is the time to make use of the reliability of Osteopathy.

The announcement of C. W. Wiles for supervisor will be found in this issue. He gave the matter much thought before entering the contest and done so at the earnest solicitation of a number of friends. Clarence has lived in this community all of his life and is well known and thought of by all. He has been living in town for the past two years but is still the owner of a fine farm near here. He would undoubtedly make an excellent official if elected.

"Skeet" or "Scoop, the Cub Reporter", and erstwhile butcher left Saturday evening for Chicago, where he said he was going to purchase a refrigerating plant. We have our doubts just what kind of a plant he intended to purchase and whether it required a license to get the plant or not. He did not give us a very clear explanation and after putting two and two together, we decide this is leap year. We pass, but you never can tell what kind of a hand that boy is holding.

Ed. G. Ell has sold his poultry, egg and produce business to Henry Lewis who has been in his employ for a number of years. Henry should know the business and we hope that he enjoys success. It is up to the business men as well as the farmers to give him their support, as their is not any question, but what he will treat you square and he is at the head of a business that means much to the welfare of the community.

A number of the friends and neighbors gathered at the Walter [illegible] home Tuesday evening and tendered Mr. and Mrs. Ross a surprise farewell. They are moving to their new home between here and Garner and expect to get completely settled in their new home by next week. We are glad that they are not moving far and will continue to make Klemme their trading headquarters.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

SHORT COURSE WILL PAY OUT

Klemme Pulls Off Three Successful Courses---First Held in County---List of Prize Winners

Klemme and the surrounding farmers proved once again last week that they are most progressive bunch in Hancock county ---not merely just because the Short Course proved a success financially but because they have taken the initiative as far as this county is concerned, other places in the county may hold courses now but Klemme will still hold the honor of having held the first one, as well as the first farm tour and first Cow Testing Association, there is no way getting round the fact that the farmers in this vicinity are progressive from the word go, and we feel sure that their time and money has not been spent in vain and pay big dividends on their investment.

We were in error in announcing last week that the Commercial League were to stand the deficit if there was any on this year's course. This was not the case as forty-four nearby farmers signed a guarantee last year and considered themselves liable for any loss their might be---the Commercial League simply having charge of affairs, We offer our apology for this misrepresentation, but are equally pleased to state that there will not be any loss for anyone to take care of.

The course was a hummer in every respect and our only regret is that we were too busy to attend and we are thus handicapped in not being able to give a detailed report.

Lecture Thursday Evening

The lecture Thursday evening, by Rev. Geo. F. Barslou on "The Golden Age of Agriculture", was well attended and well received. Rev. Barslou is not a stranger here by any means and seemed good to his many Klemme friends to hear him again. He was the local M. E. pastor here a number of years ago and was called back here another time to deliver a 4th of July address. After his lecture the domestic science exhibits were auctioned off, the proceeds of which went towards the defraying of the expenses of the course.

The Spelling Contest

The Spelling Contest Friday evening proved to be the big event and brought out a packed house. The Garner High School Orchestra played a few choice selections after which the contest was on. Over twenty contestants were entered and they all proved to be good spellers. It proved to be one of the best contests—if not the best ever held in the county, according to Supt. Baggs. It being the first time that any contestantant ever went clear through the list of one thousand words furnished, and this was done here by two of them, Wm. Coobs and Earl Josten and they kept Mr. Baggs busy for another half hour picking out words at random from different spelling books of which he was lucky enough to have a large supply. Earl Josten finally bumped up against a word of which he had never heard and after his failure to spell it, the word was passed on to Master William and profiting by Earl's mistake cyphered it out and won the contest. It was an added honor for William as he also won last year and he wants to be careful or they will bar him from any future spelling event. Earl can also feel mighty proud of his record, and in fact the whole class done exceedingly fine and only a little slip of the tongue kept some of them from being possible prize winners. The following is the way the prizes were awarded:

Domestic Science Prize Winners

WHITE BREAD—1st, Mrs. J. N. Day; 2nd Mrs. John Josten; 3rd Mrs. C. A. Arnold.

GRAHAM BREAD—1st Mrs. F. A. Arnold; 2nd Mrs. Frank Gruetzmacher; 3rd Mrs. Wm. Smith.

DOUGHNUTS—1st Mrs J. N. Day; 2nd Mrs. Wm. Smith; 3rd Mrs. F. A. Arnold.

ANGEL FOOD CAKE—1st Mrs. J. N. Day: 2nd Mrs. W R. Bloom: 3rd Mrs. C. A. Arnold;

BUTTER—1st Herman Coobs, 2nd Mrs. C. A. Arnold.

Overland
Model 75

$615
With Electric Starter and Electric Lights
Four Inch Tires

Roadster $595, both f. o. b. Toledo

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all-around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the unit-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is assured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a motor automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are: Model 83, five-passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices f. o. b. Toledo.

KLEMME, IOWA

Commendable progress toward the best modern ideals is indicated by the announcement from the police of Iloilo island of Zamboango, Philippine islands, that unnecessary cruelty to horses and cattle driven through the public streets will not be tolerated. Especially noteworthy as a sidelight is the following and last sentence: "This applies to Americans as well as others. In fact, this department knows no favorites in the strict enforcement of its duties please observe this carefully."

The New York World prints this from Port Jervis, N. Y.: "While fishing in Kiamesha lake, W. J. Groom caught a big eel, which was incased in a lamp chimney. Two years ago Mr. Groom caught the eel in a net at night and when taken ashore it knocked over a lamp and ran into the chimney and escaped into the lake, the glass inclosing its head and several inches of body. The glass was not even chipped, but had worn a deep groove in the eel, which measured nearly five feet."

Twelve years ago P. F. Reigle, of Middle Creek, Pa., was candidate for associate judge. He left his card with Charles M Ingram's daughter Edna, telling her that he would give her one of his sons for a husband if she would persuade her father to vote for him. Last year Mr Ingram was candidate for the same office and left his card with Reigle's son Roy, promising him his daughter for a wife in return for his father's vote. Recently Reigle, jr., and Miss Ingram were married.

The largest price ever paid by an American magazine for serial rights in a book was $50,000 given by the Century company to Nicolay and Hay for their famous "Life of Lincoln." It is said that the editor of the Century, who first offered $25,000 and then doubled the bid, probably misread the exchange of glances between the authors when the first offer was made, they being surprised at the bigness of the first sum, which he in his eagerness immediately doubled.

The Pharos lighthouse, built in 282 B. C., during the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus of Alexandria, when finished bore the legend: "King Ptolemy to the gods, the saviors, for the benefit of the sailors," which presently crumbled off, having been formed in mortar by the builder Sostratus, and beneath, carved in the rock itself, appeared the following. "Sostratus, the Snidian, son of Dexiphanes, to the gods, the saviors, etc."

Probably no Indian word has attained a greater connotation of polite distinction than Tuxedo, derived from P'taukseettough, the place of the bears," and conjuring as it does, visions of collar advertisments, dinner-jacketed young men playing billiards and gayly clothed outdoor blades betting on blooded horses.

That a large number of Indians were once held in slavery at a settlement on Gray's harbor, Puget sound, a fact not generally known, is recalled by the death there of Schickulash Pete, former slave and another of the multitudinous "oldest residents of the northwest," having lived 110 years more or less.

According to the census, Pennsylvania last year had 7,000 women farmers. In Georgia during the last three years the number of women farmers has more than doubled. The majority of the women go in for raising hogs, cattle and foodstuffs, leaving cotton planting to the men.

As every one will instantly comprehend, the amagahasebi of Java, a very poisonous snake is so called from its unmbrella-like head. The creature makes a peculiar noise by the nimble moving of its tongue and a slight touch of its fangs is fatal.

Sea tradition, as well as international law, is being overturned by the submarine campaign. The captains of both the Lusitania and Arabic have received new commands, a favor almost never before shown the commanders of lost vessels.

The street lighting bill of the City of New York for 1915 was $400,000 less than for 1914. A goodly part of the saving is said to have been effected by the use of nitrogen-filled tungsten lamps in place of the arc lamps.

CONSOLIDATION PLANNED OF ROAD ORGANIZATIONS

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 19.—One big Iowa road congress to take the place of all other Iowa road organizations, was proposed this afternoon when representatives of various state highway associations met here, in conference. Several smaller meetings were held today at which routes for the Jefferson highway and Daniel Boone trail were outlined and agreed upon.

TELEGRAPH-HERALD SUES FORMER EDITOR, MURPHY

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 19.—Judge Bronson, in district court yesterday, overruled the demurrer filed in the suit of the Telegraph-Herald, a local newspaper, against Louis Murphy, collector of internal revenue for the state of Iowa, and formerly editor of the Telegraph.

The Telegraph-Herald seeks to recover the sum of $6,000, which represents the principal and interest on a judgment returned against it in the Ott libel suit a few years ago. The newspaper would make Mr. Murphy pay this sum, claiming that he wrote the article causing the libel suit.

IOWANS CELEBRATE 70TH ANNIVERSARY OF WEDDING

Ames, Ia., Feb. 19.—Dr. and Mrs. P. J. Kaynor Wednesday celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary. What other couple in Iowa has the distinction of being 70 years married? It is believed here that Dr. and Mrs. Kaynor hold the record.

Dr. Kaynor practiced medicine in this and other states for more than 40 years. He was born November 10, 1821, in New York state and there received his education and first practiced his profession. Mrs. Kaynor was born December 13, 1837, at Warrens, N. Y. The marriage took place February 16, 1846. Seven children were given them, five boys and two girls.

SCOTT LAIRD, IOWA EDITOR, DISAPPEARS IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Feb. 19.—The whereabouts of Scott Laird, publisher of the Oelwein, (Ia.) Daily News, and for many years publisher of the Winona, (Minn.) Republican-Herald, is still a mystery. Mr. Laird disappeared from his room in a Chicago hotel early Wednesday morning, leaving his coat, hat and other belongings. He had settled his bill, but had told no one, so far as has been learned, where he was going. He came here to attend a meeting of the middle western newspapermen. His friends, having been unable to get a trace of him, have called in the aid of the police.

DECLARED LEGALLY DEAD TO SETTLE AN ESTATE

Fort Madison, Ia., Feb. 19.—George Bayard Taylor, a Donnellson resident, who has been missing for seven years, was declared legally dead here yesterday by Judge Bank The legal point was involved in the arrangement of certain property at Donnellson, the case arising through an action brought by Mrs. Kate M. Taylor, mother of the missing man.

Legal demises are infrequent but sometimes necessary to validate actions relating to titles of property.

IOWA METHODISTS ENLIST IN FORWARD MOVEMENT

Ottumwa, Ia., Feb. 19.—The Methodist forward movement was outlined today at the Iowa conference at the Frst Methodist Episcopal church here by Bishops Theodore S. Henderson, of Chattanooga, Tenn., E. W. Hughes, of San Francisco, and Frank M. Bristol, of Omaha, resident bishop for this territory.

This movement which has as it goal, the acquisition of 250,000 new church members and 500,000 recruits to the time legion, originated in the mind of Bishop Henderson, when he was chairman of the evangelical commission.

DR. T. B. MORRIS, ATLANTIC, INJURED AT ROAD CROSSING

Atlantic, Ia., Feb. 19.—Dr. Thomas B. Morris, one of the best known physicians and surgeons in this city, was struck by Rock Island westbound train No. 303 about 9:45 o'clock yesterday morning at the crossing east of the city, while on his way in his car to answer a call north of the city.

He is suffering from possible internal injuries, a fractured skull, which produced concussion of the brain, a broken collarbone and a broken nose. He is in a critical condition, but has a slight chance for recovery.

G. H. VAN HOUTEN MAY BE GRAND ARMY COMMANDER

Lennox, Ia., Feb. 19.—George H. Van Houten, of Lennox, for many years secretary of the state department of agriculture and a member of the legislature from Turner county, has been brought out by the Grand Army post of Lennox as a candidate for department commander.

Two years ago he was solicited to become a candidate for department commander, but refrained from becoming a candidate out of deference for B. C. Ward, and again last year refrained from becoming a candidate out of deference to J. F. Merry, both of those comrades being old time and very warm friends.

DES MOINES—Leroy Jones, local champion amateur roller skater, and Miss Marie Campbell, ardent skating devotee, were married while on roller skates at a local rink Wednesday night The unique wedding was the result of a dare made by friends of the young couple. They had some difficulty in keeping themselves balanced while the minister was repeating the words of the ceremony. The pastor declined to enter so thoroughly into the spirit of the occasion as to wear skates himself.

MAPLETON—Quarry lodge, No. 404, A. F. and A. M., held its annual past masters' night at the Masonic temple Wednesday evening. The ladies of the Eastern Star served a 7 o'clock banquet. The Mapleton orchestra and the Masonic quartet furnished the music. George C. Scott, of Sioux City, gave the address of the evening. Following the banquet the masters' degree was conferred upon Louis Wilhelm, Past Master E. L. Crow conferring the degree.

SHELDON—A chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution has been organized in Sheldon, named the Alexander Hamilton chapter.

EMMETSBURG—The third annual banquet of the Emmetsburg Commercial club was held in the armory Wednesday evening Three hundred business men assembled and the ladies of the Civic society served the banquet Indications are that the improvements of the coming summer will exceed those of 1915. Twenty additional blocks of paving are practically assured and there is a prospect of the erection of 30 new residences.

The graphite deposits of Bavaria, the only ones in the world outside of Ceylon which yield graphite suitable for making refractory crucibles, are to be developed

IOWA SCHOOL SURVEY WILL BE PUBLISHED, DR. CAPEN DECLARES

Claimed That State Board Had Been Intending to Suppress Portions of Report.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 19.—Publication in full of the report of the educational commission which made a survey of Iowa schools, was assured by action of the Iowa state board of education yesterday afternoon, and the publication will be undertaken either by the state board or by the federal bureau itself.

"Our visit to Des Moines was made to lay a preliminary draft of the report before the board, in order to check up any possible inaccuracies in the statement of fact," said Dr. Capen, chairman of the commission.

"There is no disposition either on the part of the commission or the board to change the report structurally or modify its contents.

"As soon as such emendations have been made as are required, the report will be laid before the presidents of the three state institutions and for the same purpose—to correct errors of fact. The presidents will not cause the report to be modified.

"When this has been done, a synopsis of the report will be given to the press, and the full report will be placed in the hands of the printer."

Dr. Capen was asked whether the report would be printed by the state board or by the federal bureau of education.

"That has not been decided," he said. "It will be published by one or the other. Some think that the report will be of sufficient educational importance to be worth publication by the bureau of education, which has a large mailing list and would be able to put it into the hands of interested people throughout the United States.

The chairman of the commission said the report would be ready for publication within a few weeks at the latest.

AUTO TRUCK AND STREET CAR COLLIDE; DRIVER KILLED

Council Bluffs, Ia., Feb. 19.—James Murray, driver for a Council Bluffs transfer company, was killed today when the auto truck he was driving was struck by a street car on the Missouri river bridge and he was thrown over the railing to the ground, many feet below. His neck was broken.

EDMUND MUST GO TO COLORADO ON MURDER CHARGE

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 19.—G. H Edmund, wanted in Colorado, on a charge of having murdered a national guard officer there during the coal miners' strike, must return to that state and face trial, according to a decision of the supreme court today.

Governor Clarke announced that he would issue a write of extradition immediately.

Local members of the United Mine Workers of America backed Edmund in his fight against extradition. Edmund came to Des Moines during the strike and was working as a janitor in the state house when arrested at the request of Colorado authorities.

COOPERATIVE GRAIN MEN TO INVESTIGATE TERMINALS

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 19.—An appropriation of $300 was voted by the Farmers' Grain Dealers' association convention to finance an investigation of the terminal market situation to ascertain conditions of membership for farmers in grain exchanges and to compile a comprehensive report of the findings, which shall be printed in the Farmers Cooperative Journal not later than September of this year

The most important action of the afternoon session of the convention, in addition to this appropriation, was the election of directors. Those chosen, according to the districts of the state by which representation in the convention is arranged, are as follows First, R. Klay, of Rock Valley, Second, B. Hathaway, of Pierson, Third, G. M Dyer, of Spencer; Fourth, B. E. Morton, of Rockwell City, Fifth, C H. Nelson, of Garner; Sixth, Thomas McManus, of Dougherty, Seventh, A. L. Middleton, of Eagle Grove, Eighth, S. J. Cottington, of Stratford, and Ninth, S. Kemmerer of Ames.

SHELDON LIGHTING PLANT SOLD TO POWER SYNDICATE

Sheldon, Ia., Feb. 19.—The Sheldon Light & Power company has sold its electric light plant to the Northern Iowa Power company, possession to be given on March 1. The corporation buying the local enterprise has its headquarters in Chicago and owns about 40 plants of this character. It is expected that the local plant will become the center for high voltage lines, furnishing lighting and power equipment for surrounding territory About $60,000 will be placed in a practically new plant.

SENATOR F. F. JONES SAVES DAY FOR DAN CUPID

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 19.—W. C. Jones, a young farmer whose home is near Villisca, and Miss Lela Berkler, daughter of a wealthy retired farmer residing at Storm Lake, Ia., slipped away from their friends yesterday and came to Des Moines to be married.

Arriving at the court house the young people were told they could not procure a marriage license without having a witness

"I am sorry," said the county clerk, "but you will have to have a witness."

The young man and woman turned away and slowly left the court house. In about an hour both dashed into the clerk's office on double quick time. Between them was former Senator F. F. Jones, puffing and out of breath. Mr. Jones quickly identified the young man as his nephew and then made a dash for his train.

Jones and his bride will live on a big farm near Lytton, Ia.

IDA GROVE—Judge Albert granted a divorce to Mary Walsh Lund, formerly of Sioux City, from her husband, Herman Lund, on grounds of extreme cruelty Details of the financial settlement were not given out.

STATE FIREMEN'S TOURNEY SCHEDULED FOR DE WITT

Clinton, Ia., Feb. 17.—Although the final word will not be given by the officals for several weeks, assurance was received here yesterday from authorities in the organization to the effect that the Iowa state firemen's tournament would in all probability be placed next summer at DeWitt, a town of 3,000, located immediately west of Clinton. The town has been making strenuous efforts to get the big gathering of Iowa firemen, and backers of the movement have already raised funds to guarantee all expenses.

IOWA'S POPULATION IS 2,358,062; GAIN ABOUT SIX PER CENT

Increase Confined to Towns and Cities — Rural Districts Hold Their Own.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 18.—Iowa has 2,358,062 population, according to the state census of 1915. This is a gain of 6 per cent over the federal census of 1910.

The population of Iowa in 1910 was 2,224,771. Since then there has been a gain of 133,291. These figures are official as far as 98 of the 99 counties are concerned. The count of Ringgold county is not official, but is approximately correct. The final checking was done today, and A. U. Swan, director of the census, expects to make the official announcement of the census results.

The gain in population has been almost entirely confined to the cities, the results show. The rural districts about held their own. A few lost population.

SWEDISH LUTHERANS ASK EMBARGO ON MUNITIONS

Fort Dodge, Ia., Feb. 18.—Before the close of the annual convention at Dayton Sunday, the Iowa Swedish Lutherans passed a resolution commending and supporting Senator William S. Kenyon, of Fort Dodge, in his effort to put an embargo on the shipment of munitions to warring nations. The resolution:

"The Evangelical Lutheran Iowa conference of the Augustana synod, representing some 25,000 citizens of Iowa, in convention assembled at Dayton, Ia., on Lincoln's birthday, 1916, unanimously deplore that the shipment of arms from this country to the belligerent nations still continues, in spite of all protests, and that our nation thereby assists in the shedding of rivers of blood. We also wish to express our approval of Senator W. S. Kenyon to secure an embargo on arms, and pray that his efforts may be crowned with success."

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary society elected as officers: Mrs. C. A. Randolph, Boone, president; Mrs. A. Norrbom, Des Moines, vice president; Mrs. N. E. Kron, Dayton, secretary; Miss Amy Miller, Dayton, treasurer. Other members of the executive committee elected were: Mrs. C. O. Morland, Madrid; Miss Nellie Nelson, Dayton, and Miss Mary Bork, Boone.

MURDER VERDICT RETURNED AGAINST MRS. IDA MEYER

Winterset Ia., Feb. 18.—An agreed jury of only 11 men late yesterday returned a verdict of second degree murder against Mrs. Ida Meyer, aged 60, who has been on trial charged with complicity in the murder of her daughterinlaw, Mrs. Ethel Meyer, last July. It was announced that Mrs. Meyer probably will be sentenced by District Judge Applegate late this week, or early next week. She was released on bond of $30,000.

Mrs. Meyer is the second member of her immediate family to be convicted in connection with the murder of the younger Mrs. Meyer. The other was Fred Meyer, the son, and husband of the murdered woman. He also was convicted of second degree murder, and was sentenced to 15 years in the penitentiary, but is out on bond, pending an appeal of his case to the supreme court.

Mrs. Ethel Meyer was found dead in here home here on July 15, 1915. A bullet wound was in her head and a revolver laid at her feet. Mrs. Ida Meyer and her son claimed the young bride of but a few months had committed suicide. However, the state presented witnesses to testify that the revolver found near the body was of a different caliber from that which fired the fatal shot. Domestic trouble was advanced by the state as the reason for the murder.

EASTERN SYNDICATE BUYING LIGHTING PLANTS IN IOWA

Orange City, Ia., Feb. 18.—F. W Michel, the owner of the Orange City electric light plant, has sold the plant for $21,000. Several weeks ago an agent, who refused to state for whom he was operating secured options on plants in about 20 towns in northwestern Iowa. Today the agent closed the deal for the Orange City plant for $21,000. It is understood that plants at LeMars, Sheldon, Rock Valley, Sioux Center, Remsen and several other towns have been purchased or are about to be purchased. A power plant will be established to furnish light and power for all of these towns, and also the country between the towns.

MISSING BENJAMIN KUHL SAID TO BE SHORT $40,000

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 16.—The mysterious disappearance of Benjamin Kuhl, the East Dubuque business man, supposedly wealthy, which has been attributed to foul play, was explained yesterday by reports that the missing man is short in his accounts to the extent of approximately $40,000.

Kuhl was treasurer of the school board and his accounts there are said to reveal a shortage of about $15,000. He was also a director of the East Dubuque Savings bank, but this institution lost nothing

POISONER TAUNTS NEW YORK POLICE; CHURCHES WARNED

Jean Crones, Chicago Chef, Is Believed to Be In New York—Sends Sleuths Finger Prints.

MAKES VEILED THREATS

Chicago Pastors Warned to Keep Buildings Guarded—Had Known of Plot For Three Months.

New York, Feb. 19.—The fact that Jean Crones, the anarchist chef accused of poisoning soup served at a dinner given by Catholic clergy to Archbishop Mundelein, in Chicago, is supposed to be in this city, caused the police today to take extraordinary precautions to safeguard guests at a ball to be given in Madison Square Garden tonight oy the Knights of Columbus. Governor Whitman, high city officials, and many dignitaries of the Catholic church are expected to be present.

Detectives have been ordered to watch every section of the auditorium and another large detail will patrol the environs of the garden.

Threatens New Outrage.

The police have been spurred to renew activity by the definite establishment of the fact that two letters, received by the New York Times and purporting to have been written by Crones, were mailed in New York. The second letter, which was received by the Times last night, and published this morning conveyed a threat that a new outrage was planned in this city.

The identification by John M. McCourt, assistant United States district attorney at Scranton, Pa., of the facsimile of the first Crones letter received here as the handwriting of the man wanted in Chicago, stimulated police efforts here. Crones' writing was identified by examination papers he had sent to a correspondence school in Scranton.

The second letter, apparently signed by Crones, received by the New York paper, last night, contained what purported to be his finger prints. The police are endeavoring to learn by these prints whether Crones had a record in the police department of identification.

Tells Why He Did It.

In this letter the writer attempted to tell in an incoherent manner "Why I did it." Many of the words are misspelled, as was the case in the previous letter. The writer asserted that "While at Europe millions of Christians are schlauchtering each other in the most bloody massacre, and in these free country thousands of men and women are tramping the streets without food an' shelter at the werry same time the church holds dinners and pays 25 $ for each cover, which starts with Beluga Caviar and champaagne, the same money which was begard from pour working men and women the same money were the blood of pour workers has run for.

"These conditions," the writer continued, "are an scandal. That is the feature of christianity and an insult to ward honesty and a challenge to humanity. Let the church answer those my charges toward the world and I schall stand for the charges made against me.

"The police makes me laugh. When I was in Buffalo two spies where after me. After a while they went backe * * * So foolish is the police not for 2 cents brains. Yesterday is working for an hour around the police headquarters, but no one came out under got me. I am glad that the spies from Chicago are coming than I know better at wat time to let er go."

New York police aided by federal secret service agents scoured the city today in a search for Crones. It was said that every hotel and restaurant kitchen in New York would be visited in the hope that he might be found working as a chef.

Many anarchists were questioned, but none was found who would admit any knoweldge of Crones' movements.

Chicago, Feb. 18.—Warning has been sent to Chicago churches today by the police to establish a guard about their premises as the result of evidence disclosed in the hunt for Jean Crones, the University club chef, who is alleged to have poisoned soup served at the banquet last Thursday night to Archbishop George W. Mundelein.

The evidence disclosed, both by letters and agents working with the anarchists, the police declared, indicated that an anti-clerical demonstration of wide extent had been planned by a group of anarchists known as the "sympathizers."

Details of the plot were withheld by the police, but it was said their information disclosed that the torch had been suggested for a number of churches, as well as the use of the bombs.

Photographs and drawing of churches in other large cities, the police said, were found in the raid on Crones' room, and investigation had disclosed an anticlercial plot of wide ramifications.

Following the publication this morning in New York papers of another letter believed to have been written by Jean Crones, former assistant chef at the University club, of Chicago, local police officials put on New York authorities the burden of responsibility for Crones' arrest.

DELIVERY DRIVER DEAD IN MITCHELL RUNAWAY

Mitchell, S. D., Feb. 18.—Ralph Christophers, 18 years old, driver for the Rathbun Grocery company, was horribly mangled in a runaway that occurred shortly before noon today. He died while being taken to a hospital. Christophers was dragged over 100 yards before the horses were stopped by running into a telephone guy wire. Last fall the runaway of a team belonging to the same company was the cause of Charles Samson, a Mitchell boy, losing one arm. Samson sued for $15,000 damages, but lost the case.

RESUME TRAFFIC.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 18.—The first train for San Diego since January 17 left here early today. Bridges and long stretches of road bed were washed out by the heavy rains during January. Freight to all points between here and San Diego also was accepted today by the Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad.

FALL OF ERZERUM FORCED BY FIERCE BAYONET ASSAULT

Russians and Turks Struggle Hand to Hand In Snow Waist Deep and Mercury at 30 Below.

ONE OF GREATEST OF WAR

Grand Duke's Achievement Culmination of Five Days of Unprecedented Conflict—Blow to Sultan.

Petrograd, (via London), Feb 19.—The fall of Erzerum, the most important Turkish stronghold in Asia Minor, and for a long time considered impregnable, offers the unprecedented spectacle of a first class fortress built on a steep mountain ridge nearly a mile above sea level yielding to bayonet after only 36 hours' bombardment.

The operations were conducted under the most severe weather conditions and the snow being deep and the thermometer registering at times more than 30 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit.

Prisoners Not Known.

The Turkish army defending Erzerum, taken by surprise under the methods adopted by the Russians, is now said to be in disorderly flight on the roads leading to Sivas. As the garrison apparently scattered in all directions, it is assumed here that large numbers of men were taken prisoners, although official figures are still lacking.

After the taking of Niksala, it appeared that the Russian attack would be directed upon the Turkish right flank, and by rapidly transferring troops the Turks made all plans to resist the main assault from this quarter. Apparently they had little fear of the success of this attack because of the strong character of the fortifications in that direction, and even less apprehension of danger from a frontal attack.

Win With Bayonet.

Nevertheless, after the Russians took by storm the first line forts on February 2, there began a persistent bombardment of the Turkish center followed by a bayonet charge, the impetuosity of which swept the defenders off their feet. The highest tribute is paid to the bravery of the Caucasian troops, whose charge is considered likely to go down in history as one of the most brilliant feats of the war

It is recognized here that the success of the assault was due almost entirely to the bayonet work of these troops, since the artillery preparation was insufficient in intensity and duration, according to military experts, to reduce even a strong field position.

Wipes Out Turkish Base.

The wiping out of this Turkish base tends to disrupt the whole Caucasus campaign of the Turks, as it not only served as a base of the operations in Caucasus, but also of those in Mesopotamia.

Its fall leaves no strongly fortified positions between Erzerum and Sivas, about 230 miles to the west, and brings more to the front consideration of an eventual attack upon Constantinople from the east.

An attempt to retake Erzerum is anticipated, but there are enormous difficulties awaiting the bringing up of the Turkish reinforcements, as it is assumed that Turkish forces in Mesopotamia cannot be spared. The alternative for the Turks seems to be to draw upon those at Constantinople, from which all possible routes toward Erzerum are long and arduous. The most practicable is by railway to Urfa, whence it would be necessary to march overland more than 200 miles.

Strengthens Russian Grip.

The Black sea route to Trebisond has become impracticable, because of the Russian domination of the Black sea littoral.

Sivas is regarded as the next probable objective of the Russian armies.

The capture of Erzerum has had the effect of making more secure the Russian positions along the Black sea coast, and those of the southern flank at Alassgerd, while the possibility of a successful Russian thrust towards the British expeditionary force in Mesopotamia seems to be increasing.

The victory is taken by the Russian military authorities as the first signal token of cooperation among the allies. This belief is expressed in interviews by diplomats of the allied powers in Petrograd.

Although the official bulletin mentions military guns captured, it is known that the fortress contained 300 new pattern Krupp heavy guns, besides an equal number of an older pattern. It is assumed these were abandoned and from the precipitate nature of the evacuation, it is not believed the Turks took time seriously to disable them.

Greatest of Battles.

Reference by Grand Duke Nicholas, whose troops conquered Przemysl, Lemberg and other great fortresses, to the "five days of unprecedented assault" in the capture of Erzerum is taken to indicate the extent of the operations and the enormous losses on both sides, as the grand duke is recognized as a conservative in his reports on defeats and victories. The great extent of the forts at Erzerum, which were 25 miles long in one direction and 22 miles long in two other directions, also point to the magnitude of the battle which has just been decided in favor of the czar's forces.

BRAZIL WILL PROVIDE HER COFFEE TRANSPORTS

Washington, Feb. 18.—In order that the prospective withdrawal of freight steamers between Brazil and the United States may not delay the movement of the coffee crop, the Brazilian government has decided to use the government owned boats of the Lloyd-Brazilero line for its transportation.

Consul General Gottschalk, at Rio, reported today that it was understood the government had ordered the Brazilian steamers Mossoro and Guahyba to take 80,000 bags of coffee for the United States, and the Acre, which sailed January 27, to take 30,000.

The report added that the Brazilian government expected as a result of the increased tonnage to the United States that facilities for the movement of return cargoes of American goods would be increased.

ht Involve Country In War ith Great Britain—Lan- sing Proposal Is Held Responsible.

ashington, D. C., Feb. 19.—Discus- of the "armed merchantmen" ques- bearing directly on the present troversy with Germany flamed up he Senate today. Senators Sterling Lodge, in vigorous speeches, sup- ed the doctrine expressed in the nt resolution of Senator Sterling, sing acquiescence in the notifica- of the Teutonic powers that armed chantmen will be sunk unwarned. riticism of the administration's for- policy and unqualified condemna- of the central powers ran through addresses. Senator Sterling ged this government with "delay- and hesitating while the world was dering" over what course would be n regarding the new Teutonic cy.

tely, he pointed out, there had been e clearing of the atmosphere." He red acquiescence in the Teutonic y would be a great mistake, and he icted that any such acquiescence d "involve consequences more se- than any that have yet disturbed rave as some of them have been." asserted it was not a remote in- nce that the present attitude of German admiralty "was encouraged ot invited by the memorandum of state department to the entente ers." He quoted a paragraph from memorandum, stating that the de- ment was impressed with the rea- bleness of the idea that an armed chantman should be considered an liary cruiser, and he asserted it tained a dangerous and vicious ciple."

enator Lodge, ranking minority nber of the foreign relations com- tee, made a speech in the Sen- today declaring that abandon- t by the United States at this of the principle that its ports open to, and its citizens free to el upon merchantmen of belliger- nations armed solely for defensive poses, would be an unneutral act a step toward war. He said it would e the United States the ally of the igerents, whose merchant marine been swept from the seas.

s late as the president's note of 13, 1915, signed by Mr. Bryan, ator Lodge said, this government gnized that American citizens were hin their "indisputed rights in tak- their ships and traveling wherever r legitimate business calls them n the high seas."

Can't Abandon Rights.

Such," he added, "has been the prac- of all nations in regard to the ed merchantmen. It seems utterly redible that this position should be any way altered now, or that our ernment should be ready to sur- der the unquestioned rights of ericans to travel or ship goods on a ligerent merchantman subject to all rules which have been established the courts and by all international horities for at least two centuries. abandonment of those rights by neutral government on the ground the invention of submarines with necessary limitations upon the ers of capture possessed by those ts, is inconceivable. Such aban- ment could only rest on the ground the rights of neutrals, the rules for centuries have been agreed up- by all nations for the protection of ocent lives upon vessels captured in must be thrown aside and dis- ed in order that a new instrument maritime destruction must not be ended in its work of death and rder. Such a doctrine is revolting every instinct of humanity, to every nciple of law and justice.

There is, however, another side to matter, which is of even graver portance. There can be no question t any act by neutral which alters ditions created by the war in an eutral act and places the neutral n the side of one belligerent or the r.

Would Be Unneutral Act.

This is eminently true of any form embargo, and there is no need that ould repeat the unanswerable ar- ment on this point embodied by Mr. nsing in his note of last August to government of Austria-Hungary. e war and the war alone has also ated conditions under which any nge at this time in the attitude ich we took officially at the outset the war in regard to armed mer- antmen would be an unneutral act. e merchantmen of one belligerent ve been swept from the seas. There- e, if we should abandon all the prin- les on this subject that we have r sustained, if we should abandon e rules laid down by Mr. Lansing in circular of September, 1914, and de- re that our ports were closed to med merchantmen, or that goods and ssengers from the United States uld not be placed on any merchant- n armed solely for self defense, our tion would affect only one belliger- t; it would alter conditions created the war and would therefore be un- utral. It would make us at once the y of the belligerents those mer- ant-men have been driven from the ean. It would be a step toward war. I cannot believe that the adminis- ation thinks for a moment of alter- the well defined position which it ok at the outset of the European war d I believe that it must stand as rmly on this question as it has on e question of the embargo. Should act otherwise, it would accept a hu- iliation and incur a danger of war om which even the boldest and most scrupulous would shrink."

BERLIN WILL NEVER ALTER EDICT, CLAIM

Believed Germany Will Stand By Armed Ship Order—Bernstorff Forwards American Demands For Guarantees.

Washington, Feb. 19.—A long dispatch from Ambassador Von Bernstorff was on its way to Berlin today, explaining that in its negotiations with Germany over submarine warfare the United States will accept nothing short of a complete agreement, covering all points for which it has contended as to assurance that the warfare in the future will be conducted in accordance with the established principles of international law

It is understood that the ambassador informed his government that the United States considers Germany's declaration of its intention to sink armed merchantmen without warning, after February 29, inconsistent with the assurances given in the Arabic cases.

Hold Up Lusitania Case.

The tentative communication designed to end the Lusitania case, still in the possession of Secretary Lansing, will not be formally accepted until such assurances regarding the future are given, although the communication, insofar as it relates to the Lusitania itself, is acceptable.

State department officials also consider that the Austro-Hungarian memorandum regarding armed ships is not in accord with the assurances given by that government in the negotiations over the sinking of the Italian ship, Ancona. Consequently, final settlement of the Ancona case, once postponed because of the doubt regarding the circumstances of the sinking of the British steamship, Persia, probably will be withheld until Austria gives assurances similar to those now required from Germany.

Say Berlin Won't Yield.

It was stated empahtically in Teutonic diplomatic circles that the Berlin foreign office would not modify the declaration of intention to sink armed ships or inform the United States the previous assurances still were binding, unless Great Britain should give assurances of some kind that a submarine which warns a British steamer, armed ostensibly for defensive purposes, would not be fired upon.

In this connection it was explained at the state department that the United States considers unarmed merchant ships and ships armed for defensive purposes to be identically the same class. Furthermore, it is held that the word "liners" as employed in the previous assurances from Germany regarding the conduct of submarine warfare, includes freight as well as passenger ships.

Not Designed to Aid Germany.

It was declared at the department that at no time had suggestions been made to the German government which would have led it to issue its latest memorandum. This answered statements made by German officials that the American memorandum to the entente allies suggesting a modus vivendi for the disarming of merchant ships was the direct cause of Germany issuing her declaration. From other sources outside the department came the information that the department had been advised informally of the German intentions in this respect.

The state department is carefully viewing from various angles the assurances given in the early days of the war by Great Britain that the guns on her merchant ships would be used only for defensive purposes. It was admitted that the department has in its possession information charging that since the assurances were given certain British merchantmen have used their armament for offensive attacks on German submarines. The information came through German sources, and is not regarded as being conclusive evidence.

Officials now are awaiting the receipt of what Germany alleges to be a copy of secret instructions given by the British government to commanders of merchant ships. This document and others appended to the text of German declaration have been mailed from Berlin.

INVESTIGATE PLOT TO DYNAMITE BIG PLANT

Suspect Said to Have Been In Communication With Foreign Consul.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 19.—Investigation of the alleged plot to dynamite the plant of the American Car & Foundry company here will be turned over to agents of the department of justice, it was learned today. It is understood that the police and prosecuting attorneys have obtained several important pieces of evidence in connection with the arrest of two youths who were formerly employed by the foundry company.

The prisoners are Otto Bartholma 21, and Ernest McCord, 23. Investigation of recent acts of the two youths and discovery of correspondence which seemingly bears their names indicates Bartholma has been corresponding with at least one consul of a nation involved in the European war.

AVIATION SERVICE DEFECTIVE, CLAIM

Robinson Produces Alleged Admission From Department Head That It Is "Rotten."

Washington, Feb. 18.—Photographic copies of correspondence between officers of the army aviation corps which Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, declared established beyond doubt the defective condition of the aviation service, was shown by him to the Senate military committee today.

A letter presented to the committee purporting to be from Colonel Reber, head of the service, to Captain Cowan, in charge at San Diego, under date of June 2, 1915, and read:

"I wish you would have your engineering department get me out some drawings for the size of sheets to be placed under the seats of aviators for alleged armor protection. I will have several of these plates made so we can say we have armored aeroplane, not that I think it was actually essential, but in order that we can meet any charge that our machines are not armored."

Captain Cowan, in a letter to Colonel Reber, declared if the "service ever came under investigation by any one from outside our own corps, it would be impossible to explain that rotten way in which the work has been handled."

Senator Robinson declared that the defective condition of equipment of the aviation service at San Diego could be established beyond doubt and that Colonel Reber had instructed Captain Cowan to keep it secret.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY FLOOD IS SPREADING

No New Breaks Have Occurred —Hundreds of Refugees Are In Need.

New Orleans, La., Feb. 19.—Preparation for taking care of hundreds of additional refugees made homeless by the flood waters still pouring through the Buckridge crevasse, were being made today at Natchez, Miss., and Vidalia, La. Rescue boats are expected at Natchez today.

Flood waters today were threatening several thousand head of cattle, mules and horses corralled on Sicily island, near St. Joseph.

Many isolated small groups of refugees in the vicinity of Newellton, have been concentrated at central points. Next to food, boats are said to be most needed in the flooded areas.

No new breaks in any of the levees were reported by the state and federal engineers. The death list today remained at three, the victims being unidentified negroes.

SCHMIDT DIES IN CHAIR FOR MURDER OF GIRL

Ossining, N. Y., Feb 19.—Hans Schmidt, former priest, was electrocuted at Sing Sing prison this morning for the murder of Anna Aumuller, September 2, 1913.

Schmidt went quietly to the death chamber, accompanied by the principal keeper and the Rev. Father Cashin, the prison chaplain. Leaving the death house, he said goodbye to those who remain.

When he entered the chamber, the guards attempted to direct him toward the chair, but Schmidt gently shook them off and insisted on addressing the 17 witnesses. The guards desisted from their efforts and with Father Cashin standing at one side and the keeper at the other, Schmidt said:

"Gentlemen: I ask forgiveness of all those I have injured or scandalized. I forgive all who have injured me. My last wish is to say goodbye to my dear old mother."

Schmidt then seated himself in the electric chair and the current was applied three times. Within a minute he was dead. He had spent the night up to midnight in praying and talking with Father Cashin and slept from midnight to 5 o'clock, when he was awakened for breakfast. He would take only a cup of coffee.

IMPRESSION ABROAD HOUSTON GETS PLACE

Washington, Feb. 18.—The impression grew in offical circles today that Secretary Houston would be transferred to the war department to succeed former Secretary Garrison.

On the way to the cabinet meeting today Mr. Houston smilingly refused to answer questions on the subject, but volunteered the information that he had completed presenting the needs of his department to the House committee on agriculture. The impression was given that his affairs were in such a condition that he could make the change.

Detroit is the first American city to adopt electric taxicabs, having 27 in use and 20 more under construction.

CHARGES HARVESTER FIRM BACKED REBELS

Counsel For International, However, Denies That Accusation Is True.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 19.—Charges that the International Harvester company had furnished money for arms and ammunition for the Ortez-Argimedo revolution against the Carranza government in Yucatan, Mex., were made today by Levy Mayer, of Chicago, in the Senate agriculture committee's investigation into an alleged monopoly for control of the sisal market.

Walter L. Fisher, former secretary of the interior, counsel for the Harvester company, displayed to the committee a bundle of bills, part of 3,500,000 pesos issued by the Yucatan commission, formed for controlling the sisal crop. He was undertaking to explain that the bills had come into the possession of the Harvester company from a purchaser, who the Yucatan planters assert represent solely the Harvester company when he was interrupted by Mayer, who declared they gave the draft to raise money for stirring up a revolution.

"That's just talk," retorted Mr. Fisher

"We will be able to show and introduce into the records the invoices and bills showing that at least part of the money went to an arms purchasing company, of New York, to buy rifles and ammunition," replied Mayer

Mr. Fisher asserted the money from the draft was given the Yucatan government in exchange for the commission's money in order to have currency to pay the sisal planters.

The Ortez-Argimedo government had control of Yucatan for a short time in 1915, and was overcome by the Carranza army.

SWEDEN PROTESTS BRITISH BLOCKADE

Asks American Cooperation to Preserve International Law on Neutral Commerce.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Another note from Sweden has been addressed to the state department through Minister Ekengren, appealing to the United States for cooperation with the Swedish government and other neutral nations to maintain the preservation of rules of international law concerning the protection of neutral commerce and navigation. Action is proposed particularly against Great Britain because of the detention of mail by that country and other aggressions against trade claimed by Sweden as unwarranted.

Secretary Lansing informed the minister, it was learned, that he could not answer the note until the controversy with Germany over the Lusitania case was settled

LATEST MOVE WILL RENDER BALTIC CLOSED INLAND SEA

London, Feb. 18.—A Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company says that according to the Snaellposten, the Swedish minister of justice has appointed a royal commission for the purpose of prohibiting the transportation along Swedish territorial waters of all such goods as are forbidden to be exported from Sweden. The prohibition is said to be directed against Danish merchants who are largely interested in transporting merchandise to Russia through Swedish waters. This step, the newspaper points out, will make the Baltic a still more closed inland sea, the conditions being especially aggravated by the new mine fields which the Germans have laid at the entrance into the Baltic. The Swedish Social Demokrat asks whether German mine laying is being carried out so as to permit small ships at least, to go around the southernmost point of Sweden. This newspaper adds that it expects Sweden to protest if any intention is shown of placing the entire Baltic traffic under German control.

RECRUITING SCANDAL REVEALED IN RUSSIA

Millions For Relief of Refugees Also Have Disappeared— Conscripts Buy Off.

Berlin, (by wireless to Sayville), Feb. 19.—A Russian newspaper publishes sensational disclosures concerning illegal exemptions from military service, says the Overseas News agency. The secretary of a recruiting committee at Petrograd and a large number of military surgeons have been arrested. They are charged with having accepted amounts ranging from 10,000 rubles up in each case.

The Russian press also reports that a Moscow committee for the relief of refugees received 200,000 rubles from the government in December of 1915. The president of the commitee, Prince Troubetskoy, stated later that 200,000 rubles more was sent to the committee in December and 700,000 rubles in January, but that this money never reached its destination. The leakage has not yet been explained.

This corruption, together with the reactionary policy of the Russian authorities, caused a strong opposition movement among members of the duma. After the downfall of Premier Goremykin, the new premier, M. Sturmer attempted to calm the storm by meeting the party leaders individually. Most of these leaders declined to receive him. He then invited the leaders to afternoon tea in order to establish harmonious social relations, but this move was equally unsuccessful, as was demonstrated by the recent convention of the party leaders.

NEWSPAPER IS FINED.

London, Feb. 18.—The proprietors of the Weekly Journal Bystander, were fined 100 pounds sterling, the former editor, Vivian Carter, 50 pounds, and Lieutenant Bernard, cartoonist, 50 pounds today for publishing a cartoon depicting a British soldier lying intoxicated beneath a tree and clasping a bottle of rum. Beneath the cartoon were the words "Reported Missing."

RUMANIA TO ENTER SOON

"Come Back" of Russia and Preparations of Allies In Balkans Encourages Course.

London, Feb. 18.—"Dispatches from Bucharest state that the capture of Erzerum by the Russians is crystallizing the decision of Rumania to intervene at an early date," says the Rome correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company

"In Rumanian official circles in sympathy with the entente, it is stated that in March there will be a concentration of Russian troops in Bessarabia for the purpose of permitting Rumania to transfer troops to the Bulgarian frontier. This transfer already is in progress.

"In the meantime the allies are hastening the transportation to Saloniki of the Serbian, Albanian and Montegrin armies, which with the French, and the British troops, will make possible an offensive movement simultaneously with the intervention of Rumania."

ENORMOUS WAR LOAN SOUGHT BY BRITAIN

New Credits to Be Asked Will Bring Total to More Than $11,000,000,000.

London, Feb. 19.—New credits of credit amounting to approximately $400,000,000 will be asked by Premier Asquith of the house of commons.

The new votes will bring up the total of war appropriations to 2,062,000,000 pounds sterling.

MAYOR JOST NOMINATED BY KANSAS CITY DEMOS

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 18.—Henry L. Jost, present mayor of Kansas City, was renominated at the democratic primary yesterday by a large majority, according to returns. The faction led by Major Jost carried 13 out of 16 city wards, the First, Second and Fifth wards being lost to R. E. O'Malley, his opponent.

NAVY UP TO DATE HOUSE COMMITTEE IS INFORMED

Washington, Feb. 18.—War plans for the navy to meet an emergency are kept well up to date at all times, Captain McKean, of the bureau of operations, today told the House naval committee. His statement was affirmed by a letter from Admiral Dewey to Chairman Padgett.

Captain McKean saw no benefit from creation of a general staff.

HEROIC MAID RESCUES FAMILY FROM FLAMES

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 18.—The lives of eight persons were saved by Anna Nelles, a maid, who fought her way through smoke and flames and aroused the family and guests of former State Senator Napoleon L'Herault, whose home was destroyed by fire early today. No one was seriously injured. Two small children were dropped from upper windows into the arms of neighbors.

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is ofttimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

Aided Passenger in Peril.

A notable instance of the kindness of those in charge of trans-Atlantic liners developed recently aboard the liner Ryndam, which was stopped in midocean and held on an even keel while the appendix of a passenger was removed. Besides the ship's surgeon, and the captain who stopped the ship, an American dentist co-operated by administering the anesthetic.

House Memorial to Poe.

In what was once known as Fordham, a suburb of New York and now included in Greater New York, stands the humble shingled house known as the Poe cottage. Here Edgar Allan Poe, poet, story teller and critic, lived from 1844 until 1849. It was during this period that he wrote one of his most widely known poems, "The Raven." Twice within recent years the Poe cottage has been moved a short distance because of the encroachments of new buildings. It is now located in Poe park. After many years of activity by the West Chester Historical society, the cottage is now maintained as a memorial to the poet and a museum in which manuscripts and souvenirs of the poet are preserved.

MAKES LAUGH PRODUCING PILLS

Physician Says Cheerfulness is Best Cure Posible for Illness.

A famous physician once said that over half of all who call in the doctor would get well without any medicine if the doctor only keeps them cheerful, that many of the remaining half needed only a bare pill—their imagination would do the rest.

Imaginary ills, or ills produced by the power of the mind, often baffle physicians. We all know how some people in reading patent medicine literature become seized with all the symptoms they find described. And it is largely in the cases of people like these that patent medicines have wrought their cures, for no one can discount that many imaginative people have had beneficial effects from such nostrums.

It is largely in imaginary ills similar to those I have mentioned that mental science has worked its good. It has also effected cures in ills other than imaginary, but the sickness was largely brought on through fear or some other wrong thinking and the cure was worked by the suggestive influence of [illegible] over [illegible]. Even if these functional diseases are purely imaginary, they cause the patient as much pain and incapacitate him as much for work as any organic disease. It is a physician's duty to heal the sick, whether it is a sick body or a sick mind. Physical disorders need physical treatment, but mental disorders need mental treatment. A physician who would neglect the mind while treating the body would not be doing his full duty. Probably few movements in the history of mankind have been of more vital significance than that now on foot in America to put psychotherapy to effective use. And it is largely to physicians that the world now owes the usefulness of psychotherapy, for they have had a vast lot to do with bringing it to the place it now holds in science.—Woman's World

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK, THICK, GLOSSY

Look years younger! Try Grandma's recipe of Sage and Sulphur and nobody will know.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if your head is dull or aching; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing before breakfast. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief—no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed up with a cold or pasty catarrh.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right into the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

'HUNCH' REVEALS RICH DEPOSITS

GRIPS INSPECTOR AND MAKES HIM STAKE CLAIM IN PLACE THOUGHT WORTHLESS

As Result Independence Vein in Colorado Came in.

Most mining men have unbounded faith in a tenderfoot's luck, and in "hunches" in seeking deposits of ore. The discovery of the Independence mine in Colorado, famous for its unusual richness, was the result of one of these strange psychological tips or whatever they may be called.

In the early 90s Bob Womack, an industrious miner took up a prospect in the vicinity of Cripple Creek, Colo. His capital consisted only of a strong body and horse sense. After working on his prospect for a short time he asked W. S. Stratton, an experienced prospector whose credit was good in those parts to join him in working the prospect. At length Stratton went to see what Womack had to offer and was well pleased with the showing. He found the vein wide and strong and well mineralized. When samples were crushed and panned Stratton estimated from the showing of free gold that the vein would average about $10 to the ton.

Womack's prospect appealed to him as being just the thing he had been looking for. He had been frozen out of a good mine once because a great deal of money was required to equip it and after that experience had resolved to undertake no more mining ventures with wealthy men. Womack's prospect, he thought, could be worked by himself and Womack independently of outsiders. He figured that with his credit and some money he had saved he could buy and erect a small stamp mill which they could operate themselves to treat free milling ores.

With some samples reduced and loaded on his horse Stratton set out soon after his visit for Colorado Springs, Womack going with him for part of the distance. At length they reached a big outcrop of quartz and the two men sat down on the bowlders scattered about to discuss their plans for the future. As they talked the rocks around them attracted Womack's attention and he asked Stratton what he thought of the outcrop they were sitting on. Stratton replied that it was nothing but "bull quartz" which was worthless.

The conversation turned to other matters and neither thought or said anything more about the quartz. Stratton continued on his way to Colorado Springs and Womack went back to his cabin. On the 3d of July Stratton received his assays and was much cast down and discouraged to find a showing of only $4 per ton instead of $10 as he had expected.

Early on the morning of July 4 he awoke, his mind completely filled with the thought that he had made a big mistake by not locating that bull quartz vein. He could not shake off the odd notion and his efforts to go to sleep again were futile. The "hunch" was so strong he could think of nothing but that outcrop of quartz. He entered enthusiastically into the Fourth of July celebration, thinking that in so doing he could get rid of the overmastering conviction that he ought to go and stake the prospect.

All his efforts to shake it off, however, were unavailing and at length he yielded to it. Going to a livery stable he hired a horse and set out for Cripple Creek. It was night when he arrived at the outcrop and as he thought over the matter he began to feel like a fool for having ridden thirty-five miles simply because an unaccountable fancy had suggested his doing so. Taking a short cut to Womack's cabin he made the excuse that he had come to deliver the assay returns.

After he had partaken of the coffee and bacon which Womack warmed up for him the "hunch" came back and Stratton asked if anyone had located that big vein where they had stopped to rest and talk several days before. Womack replied that no one had and that no one was likely to because it was no good. Stratton then announced his purpose of putting a stake into it anyway and Womack agreed to help him do a little digging.

Taking Womack with the two men at once walked through the moonlight to the quartz outcrop and located two claims in Stratton's name. They called one the "Independence" in honor of the date and the other they named the Washington, because he was the father of independence. Stratton began sinking but the work during the first year was very discouraging. Then he struck a rich vein and the Independence at once leaped into fame.—Pathfinder.

It Made Him Laugh.

GETS $1,000,000 FOR HIS KINDNESS

American Who Aided Relative in South Africa During Boer War Rewarded

At the time of the Boer war, Alpha Gifford went to South Africa in search of adventure. With his brother, he went to visit Tom Gifford, a distant relative, whose mining possessions lay in a district where the fighting was most severe.

While the brothers were guests at their relative's home marauders stormed the mining plant and it was only by Alpha Gifford's aid that the property was saved. Before the trouble was all over, the wealthy mine owner became seriously ill and young Gifford nursed him until he recovered, himself undergoing severe hardships because of the condition then obtaining as a result of the war.

When his relative had recovered young Gifford still hungering for adventure traveled around the world. Several years later the elder Gifford placed in trust for the two brothers the sum of $25,000 with the provision that it was not to be disposed of until the former's death.

A little more than a year ago Gifford enlisted as a member of the United States Marine corps and at the opening of the exposition at San Francisco he was among the men sent to the exposition marine barracks. A few months later a letter came from his mother in New York, informing him of the death of the wealthy relative in Africa and of the fact that the old man's fortune amounting to $1,000,000 had been bequeathed to him in consequence of the kindness shown the mine owner in the days of strife and danger.

Gifford's comrades were somewhat in awe of him when they learned of his great wealth and expected him to quit the marine corps at once. He told them, however, that his inheritance was in the hands of competent persons and that though a millionaire he would remain in the government's service until his enlistment expired and then undertake to make proper use of the fortune as his benefactor had desired.—The Pathfinder

EVERY HOUSEHOLDER CAN HAVE OWN LIGHT PLANT

Small Water Engine and Dynamo Illuminate 18 Lamps 10 Hours at 7 Cents Cost.

A machine that will enable every householder to have his own electric light plant in the cellar of his home has been invented by a Milwaukee man. The machine turns by water power, and its inventor claims that a dynamo providing eighteen lamps with electric current can be operated at a cost of between 6 and 7 cents for a solid ten hour day.

Thru his machine which he has in partial operation in his home, he maintains that the week's washing can be done at an approximate cost of 1 cent.

"My engine, as I call it, is operated by water power," said the inventor. "I do not need much water to run it, either. For instance, this engine now in use makes 965 revolutions per minute and yet the stream of water that operates it is only three thirty-seconds of an inch in diameter. I get my power direct from an ordinary water faucet.

"My compound engine by simply pushing a lever, will increase the flow of water sufficiently to produce 1,800 revolutions a minute, thereby doubling the power.

"The engines cost about $9 each. Dynamos will cost from $16 to $18 each, so that the initial outlay is not large. The space occupied is negligible the engine measuring only 17x18 inches, in its case, which is just a fraction over two inches thick.

"I have attached it to my turning apparatus, and I find it works admirably. By its use I can bore the forty-four holes necessary for constructing a screen door in less than ten minutes. I can attach it direct to an emery wheel, and I find I can get as good results as in a machine shop. All of this I can do by water power direct, and do not need a dynamo."

CHANGES FILING SYSTEM

New Plan Offers Means to Locate Card Quickly.

For sanitary reasons as well as for convenience and efficiency, a card index filing system, arranged according to a new plan, has been introduced for office purposes. The chief points in its favor are that it offers a means of locating a card quickly and without allowing the record slips to be fingered or soiled.

This keeps the cards in a clean condition and prevents them from being worn or contaminated with filth because of frequent reference. The filing drawer is fitted with a plate glass cover that protects its contents from dust. Passing through the center of it at the bottom is a small rod on which the perforated cards are threaded.

On another rod extending along one side of the drawer is fitted a sliding device which acts as a finder. In locating a specific card, the operator makes use of this mechanical hand, which, when moved to and fro, turns the cards forward one at a time. The reading is done through the glass, which is intended to be removed only for the insertion of new cards or the removal or correction of old ones.—Popular Mechanics.

A Wisconsin inventor's truck, with which one man can pick up and move a piano is featured by a wide roller instead of small wheels.

GO GUNNING TO CAPTURE WHALES

HUNTERS SHOOT HARPOON INTO MONSTERS WHICH TRY TO ESCAPE

Net Is Stretched at One Point in Deep Water to Trap Fish

Whaling is now to be classed with the decaying industries. The ceaseless pursuit of the monster cetacean, carried on with relentless energy through a half dozen decades in all of the seven seas, has driven the whale from his accustomed haunts in the warmer seas and indeed also from those in arctic waters not entirely ice closed during the most of the year.

Gone are the schools of whales that up to thirty years ago sported in the warm blue waters of Polynesia, in the rolling surges which thunder ceaselessly around the Cape of Good Hope and further north even to the Mozambique channel and the warmer Indian ocean. Sadly thinned also are the great schools of whales that from the early days of creation even until the 80s of the last century made their home in the frigid waters of the south New Zealand coast and of the boisterous wind lashed southern ocean.

It was in this region that to the first sixty years of the nineteenth century the squat brigs and stanch barks of Boston, Salem and other New England ports beat their way battling along the Atlantic surges and fierce south gales as they ran their easting down in the weary voyage to round Cape Horn.

A lusty race were these American whale men and and they have left their mark on the aboriginals of the country. These natives, the Maoris, were strong and willing workers. Theirs no lotus eater's existence as that of the savages in the citrus and banana groves of Polynesia, 1,000 miles to the north.

With a decrease of whales along the coast came a gradual withdrawal of the whaling ships. There was no corresponding increase of prices, as might be expected with the disappearance of the whales, steel taking the place of whalebone and mineral oil being a cheap and at the same time good substitute for that of the whale. However, at favored shore stations whaling has thriven continually and during the proper season the big fish always appear in certain chosen localities.

At one place on the northeastern coast near the harbor of Wanaruru there is a precipitous rock some 300 feet off shore. The water between rock and mainland is unobstructed and thirty fathoms deep. Many years ago it was noticed that whales liked this place, large numbers often quietly followed one another through this passage.

Close observation disclosed the fact that there was method in their actions. Whale after whale would turn on its back and rub itself against the sharp steep rock forming the side of the island, this action being taken to get rid of a huge collection of marine growth, barnacles and such which had fastened themselves to its back and sides and were growing fat on its flesh. There seemed no other way of detaching these bloodthirsty boarders except by rubbing them off against the rocks but the right kind of rocks situated in deep water were not easily found, hence the popularity of this particular locality with the mighty cetaceans.

The feasibility of stretching a net of wire cable across the 300 foot passage to trap, or more properly ensein the whales, was first considered twenty years ago and was successful almost from the first. There was a whole lot doing when a whale found himself entangled in the net. The one drawback was there seemed no way of anchoring the cables, and many a whale carried the inch steel cable out to sea, causing the fishermen great trouble and much expense for its recovery.

Of recent years the netting of whales has given place to shooting, a much more efficient method. A gun into which a harpoon instead of a bullet is loaded being mounted on the bows of a small steel built steamer. These vessels average but about 500 tons in size, but are built stout and strong, sufficiently seaworthy to ride out the sudden gales that sweep the New Zealand coast.

Finally this was remedied to a considerable extent by having great buoys attached to the top cable and the net fastened to the shore with chains [illegible] strong to keep it in place before the whale became entangled.

This sometimes brings the whaler into great peril, because at times the whale is shot quite close to the sheer cliffs, rugged crags and protruding rocks of the mainland or between the islets and jagged reefs of the current swept off shore groups of islands. When not struck in a vital part the whale sets off with the ship in tow at the rate of many miles an hour, to the great peril of the vessel and its crew, and once in a while it becomes necessary to cut the line and let the fish escape, as the powerful engines of the whaler going full speed astern, cannot stop its mad dash into rock filled waters impassable to the vessel. —Philadelphia Record.

THE EVIDENCE IN THE CASE

Results Following Settlement Show That Conditions in Western Canada Are Highly Satisfactory.

Until a few years ago Mr Henry Lohmann lived at Effingham, Ill He thought he would better his condition in a new country, where he would have wider scope for his farming operations. It would not seem essential to refer to Mr Lohmann, at this particular time, as of German blood, but for the fact that so many false statements have gone out as to ill treatment of Germans in Canada.

Writing from Willmont, Sask, under date of January 30, 1916, Mr Lohmann says

We are perfectly satisfied in this country and doing well up here.

I bought a half section of land and took up a homestead, my three sons also took homesteads, two of them buying each 160 acres of land as well I sold my homestead, and I and one of my sons own a threshing outfit.

"The crop this year was good, the oats went 80 to 90 bushels per acre, and wheat went 40 to 50 bushels and the price is fair"

Sam Morrow, of Millet, Alta., in writing to Mr J M MacLachlan, Canadian government agent at Watertown, S D, says "I am well pleased with the country The climate is better than I ever thought it could be so far north, ideal climate for stock. I have some colts and cattle that have not been inside of a stable in four years I consider this a fine country for mixed farming I know of farmers around here who had 42 bushels of barley to the acre and 55 bushels of oats to the acre"

Jacob Goetz of Piapot, Sask, had 43 acres of wheat from which he got 1,200 bushels, and got an average of 93 bushels of oats to the acre.

Golden Prairie, Sask, is a district largely settled by South Dakotans Horace Blake is one of those He says 'The crops of 1915 were immense"

Wheat in his locality went from 40 to 55 bushels per acre, oats about 80 bushels on an average One hundred bushels of potatoes were grown on a quarter of an acre of land, twelve potatoes weighed 30 pounds. His horses run out all winter, and come in fat He raised excellent corn, and fattened hogs on it He concludes an interesting letter by saying "There are schools in every district The people here are most all hustlers and are fast pushing to the front When I first came up here on almost every half section stood a little 12x14 shack, now almost everyone has real modern houses and barns."

TURKS STILL WORRY BRITISH FORCES IN MESOPOTAMIA

The British army which last year advanced up the Tigris river to within a few miles of the ancient city of Bagdad, and then was badly defeated by the Turks, is now at Kut-el-Amara. A relieving force under General Aylmer is trying to reach the besieged British army at Kut-el-Amara, and recently reported a victory over the Turks near Sheikh Saad. The two British armies have not joined, according to latest reports.

SEPTIC SORE THROAT.

What is septic sore throat? If it is so important why is it that nobody heard of it until recently? These are hard questions to answer Septic sore throat starts with a high fever, headache, and general aching. The throat is sore. When the throat is examined it is found to be swollen and rather evenly red The throat looks very much like a scarlet fever sore throat, and when the sick person is a child who has never had scarlet fever that disease is suspected But the scarlet fever rash does not appear A little later white patches like those of follicular tonsilitis appear. By this time the glands of the neck have begun to swell and the patient complains of profound weakness.

These are very good signs of diphtheria and you suspect that your child has that disease. But by this time you have one or several reports from the laboratory to the effect that there is no diphtheria The laboratory reports show streptococci Already scarlet fever has been ruled out and now diphtheria is discarded

But the patient is evidently sick with some grave disease The weakness is all out of proportion to what you would expect from an ordinary sore throat. Probably by this time you have discovered that the glands of the neck are forming abscesses You begin to suspect septic sore throat. About this time you begin to hear of other cases of sore throat. Your milk man tells you that several people on his milk route are sick When you ask him what is the trouble he does not know for certain He has heard that they have sore throat. Some have had their throats lanced, but nobody seems certain what the disease is

That the disease is epidemic is about the best diagnostic point that has been brought out There is no way of diagnosing a single case of septic sore throat with certainty Suppuration of the glands is suggestive, but there are other diseases which cause the glands to suppurate The same can be said of profound prostration But when sore throat with these symptoms begins to be epidemic it is not hard to make the diagnosis

By this time the health department has become interested They find a certain variety of streptococci in all the throat They find that the milk supply of all the people with this sore throat is the same Finally they run down the milk supply which is a fault. They find that some person with septic sore throat or who has had it recently has been milking the cows or handling the milk

Is it a new disease? Probably not. As a means of prompt diagnosis for the individual case and control of epidemic, Dr Kelly says, in the American Journal of Public health every sore throat should be reported to the health department.

How Tartars Went to China.

(From Marco Polo's "Voyages and Travels," Chapter 20.)

The province of Mangi is the richest and most famous that is founded in the east; and 1269 was governed by a certain king called Fanfur, who was richer and mightier than any who had reigned there for 100 years, but a man peaceable and charitable, so beloved of his subjects that thereby, and by the strength of the country, he seemed invincible. It was from a persuasion of this that the king, as well as the people lost the use and exercise of war and arms. All the city was encompassed with ditches full of water He held in pay no horses (cavalry), because he feared nobody, and in process of time, the king betaking himself to pleasure more than was fit, employed his whole time in delights. He maintained justice and preserved the peace, no man dared offend his neighbor and disturb the peace for fear of severe and impartial punishment, so that artificers would often leave their shops full of wares open by night, and yet none would presume to go into them Travelers and strangers walked safely day and night through that whole kingdom, fearing no man The king himself was also merciful toward the poor, and did not overlook them that were oppressed with necessity, or punished with penury Besides every year he took up 20,000 young infants cast off by their mothers, who, through poverty, were not able to keep them, which he brought up, and put them when they were grown up, to some trade, marrying the young men with the maids, which he had in like manner so educated

Cubiai-Kahn was of a different disposition from Fanfur, and delighted only in wars and conquests, and to make himself great, he levied an army of horse and foot, and made one named Chinsan-Baian, i. e. 100 eyes, general thereof; he therefore coming with his army and a fleet to the Province of Mangi, first summoned the city Coiganzu, to yield obedience to his emperor, who refused the same; he departed without any assault given to the city, and required the same of the second city, which likewise refusing, he marched forward to the third and fourth and received the like answer of them all; but he assaulted the next with great courage and vanquished the same by force, and slew every creature of what sex or age soever within, which so frightened and terrified the rest that they all presently yielded. The great Kahn sent out another great army after the former, with both of which armies he marched against the chief city, Quinsai, where the king of Mangi resided, who, being mightily terrified as never having seen any war, fled with his wealth on board ships he had prepared to certain impregnable islands in the ocean where he afterward died. * * * The queen was sent unto the court of the great Kahn (emperor) and was most honorably received by him and maintained like a queen.

By this route came that badge of servitude, the "pig tail."

PASSING OF THE DISH TOWEL.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

It is really passing strange that the dish towel has not gone long before—gone with the open milk container, unwrapped bread, and other germ and dust carriers But the recent statement made by a scientific expert showing that the ordinary dish towel as it is found in the homes of even the most fastidious housewives, is brim full of germs before its day's work is done, is just about the last charge made against the dish towel as a kitchen institution

These scientists tell us something that, shorn of its technical wording sounds like this The air, especially in warm places, is teeming with germs and bacteria of various sorts at all times. And these little trouble breeders are bent on one thing—namely, to find a home The dish towel by the time you have dried one set of dishes with it, and have hung it up near the kitchen stove to dry, is just about the coziest little nesting place a homeless germ could find It is damp and warm and full of minute particles of food substance The butcher boy and the ice man and the man to take the reading of the gas and electric meter all drop around in the course of the morning, all bringing in on their breath a new and interesting supply of homeless germs who, like the skilled house hunters that they are, immediately make tracks for the dish towel

In practice almost no housewife, much less the domestic whom you employ, washes all tea towels between each meal. It would mean an impossible expense of time and energy And no ordinary washing is sufficient to dislodge the germs in the towels Nothing short of a thorough scalding will really sterlize them Usually, however, the towels that have been hanging up since breakfast are used to dry the luncheon dishes and then it is that countless little germs have an opportunity to take a new lease this time on the plate or cup and saucer or knife or fork that is to used for tomorrows meal

The very silly part about the use of dish towels is that it is not at all essential, say household authorities A simpler, cleaner way can easily be established in any household regime All that is necessary is some sort of protected drying rack, for to permit dishes to dry in the open would almost be as bad as to dry them with towels so dried However, scalded dishes dry amazingly quickly In the case of glass dishes the method of rack drying does not always accomplish all it should by way of bringing out the luster of the glass, but for the glassware paper towels or clean tissue paper can be used after the glasses have dried first after their rinsing

Did Smith Lie About Pocahontas?

Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, in Harper's Magazine

To the student of lies the interesting question about John Smith is whether his life was or was not saved by Pocahontas. Upon that point he had the best of opportunity to tell a thrilling tale in his book "The True Relation," written in Virginia and published in England in 1608 Among his thrilling experiences he there describes a little excursion to the Chickahominy, where he falls in with hostile Indians, becomes the target for 20 or 30 arrows, and is captured by 200 men only because he gets mired in a swamp. Being brought before their Indian king, although Smith knows not a word of this tribe's language, the captain says, "I presented him with a compasse dial, describing by my best meanes the use thereof, whereat he so amazedly admired, as he suffered me to proceed in a discourse of the roundness of the earth, the course of the sunne, moone, starres and plannets." Eventually he is brought before "their emperor," the great Opechan Conough, commonly called Powhatan. Efforts are made to kill him by Indians whose relatives he has slain, but the guards save him In due course of time, after "describing to him the territories of Europe which were subject to our great king whose subject I was, the innumerable multitude of his ships, I have him to understand the noyes of trumpets and terrible manner of fighting" Smith is then sent home with four men, one carrying his "gonne and knapsacke," while the other two were "loded with bread."

Elsewhere in the book he mentions the Princess Pocahontas, daughter of Powhatan. This lady was only a girl—perhaps 12 years old—and another contemporary, Strachey, tells curious tales of the maiden's fondness for turning cartwheels through the streets of Jamestown About the time Pocahontas married John Rolfe and went to England (1616), Smith published a little book in which he says

"After some six weeks (elsewhere he makes it four weeks) fatting amongst these salvage countries, at the minute of my execution, she hazarded the beating out of her own braines to save mine

Then, in 1624, Smith published another book, the General Historie, in which his memory seems suddenly to have unlimbered for he rewrites his narrative, adds 100 to his earlier enumeration of 200 anniversaries, additionally remembers that the Indians brought out a bag of gunpowder which they proposed to plant next spring; and is brought before Powhatan. With many new details he describes that potentate and at last comes to the most exciting scene in the drama. You can see it all! The dusky emperor, R. C.; Princess Pocahontas, L. C., the hero, before the footlights bound, but undaunted his eyes flashing defiance.

'A long consultation was held, but the conclusion was two great stones were brought before Powhatan, then, as many as could, layd hands on him, dragged him to them, and thereon layd his head, and being ready with their clubs to beat out his braines, Pocahontas, the king's dearest daughter, when no entreaty could prevaille got his head in her armes, and layd her owne upon his to save him from death; whereat the emperour was contented he should live"

No sympathetic person would ask why the eye witness and the chief person in this wondrous episode should have neglected for eight years to put it into his publications, or why it should have taken him 16 years more to recall the affecting details. Professor Edward Channing impales John Smith on the barbed sentence, "The utter unreliability of Smith's account, entirely apart from the Pocahontas story" But why not be more trustful? Who knew more about his own adventures than John Smith? Why brand as a falsehood a tale which has entertained millions of young Americans? The proof is somewhat inferential It seems certain that Smith was a captive, and, if he was condemned to be brained instead of boiled, what more natural than that Pocahontas should have interposed her tender person between the uplifted club and the former favorite of Charatza Tragabigzanda? John Smith is a fact, Pocahontas is a fact, and we believe some of the things that John Smith tells us about Pocahontas. Why make distinctions? Perhaps he was only overcome by the familiar journalistic desire to sell his books, and he may have been the inventor of the process of saving something especially dreadful for the 8 p m edition, which is sold on the streets at 4 30

KEEP CLOTHES PINS OUT OF YOUR MOUTH

BOOKS, GOOD COMPANY.

John Alfred Langford.

As friends and companions, as teachers and consolers, as recreators and amusers, books are always with us, and always ready to respond to our wants. We can take them with us in our wanderings, or gather them round us at our firesides. In the lonely wilderness and the crowded city, their spirit will be with us, giving a meaning to the seemingly confused movements of humanity, and peopling the desert with their own bright creations.

STRONG APPEAL OF THE BELGIAN BISHOPS

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Few documents that the war has brought forth reflect the true nobility of those who have suffered great wrongs in silence, until silence seemed cowardice, and have the intense pathos that is revealed in every line of the appeal of the Roman Catholic episcopate of Belgium to their brethren of Germany. The Belgians ask for a hearing and for fair play, and demand of the Catholics in Germany that they shall no longer believe the atrocious official calumnies hurled at Belgium, "truly the kingdom of grief," by the German government in its various official publications.

The eloquent appeal, whose language would turn a heart of stone, is signed by Cardinal Mercier, archbishop of Malines; Anthony, bishop of Ghent; Gustave J., bishop of Bruges, Thomas Louis, bishop of Namur; Martin Hubert, bishop of Liege, Amedee Crooy, appointed bishop of Tournai Every effort has been made by the German government to prevent its simple recital of the colossal outrages against faith and civilization perpetrated by the German armies in Belgium from being made public in Germany or anywhere else. In adjuring their members of their own communion in Germany not to accept the official slanders by which the German war office added insult to injury and attributed atrocities to the Belgian as proved, and in denying these alleged acts of barbarism, the appeal says that the priests and prelates of Belgium all refute these tales and they solemnly declare that the dilemma before the Catholic clergy and hierachy of Germany, if they still profess to accept and inculcate the lies, is that they "must consider the entire Belgian clergy as perjured." Unless they do that, the appeal says they "will have to accept, and the civilized world will not be able to refuse, the conclusions of this solemn and decisive investigation"

The document not only shows how Belgium has been dragooned by the German army, but how the highest clergy of Germany, complacently accepting the German government's statements of every controverted issue in the case of Belgium as gospel truth, have done their co-religionists in Belgium a horrible wrong. The Belgians have not only been wronged but refused redress, since, as the appeal notes, they have been denied a hearing again and again, while the German government and the German clergy, accepting the official version as final, have published their views broadcast. This contrast is set out as follows in the appeal:

> Now, whereas you have all liberty to flood neutral countries with your publications, we are imprisoned and reduced to silence. Hardly are we permitted to lift up our voices inside our churches; the preaching in them is checked off; that is, parodied by paid spies; protestations of conscience are qualified revolts against public authorities; what we write is stopped at the frontier as contraband. So you alone enjoy freedom of speech and of the pen.

Sent out at last to protest against an intolerable situation, just what effect this noble appeal will have on those to whom it is addressed is not clear. Naturally, while sent to the prelates of Germany it is meant for the head of the church of Rome and for the whole world. Judging, however, from what the appeal itself notes of the almost callous indifference of the German bishops to the mournful plight of their brethren in Belgium, it will fall on ears officially deaf by order of the German government. It can not, however, but have profound effect on the vatican, and will impress all outside of German influences as one of the most moving historic appeals for simple justice ever made.

FRITTERS.

Two parts of liquid to two of flour should be allowed for fritters. That is a proportion that does not vary, no matter how many other ingredients are added, unless one of them be thick, like cereal.

Salt or leaven—baking powder or soda or eggs—are also needed And any flavoring agents that one fancies may be added.

The essential about cooking fritters is deep fat of the proper heat. Test it with a cube of bread. It should brown in 40 seconds for a cooked mixture and in 60 for an uncooked mixture.

Apple fritters may be made in several ways. One way is to cut small sections of cored and peeled apple, to dip them into fritter batter, to cook them for a minute, to drain them and then roll them in sugar and cinnamon, or, if they are to be eaten with meat, to sprinkle them lightly with nutmeg. Another way to make them is to boil, very slowly, pared and cored apples, and then, when they are tender and cool to fill the core cavities with a firm jam or jelly. Dip into fritter batter and brown.

There are several good vegetable fritters. Cauliflower, boiled until tender, can be broken apart and dipped in fritter batter, browned, and served hot, and boiled lengths of celery can be prepared in the same way.

There are many sorts of cereal fritters that can be served, with honey or syrup, for dessert. A recipe for cereal fritters calls for half a cupful of milk, two cupfuls of cooked cereal, two beaten eggs, a teaspoonful of baking powder and two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch. A little salt should be added, and, if the fritters are for dessert, little sugar. Nutmeg may be added rice or hominy fritters that are to be served with meat.

Jam fritters are good. To make them spread thin slices of bread and butter with jam, press two slices together, cut into neat strips or squares, dip in fritter batter and brown.

Cheese fritters can be made in the same way—spread bread with melted or soft cheese, press two slices together, dip in batter and brown.

Canned fruit can be made into fritters. It should be drained, the pieces dipped into batter, browned, and served with the syrup.

When the Magician Quit.

From the Detroit News.

Prof. Presto Chango, the world famous magician, had entertained the people in the theater for half an hour. He had taken a pair of rabbits out of his assistant's coat pocket; he had taken a flock of doves out of a crumpled handkerchief; he had taken a cluster of flowers and a potted plant out of the folds of a fan. The climax came when the gaping crowd saw him take a horse out of a hat.

As the deafening applause subsided a little Prof. Presto Chango walked forward to the footlights and held up his hand for silence.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced, "this is not really the close of my program. I will now do any trick or set of tricks that you may suggest. Simply tell me what you want me to do. Speak up, somebody."

Near the center of the house a gray haired man with a long, white beard arose.

"There's somethin' I want to see done, young feller," he said. "Ever since I was a boy I've wanted to see it done. But I'm afraid you can't do it. It's a hard one."

Prof. Presto Chango smiled.

"I like the difficult tricks," he said. "What is it, Uncle, that you wish to see me do, that you have so long wanted to see done?"

"Well," the old man cried shrilly, "what I want is to see you take the tariff out of politics."

Attendants led the writhing professor from the stage.

HAVE ROSY CHEEKS AND FEEL FRESH AS A DAISY—TRY THIS

To see the tinge of healthy blood in your face, to see your skin clearer and clearer, to wake up without a headache, backache, coated tongue or a nasty breath, in fact feel your best, day in and day out, try inside-bathing every morning one week.

Before breakfast each day drink a glass of real hot water with a spoonful of limestone phosphate as a harmless means of washing the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and toxins; thus clearing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the fermentations, gases and acidity, gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost very little at your druggist or general store, but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the liver and internal organs. Those who are subject to constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, rheumatic twinges, and those whose skin is sallow and complexion pallid, are assured that one week of inside-bathing will have them both looking and feeling better in every way.—Adv.

TAKE A GLASS OF SALTS WHEN BLADDER BOTHERS

Harmless to Flush Kidneys and Neutralize Irritating Acids—Splendid for the System.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted author. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate, inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer knows constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control the action. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.—Adv.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XVII—(Continued)

"It didn't do much good," I said, gloomily, "and it has ended in putting Swain in jail."

I happened to glance at her hands, folded in her lap, and saw that they were fairly biting into each other.

"In jail!" she whispered, and now there was no color in her face.

"Forgive me, Miss Vaughan," I said, hastily. "That was brutal. I forgot you didn't know."

"Tell me!" she panted. "Tell me! I can stand it! Oh, you foolish man, didn't you see—I was trying to nerve myself—I was trying to find out. * * *"

I caught the hands that were bruising themselves against each other and held them fast.

"Miss Vaughan," I said, "listen to me and believe that I am telling you the whole truth The coroner's jury returned a verdict that Swain was guilty of your father's death As the result of that verdict, he has been taken to the Tombs. But the last words he said to me before the officers took him away were that he was innocent, and that he had no fear"

"Surely," she assented eagerly, "he should have no fear. But to think of him in prison—it tears my hear!"

"Don't think of it that way!" I protested. "He is bearing it bravely—when I saw him last he was smiling."

"But the stain—the disgrace."

"There will be none; he shall be freed without stain—I will see to that."

"But I cannot understand," she said, "how the officers of the law could blunder so."

"All of the evidence against him," I said, "was purely circumstantial, except in one particular He was in the grounds at the time the murder was committed, your father had quarreled with him, and it was possible that he had followed you and your father to the house, perhaps not knowing clearly what he was doing, and that another quarrel had occurred But that amounted to nothing Young men like Swain, even when half unconscious, don't murder old men by strangling them with a piece of curtain cord To suppose that Swain did so would be absurd, but for one thing- no, for two things."

"What are they"" she demanded.

"One is that the handkerchief that you had tied about his wrist was found beside your father's chair -but it was not upon that the jury made its finding"

"What was it, then"'

"It was this Swain swore positively that at no time during the evening had he touched your father"

"Yes, yes and that was true. He could not have touched him."

"And yet," I went on slowly, "prints of Swain's blood stained fingers were found on your father's robe"

"But," she gasped, pulling her hands away from me and wringing them together, "how could that be? That is impossible!"

"I should think so, too," I agreed, "if I had not seen the prints with my own eyes."

"You are sure they were his—you are sure?"

"I am afraid there can be no doubt of it," and I told her how Sylvester had proved it.

She listened motionless, mute scarcely breathing, searching my face with distended eyes. Then, suddenly, her face changed, she rose from her chair, flew across the room, opened a bookcase and pulled out a bulky volume bound in vellum. She turned the pages rapidly, giving each of them only a glance. Suddenly she stopped, and stared at a page, her face livid.

"What is it?" I asked, and hastened to her.

"It is the book of finger prints," she gasped. "A great many—oh, a great many—my father collected and studied them for years. He believed—I do not know what he believed"

She paused, struggling for breath

"Well," I said, "what then?"

"Mr. Swain's was among them," she went on, in the merest whisper "They were here—page 230—see, there is an index—'Swain, F., page 230'"

She pointed at the entry with a shaking finger

"Well," I said again, striving to understand, "what of it?"

"Look!" she whispered, holding the book toward me, "that page is no longer there! It has been torn out!"

Then, with a convulsive shudder, she closed the book, thrust it back into its place, and ran noiselessly to the door leading to the hall. She swept back the curtain and looked out.

"Oh, is it you, Annie?" she said, and I saw the Irish maid standing just outside. "I was about to call you. Please tell Henry to bring those tables and chairs in from the lawn."

"Yes, ma'am," said the girl, and turned away.

Miss Vaughan stood looking after her for a moment, then dropped the curtain and turned back again into the room. I saw that she had mastered her emotion, but her face was still dead white.

As for me, my brain was whirling. What if Swain's finger prints were missing from the book? What connection could that have with the bloodstains on the robe? What was the meaning of Miss Vaughan's emotion? Who was it she had expected to find listening at the door? I could only stare at her, and she smiled slightly as she saw my look.

"But what is it you suspect?" I stammered. "I don't see . . ."

"Neither do I," she broke in. "But I am trying to see—I am trying to see!" and she wrung her hands together

The disappearance of the prints seems plain enough to me," said Hinman, coming forward.

"Mr. Vaughan no doubt tore them out himself, when he took his violent dislike to Swain. The act would be characteristic of a certain form of mania. Nobody else would have any motive for destroying them; in fact, no one else would dare mutilate a book he prized so highly."

Miss Vaughan seemed to breathe more freely, but her intent inward look did not relax.

"At least that is an explanation?" I agreed.

"It is the true explanation," said Hinman, confidently. "Can you suggest any other, Miss Vaughan?"

"No," she said slowly; "no," and walked once or twice up and down the room. Then she seemed to put the subject away from her. "At any rate, it is of no importance. I wish to speak to you about my father's funeral, Dr. Hinman," she went on, in another tone. "It is to be tomorrow."

"Yes—at 11 o'clock. I have made such arrangements as I could without consulting you. But there are some things you will have to tell me"

15

"What are they?"

"Do you desire a minister?"

"No, he would not have wished it. If there is any priest, it will be his own"

"You mean the yogi?"

"Yes."

"Are there any relatives to inform?"

"No."

"Where shall the body be buried?"

"It must not be buried. It must be given to the flames. That was his wish."

"Very well. I will arrange for cremation. Will you wish to accompany it?"

"No, no!" she cried with a gesture of repugnance.

"That is all, then, I believe," said Hinman slowly "And now I must be going. I beg you not to overtax yourself"

"I shall not," she promised, and he bowed and left us.

The afternoon was falling into evening, and the shadows were deepening in the room. I glanced about me with a little feeling of apprehension.

"The nurses are still here, are they not?" I asked.

"Yes, but I shall dismiss them tomorrow."

I hesitated a moment. I did not wish to alarm her, and yet * * *

"After they are gone, it will be rather lonesome for you here," I ventured

"I am used to being lonesome."

"My partner's wife, Mrs Royce, would be very glad if you would come to her," I said. "I have a letter from her," and I gave it to her.

She stood considering it with a little pucker of perplexity between her brows. She did not attempt to open it.

"She is very kind," she murmured, and her tone surprised and disappointed me.

"May I see you tomorrow?"

"If you wish."

"I shall come some time during the afternoon," I said, and took up my hat. "There is nothing else I can do for you""

"No, I believe not."

She was plainly preoccupied and answered almost at random, with a coldness in sharp contrast to the warmth of her previous manner

"Then I will say goodby."

"Goodby, Mr Lester, and thank you."

She went with me to the door and and stood for a moment looking after me, then she turned back into the house And I went on down the avenue with a chill at my heart.

CHAPTER XVIII.

BUILDING A THEORY

I was surprised when I came down for dinner an hour later, to find Godfrey awaiting me

"I always try to make it Saturday night," he explained. "The chief throws the work on the other fellows, if he can That's the reason I hustled away after the inquest. The story's all in, and now we'll have a good dinner—if I do say it myself—and then a good talk I feel the need of a talk, Lester"

"So do I," I said, "though I'm afraid talking won't help us much"

"The funny thing about this case is," mused Godfrey, "that the farther we get into it the thicker it grows."

"Yes," I agreed, "and the more one thinks about it, the less one understands"

"Well, suppose we get away from it for a while," said Godfrey, and turned the talk to other things. No man could talk more delightfully of music, of art, of letters. How he managed it I could never guess, but he seemed to have read everything, to have seen everything, to have heard everything. Marryat, for instance, who reads Marryat nowadays? And yet he had read the "Phantom Ship," and so knew something of Goa. An hour passed very quickly, but at last he rose and led the way into his study.

"A friend of mine dropped in to see me today at the office," he remarked, "a Cuban planter who comes up to New York occasionally, and whom I happened to help out of a rather serious difficulty a few years ago. Perhaps some day I'll tell you about it. He always brings me a bundle of his own special cigars. I didn't see him today, but he left the cigars, and I want you to try one Perhaps it will give you an inspiration."

He went to his desk, opened a tinfoiled package that lay there, and carefully extracted two long cigars of a rich and glowing brown.

"Perhaps you've heard of the special cigars that are made for Pierpont Morgan," he went on, as he handed one to me, after carefully replacing the wrappings of the bundle. "Well, I smoked one of Morgan's cigars once—it was good, mighty good; but it wasn't in the same class with these. Light up."

I did. Never before had I drawn between my lips a breath so satisfying—so rich, so smooth, so full of flavor. I exhalted the fragrant smoke slowly.

"Godfrey," I said, "I never knew what tobacco was before. Are these cigars purchasable? I'm only a poor lawyer, but even one a month would be a thing to look forward to and dream about."

But Godfrey shook his head.

"I've felt like that," he said; "but they're not to be had for money. And now about Swain."

"Let's postpone it a little longer," I begged. "I don't want my mind distracted."

Godfrey laughed, but fell silent; and for the next half hour, no sound was heard.

"Now," I said, at last, "I'm ready to listen, so fire ahead whenever you want to."

"I haven't much to tell," he began, "nothing new about the case. But I stopped at the Tombs, before I started back, to make sure that Swain had everything he wanted. They'd given him an upper cell, and sent over to the Marathon and got him his things, and I arranged to have his meals sent in to him from Moquin's."

"I ought to have thought of that," I said, contritely. "I'm much obliged to you, Godfrey. Did you see him?"

"Only for a minute. He seemed fairly cheerful. He'd had them bring some of his law books to him, and remarked that he'd have plenty of time to study. I like the way he's taking it. He gave me a message for you."

"What was it?"

"That you are not to forget your promise." I smoked on for a few moments in silence

"I promised him I'd get Miss Vaughan away from that house," I said at last. "I had Mrs. Royce write her a note, inviting her to stay with her. I gave it to her this afternoon."

"What did she say?"

"She didn't say anything, but I could see the idea didn't impress her. And I had thought all along that she would jump at it."

Godfrey gave a little grunt, whether of surprise or satisfaction I could not tell.

"Why didn't you put her on the stand today, Lester?" he asked "Afraid of upsetting her?"

"I wouldn't have stopped for that, if her evidence would have helped Swain. But it would only have put him deeper in the hole."

"In what way?"

"Well, in the first place, she says that as she and her father returned to the house, she heard footsteps behind them and thought it was Swain following them, because that would be a natural thing for him to do; and, in the second place, she saw that blood-stained handkerchief on the floor beside her father's chair when she came into the room and found him dead."

"So," said Godfrey slowly, "it couldn't have been dropped there by Swain when when he stooped to piek her up."

"No, besides, we know perfectly well that it wasn't about his wrist when he came back over the wall. Goldberger knows it, too, and we'll be asked about it, next time."

"It might have been pushed up his sleeve—we weren't absolutely certain. But this new evidence settles it."

I assented miserably and Godfrey smoked on thoughtfully. But my cigar had lost some of its flavor

How did Miss Vaughan come to find the body"" he asked at last, and I told him the story as she had told it to me. He thought it over for some moments, then he leaned forward and laid his hand on my knee

"Now, Lester," he said, "let's review this thing. It can't be as dark as it seems—there's light somewhere. Here is the case, bared of all inessentials: Swain crosses the wall about 11 o'clock, cutting his wrist as he does so, Miss Vaughan meets him about 11 30, and after a time, finds that his wrist is bleeding and ties her handkerchief about it, they agree to have her father examined for lunacy, arrange a meeting for the next night, and are about to separate, when her father rushes in upon them, savagely berates Swain and takes his daughter away. That must have been about 12 o'clock.

"Swain, according to his story, sits there for 10 or 15 minutes, finally sees the cobra, or thinks he does, and makes a dash for safety, striking his head sharply against a tree. He tumbles over the wall in a half dazed condition. The handkerchief is no longer about his wrist. That, you will remember, was about 12 20.

"Almost at once we heard Miss Vaughan's screams. After that, Swain isn't out of our sight for more than a minute—too short a time, anyway, for anything to have happened we don't know about

"Meanwhile, Miss Vaughan has returned with her father to the house, hearing steps behind her and taking it for granted that it is Swain, following them at a distance. She goes to her room, stays there 15 minutes or so, and comes downstairs again to find her father dead

"Now let us see what had happened. You were right in saying that her father must have been strangled immediately after she left him Otherwise he would still have been twitching in such a way that she must have noticed it No doubt he dropped into the chair exhausted by his fit of rage; the murderer entered through the garden door, stopped to cut off the end of the curtain cord and make a noose of it—that would have taken at least a minute—and then strangled his victim. Then he heard her coming down the stairs, and escaped through the garden door again just as she entered at the other She saw the curtain still shaking Then she fainted.

"Now, what are the clues to the murderer? A string tied with a peculiar knot, the blood stained handkerchief, and the finger prints on the dead man's robe."

Godfrey paused for a moment. Freed of its inessentials, in this way, the case was beautifully clear—and beautifully baffling. It was a paved way, smooth and wide and without obstruction of any kind, but it ended in a cul de sac!

"One thing is certain," Godfrey went on, at last, "the murder was committed by somebody—either by Swain, or by one of the Hindus, or by some unknown Let us weigh the evidence for, and against, each of them.

"Against Swain it may be urged that he was on the ground, that he had time to do it, and some provocation, though the provocation, as we know it, seems to be inadequate, provided Swain was in his right mind; a handkerchief that was tied about his wrist is found beside the body, and his finger prints are found upon it. Miss Vaughan believed he was following them, he admits that he thought of doing so.

A Soldier's Day.

"Training the Trooper," Mrs. George F. Richards, in the National Magazine.

A soldier's day is from the first note of reveille to the last note of retreat. In the gray light of daybreak the bugle calls him from sleep. From that moment until retreat sounds at sunset the day is one of strict routine and discipline.

The strenuous routine and spirit of patriotism that pervades post life teaches reverence for the flag as nothing else could do. To the man on the outside the flag means much, but to the trained man of the army it is his colors He will live for it or die for it as needs be—and he will do it unquestioningly!

And so it is "They bend the bow and make ready the arrows within the quiver."

That Sun-Bright Clime.

Have you heard, have you heard of that sun-bright clime,
Undimmed by sorrow, unhurt by time;
Where age hath no power o'er the fadeless frame—
Where the eye is fire, and the heart is flame—
Have you heard of that sun-bright clime?

A river of water gushes there,
'Mid flowers of beauty strangely fair,
And a thousand wings are hovering o'er
The dazzling wave and the golden shore.
That are seen in that sun-bright clime.

Millions of forms, all clothed in bright
In garments of beauty, clear and white—
They dwell in their own immortal bowers
'Mid fadeless hues of countless flowers,
That bloom in that sun-bright clime.

Ear hath not heard and eye hath not seen,
Their swelling songs and their changeless
sheen,
Their ensigns are waving and banners
unfurl
O'er jasper walls and gates of pearl,
That are fix'd in that sun-bright clime.

But far, far away is that sinless clime,
Undimm'd by sorrow, unhurt by time,
Where amid all things that are fair is given
The home of the just—and its name is Heaven,
The name of that sun-bright clime

A Woman's Problem

How to Feel Well During Middle Life Told by Three Women Who Learned from Experience.

The Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Read these letters:—

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I started the Change of Life five years ago. I always had a headache and backache with bearing down pains and I would have heat flashes very bad at times with dizzy spells and nervous feelings. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new person and am in better health and no more troubled with the aches and pains I had before I took your wonderful remedy. I recommend it to my friends for I cannot praise it enough."—Mrs. Margaret Grassman, 759 N. Ringgold St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Beverly, Mass.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for nervousness and dyspepsia, when I was going through the Change of Life. I found it very helpful and I have always spoken of it to other women who suffer as I did and have had them try it and they also have received good results from it."—Mrs. George A. Dunbar, 17 Roundy St., Beverly, Mass.

Erie, Pa.—"I was in poor health when the Change of Life started with me and I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, or I think I should not have got over it as easy as I did. Even now if I do not feel good I take the Compound and it restores me in a short time. I will praise your remedies to every woman for it may help them as it has me."—Mrs. E. Kissling, 931 East 24th St., Erie, Pa.

No other medicine has been so successful in relieving woman's suffering as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women may receive free and helpful advice by writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Such letters are received and answered by women only and held in strict confidence.

Careless.

"What? You refuse to lend me a measley ten-spot? Many's the time I've tided you over when you were short."

"Well, if you hadn't been so darned reckless with your money you wouldn't be broke now."

AILING WOMEN NEED THIS FAMOUS DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION

Thousands of women who are now blessed with robust health cannot understand why thousands of other women continue to worry and suffer from ailments peculiar to women when they can obtain for a trifling sum Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription which will surely and quickly banish all pain, distress and misery and restore the womanly functions to health.

This prescription of Dr. Pierce's extracted from roots and herbs is a temperance remedy.

To get rid of irregularities, or catarrhal condition, to avoid pain at certain times, to overcome irritability and weakness, waste no time, but get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form this very day.

"ANURIC!" NEWEST IN CHEMISTRY

This is a recent discovery of Doctor Pierce, head of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Experiments for several years proved that there is no other eliminator of uric acid comparable. For those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation—as backache, scalding urine and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, "Anuric" acts quickly. In rheumatism of the joints, in gravel and gout, invariably the pains and stiffness which so frequently and persistently accompany the disease rapidly disappear.

Ice-Breaker Carries Passengers.

The ice-breaking ferryboat, Prince Edward Island, plying on the Straits of Northumberland, Canada, has palatial accommodations for passengers. It is the first boat of the kind to be so equipped.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv

Widowers, like tumble-down houses, should be re-paired.

Saturn Changing Color.

Recent observations of Saturn at the Lowell observatory show a remarkable change in the color and brightness of the planet itself, which is now of a pinkish brown tint and strikingly darker than its rings. Comparisons of the stellar magnitude of the planet with Capella, Procyon and Mars, also show that its brightness is less than had been predicted.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the original little liver pills put up 40 years ago. They regulate liver and bowels.—Adv.

DEPARTED

John Carl Schwichtenberg was born in Elkport Iowa, January 21, 1860. In 1884 he was married to Miss Emma Kraus, and their home has been blessed with 7 children 3 sons and 4 daughters. In 1896 they moved to Twin Lake township, Hancock county, where they have lived since.

He joined the German Methodist church in his youth and has been a loyal and active member of the church to his death.

About two years ago his health began to fail and although he did all he could to find relief and with the best of care he was left without results. He patiently suffered without any complaint comm ting himself in Gods care. He died in words of expressive peace in God, and in faith in him who said "In my father's house are many mansions."

He died February 16, 1916. The funeral services were held in the Germantown Methodist church, with Rev. W. J. Witter officiating, Interment was made in the Calverry Cemetary at Klemme,

He leaves to mourn, his wife, 3 sons, 4 daughters, 1 sister, besides many relatives and frinds.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to heartily thank all of our friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted during the illness and burial of our beloved father and husband. We wish to especially thank the choir and those who gave the beautiful flowers.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise
¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits. The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

Farmers Should Be Sure To Have Good Seed Corn

Only 44 per cent of the Seed Corn in Hancock county is fit to plant was the alarming discovery made at the Klemme Short Course, Thursday, when a germination test of corn from samples of fifty representative farmers was read as a class exercise.

Of 550 ears tested 138 or 25 per cent of the ears showed all six kernels strong; 104 ears or 19 per cent of them showed five of the six kernels growing strong. Even though seed corn is scarce this year one can hardly afford to plant an ear of corn which shows less than five out of six kernels growing strong. With only 44 ears out of each 100 ears of seed corn fit to plant it would seem that Hancock county could afford to take advantage of the offer made by the Iowa State College Agricultural Extension Department at Ames to furnish a man to assist in a systematic seed corn survey of the county. Experience has shown that home grown seed corn will mature better and yield more than seed from other parts of the state. The object of such a survey would be to get good seed corn, either old or new, at a reasonable price for every farmer in Hancock county.

Why You Should Join Test Association

Can you on high priced land and high rent continue to guess at the profitableness of your cows?

What an association will do for you.

1. It will furnish a yearly record for every cow in your herd.
2. The selling price is increased 20 to 25 per cent on your surplus stock.
3. It furnishes a basis for improving your herd.
4. It will stimulate your interest in the herd,

PROOF: 10 months record on four cows in the association. No. 6 and 7, and 11 and 13, are in the same herds, and all of the cows in the same herd have received the same care and feed.

Locals Farmers To Use Limestone On New Alfalfa Ground

C. A. Arnold, E. J. Arnold and R. W. Elder received this week fifty ton of crushed limestone which they will use this spring on land which they are preparing for the sewing of alfalfa.

C. A. Arnold has found that it pays wonderfully to use limestone on alfalfa ground, as four acres of land that he had limed at the rate of two ton per acre produced for him for two different seasons. 6 ton of hay per acre, in three cuteings.

This limestone only costs 90 cents per ton f. o. b. cars Klemme. If two ton will put an acre of Hancock county land in condition to produce six tons of alfalfa, it would seem like a mighty paying investment. As alfalfa shipped in has cost from $15.00 to $18.00 per ton.

Clearing Up Waste Land.

I have been very successful in clearing land with a mechanical stump puller. My equipment was delayed in shipment so I did not get as much done as I expected last year, but did succeed in clearing five acres early in May, writes G. A. Tenant in Farm and Home.

The stumps were hickory, black oak and white elm. The trees were cut about ten years ago and the stumps were from 4 to 8 inches in diameter. Sprouts had come up forming a cluster about each, some of these from two to four inches through and the roots of this second growth formed a big cluster about each stump. These were pulled without difficulty after cutting a few roots.

We pulled elm stumps 10 inches through in 30 minutes and could have done it much quicker and without cutting any of the roots had we not made the mistake of purchasing too small a machine. I would not attempt to clear land without a puller. Digging is too slow and dynamite too dangerous for me, but I would buy a larger machine next time.

My land was practically valueless before clearing, as the brush was so thick that it was not much good for pasture. We raised a good corn crop on it last year and it is worth $80 to $90 an acre.

It is estimated that the average corn binder is in use not more than four days of each year, lasts about 11 years, and costs its owner 24 cents for every acre it covers.

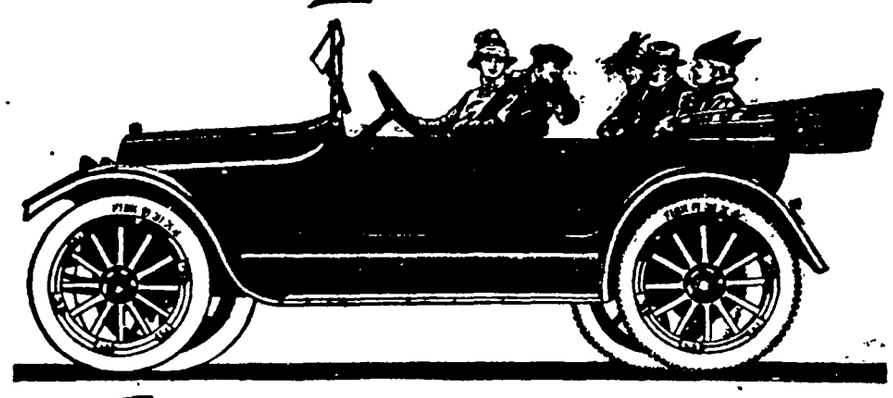
Overland
Model 75



$615
Roadster $595, both f. o. b. Toledo

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¾-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car the famous Overland, Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

Dr. N. A. Cobb, an authority on zoology declares that there must be hundreds of thousands of species of nematodes or threadworms, more than nine-tenths of which are still unknown to science. Of the parasitic nematodes infesting vertebrate animals alone, it is estimated that there are at least 80,000 species. Insects, mollusks, crustaceans and other animal groups are also much infested and as a rule a given species of nematode is peculiar to a single species of host. Lastly the species of nematode living free in soil and water vastly outnumber the parasitic species. As these creatures are enormously prolific the number of individuals must be quite beyond conception. Dr. Cobb estimates that in the upper foot of an arable soil the number of nematodes runs to thousands of millions an acre.

The economies and conveniences of the hot water system of heating have been recently increased by the manufacture of portable heating units, which may be resorted to without the usual necessity of piping. One of these radiators is supplied to the gas burner under it and is heated by means of a gas flame with flexible pipe connection with a gas outlet. The other has an electric heating unit installed in its base. The current to be supplied from an electric light outlet. The smallest of the electric heaters weighs only about 60 pounds when filled with the necessary water, therefore it may readily be removed from one room to another. The gas heater radiator is about the same weight.

Practically all the malt and hops consumed in Argentina are of foreign origin as there is little or no domestic production. During 1913, a normal year, the imports of malt into the republic aggregated 21,314,532 pounds, of which Austria-Hungary supplied 49,796,464 pounds, Germany 4,560,845, Belgium 94,247, the United kingdom, 44,010, and Italy 12,963 pounds. In 1914 imports totaled 38,555,339 pounds, and in the first nine months of 1915, 19,543,750 pounds. Of hops the imports during 1913 totaled 840,644 pounds, of which Germany supplied 768,599, Austria-Hungary 68,155 and the United States, 2,686 pounds. In 1914, 602,761 pounds, in the first nine months of 1915, 258,273 pounds.

Do woodpeckers get drunk? The question is seriously asked by Prof. Burges Johnson in Harper's Magazine as the result of certain observations in a camp in Maine. Eminent naturalists to whom Professor Johnson wrote disagree. Ernest Thompson Seton says: "The idea that woodpeckers getting drunk on fermented sap is an absurd fable. John Burroughs answers: 'Both birds and insects might get drunk on the fermented sap.' Ernest H. Baynes of Meriden, N. H. says: 'I do not think it impossible, but it is not improbable.' Prof. H. L. DEPUTY SHERIFF DEAD AND TWO WOUNDED IN RUMPUS AT ROCKFORD

Frank Reams Goes on Rampage In Intoxicated Condition—His Mother Wounded.

Rockford, Ia., Feb. 26.—Deputy Sheriff L. A. Bowers, proprietor of the Rockford hotel was shot and instantly killed. Coroner Charles Yenerich was shot in the chest and Mrs. R. D. Reams was shot through the hand by Frank Reams, son of the wounded woman, at Rockford last night. Reams was drunk at the time.

Dr. Yenerich was the first shot. He encountered Reams on the street and Reams shot at him with a revolver. The first shot missed and Reams fired again, the bullet striking the physician in the chest. Yenerich slightly wounded was able to run into a restaurant and notify Bowers and Marshal W. A. Graham.

They picked up Carl Weigand, garage man, and started for the Reams home. Weigand entered first and was met by Reams, who was carrying a shotgun. Reams started to fire, but his mother caught the gun. Reams however was able to discharge the gun, shooting his mother through the hand and Bowers through the heart.

Reams is 24 years old and has a bad reputation. Bowers was 56 and is survived by his wife and two daughters.

MINISTER'S ENGAGEMENT SETS COUNCIL BLUFFS AGOG

Council Bluffs, Ia., Feb. 26.—Council Bluffs is all agog today over the announcement in this morning's papers that Rev. Dr. Alfred G. A. Buxton, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church here is engaged to be married to Miss Edna Harlan, a stenographer in a law office here, and a youthful member of his congregation. Dr. Buxton's first wife died on April 10 of last year, and he has seemed heartbroken ever since he returned from his trip to Pennsylvania with her body.

Miss Harlan has been active in certain phases of the parish work especially in the Girls' Friendly society, and has been much in the company of Dr. Buxton's second daughter Miss Ethel Buxton of late. Her parents reside at Harlan, Ia., where her father, Charles L. Harlan, is engaged in the drug business. She has been staying here with an uncle, W. D. Harlan.

Dr. Buxton came to the parish here four years ago from Camden, N. J., and has been very popular with most of his congregation. He has one married daughter and another at home besides a young son.

RURAL POPULATION LOSS MERE INCIDENT OF PROGRESS

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—Less in rural population in Iowa is the natural result of the development of farming, declares A. L. Swan, director of the state census. He says that the falling off in population in the country districts is only [illegible] in Iowa.

[illegible] easy work to figure that Iowa has lost an actual population of the state since advancing said Mr. Swan.

The loss in the rural districts is due to the readjustments which are necessary by reason of the change of farming methods. We now have labor saving machinery by which one man can do the work of three or four men under the old conditions.

No country in the world has advanced as much as farming. By using improved machinery and scientific ideas, the farmers can till more land with less labor than a half century ago. There is not the need of as many men in the country as there used to be. The farmers can get along with a few hands, and the surplus laborers have gone to the towns where industrial plants give them employment.

SAYS SOUTH AMERICA NOT LAND OF OPPORTUNITIES

Royden, Ia., Feb. 26.—A. P. Creswell, of this place is in receipt of the following letter from a former Iowan who is now in South America.

"Buenos Ayres, Jan. 29, 1916.

Dear Sir: My policy for many years has been to discourage Americans of all classes from coming here unless they have money to spare and can afford the trip. In that case it would be money well spent or unless they came in the employ of some company with salary and expenses paid. Carpenters or any kind of mechanics can do little here as the class of work is so different. Hundreds of young men have come here in the last year, and have either worked their passage home or are stranded in this country. Take my advice and be contented where you are. I have traveled over the greater part of the world, and I have not yet been in any country to compare with the state where you get your mail."

MANSON NEWSPAPER FEUD IS SETTLED OUT OF COURT

Fort Dodge, Ia., Feb. 26.—The long standing Long-Dalton feud at Manson ended when a third party paid $200 costs the source to remain unknown, and filed the following stipulation:

"It is agreed by the parties hereto that, whereas the costs herein have been paid, this case is dismissed without prejudice, and neither party is to in any way make any newspaper or verbal reference to or publication of this suit or this stipulation."

The trouble between the Manson newspaper men had existed for many years.

NICKEL HELD GUILTY OF LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION

Keokuk, Ia., Feb. 26.—Phillip Nickel was found guilty of selling liquor contrary to the laws of Iowa by a jury in the district court here yesterday afternoon. The case will be appealed to the state supreme court.

Nickel, former Keokuk saloonkeeper, who sold a bottle of beer on January 10 in order to test the repeal of the ladies' law, was yesterday placed on trial in the district court.

FORT DODGE—Franz Anderson, a miner, was killed and Frank Spencer was perhaps fatally injured in a dynamite explosion at the American cement plaster mine. Anderson leaves a wife and four children. No one else witnessed the explosion and the cause is unknown.

FORT DODGE—Nathan F. Haworth, a former Fort Dodger, is out on parole after serving 14 years of a life sentence for killing Thomas Sandall, a night watchman of Ogden, Utah, on the night of March 28, 1901. Haworth was first sentenced to death, but through the efforts of his lawyers, however, the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. In 1903 Haworth escaped from prison with another lifer in a break which cost one convict his life, and in which three guards and five convicts were wounded. Haworth stoutly maintains his innocence. He was convicted on a confession he is alleged to have made, but which he says he did not make.

HUBBELL INTERESTS GET $700,000 AWARD ON TERMINAL RIGHTS

Contest Was Against Claims of Wabash and Milwaukee—In Court Since 1907

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—The F. M. Hubbell interests won a suit for $700,000 in federal court today when Judge Wade handed down a decision to the effect that the Des Moines Union is owner of the terminal railroad property in this city as against the Milwaukee and Wabash railroads.

The Wabash and Milwaukee are given the right to use the property upon payment of a reasonable compensation. The court ordered the payment to the Hubbells of $700,000 in accrued dividends since 1888.

The case was started in 1907 and was heard before the late Judge Smith McPherson. He granted a rehearing, but died before it could be tried.

ONE WOMAN WOUNDED, IS RESULT OF FAMILY ROW

Clarion, Ia., Feb. 26.—Frank Schultz, of Belmond, charged with shooting his sisterinlaw, Mrs. John Schultz, at Belmond, was lodged in jail here last night. Mrs. Schultz will recover, it is believed. The shooting occurred as the result of a family quarrel.

$20,000 SETTLEMENT MADE FOR OIL COMPANY ERROR

Osage, Ia., Feb. 26.—Representatives of the Standard Oil company were sent to Kiester, Faribault county, near here, to effect a settlement with the sole surviving member of the Harry Howe family—a 6-months-old baby boy—whose parents lost their lives in a fire caused by the explosion of gasoline at their home near there a short time ago. After a thorough investigation of causes, it was found that the cans containing what was supposed to be only kerosene in reality contained a mixture of gasoline, and that some supply house had made a mistake in delivery.

The Standard Oil company paid over the sum of $10,000, which will be kept in trust for the Howe baby, and to a brother of Harry Howe, also gave $10,000, as he was badly burned in his effort to save the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Howe.

IOWA CHINESE STUDENTS ARE SUMMONED HOME

Ames, Ia., Feb. 26.—"Come home" came the cabled summons from China last week to Te Chang Tang and Tien Tse Chang, two young Chinese students who had just enrolled at Iowa State college to take work in animal husbandry.

Our work demands us here, they cabled back. Two days passed.

Then came the second summons from their native country. "We need you. You will come," was the imperial decree from the orient. The boys packed their things and went. The American education of the two Chinese lads was being partly financed by the Chinese government.

DES MOINES WOMAN SUED FOR CHURCH CONTRIBUTION

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—Catherine Bradford is made the defendant in a suit filed in the district court here yesterday afternoon by the Lakeside Presbyterian church of Storm Lake, Ia., wherein the church claims the defendant subscribed $300 to the church fund and refuses to pay it.

According to the church a new building was erected at a cost of $35,000 in Storm Lake and that most of the money was raised by subscriptions. It is charged that Catherine Bradford subscribed $300 in 1912 but failed to make good her subscription.

FORMER LEMARS BANKER SAID TO BE IN SANATORIUM

LeMars, Ia., Feb. 26.—Friends here have been informed that T. F. Ward, a former resident of LeMars, is broken in health and mind and is now in a sanatorium. Ward was president of the LeMars National bank for some years, and in 1903 became so involved financially that the bank was wrecked. He was arrested in Jersey City, brought back to Sioux City and given a sentence of 30 days. He later went to Geddes, S. D., where he became a successful business man.

STATE BANKS IN IOWA SHOW LARGE GAINS IN DEPOSITS

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—Iowa state and savings banks have $[illegible] in deposits, according to a report just issued by the state banking department based on the condition of the institutions January 31.

This is an increase in deposits since November 1, 1915, of $[illegible] and an increase of $21,624,000 over the deposits a year ago.

EXPRESS MESSENGER SHOT BY HIS OWN REVOLVER

Ames, Ia., Feb. 26.—John Murray, an express messenger, residing in Des Moines, was shot in his car [illegible] 6 o'clock this morning, accidentally by his own revolver. The weapon was discharged as he leaned over through a string catching the trigger. The bullet entered the lower part of the abdomen. Murray was taken to a hospital in Des Moines and his condition is regarded as critical.

HENRY WALLACE FUNERAL SET FOR FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 26.—Funeral services for Henry Wallace, well known farm magazine editor and a member of President Roosevelt's country life commission, who died here suddenly Tuesday night, will be held Friday afternoon.

LAKE VIEW—The Pleasant Hill Methodist church is holding a unique service including a banquet on Friday evening and the reception Sunday with an all day service. Dr. Alfred E. Craig will speak morning and evening. Rev. J. R. Pumbleson, former pastor of Lake View charge, will be at the banquet and speak on Friday evening. The Pleasant Hill congregation raised the church, built a fine [illegible] room basement under the entire building, equipped with all the modern conveniences necessary to meet the social needs of the entire community. The pastor, Rev. J. J. DeWitt, is planning a revival campaign to continue for several weeks, following the reopening.

COUNCIL BLUFFS—The Omaha and Council Bluffs railroad, a road 14 miles long and owned by farmers, was sold by the receiver to the Lana Construction company, of Council Bluffs for $24,000. The road was built by George W. Adams at a cost of $90,000. Several one time wealthy farmers have gone bankrupt in making the road. The [illegible] company was one of [illegible].

FEDERAL OFFICER IN WARNING TO HUNTERS ON SPRING SHOOTING

Says Law Is In Force Until Declared Invalid—Violators Will Be Prosecuted.

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 25.—Harry Barmeier of Dubuque, federal game inspector for the southern district of Iowa, has issued a warning to hunters that no change will be made in the federal regulations governing the shooting of migratory birds pending decision of the case involving the constitutionality of the law now pending in the United States supreme court.

Spring shooting of ducks and other water fowl is prohibited by the federal law as it now stands. The open season under the same statute is from September 1 to December 16.

The law was declared unconstitutional in the United States district court of Arkansas and was appealed to the supreme court, which has not yet handed down a decision.

Mr. Barmeier said that federal inspectors are under strict orders to obtain evidence for prosecution against all violators of the law.

It is not known to what extent the state wardens will cooperate with the federal authorities in enforcement of the law.

TELEGRAPH-HERALD EDITOR SECURES FEDERAL POSITION

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 25.—S. A. Monger, until yesterday editor in chief of the Dubuque Telegraph-Herald, a daily newspaper, has accepted a position with the federal government in the internal revenue service with headquarters at Omaha. Mr. Monger has been in the newspaper business in Iowa for the past 25 years. His father was formerly publisher of the Anamosa Journal. Upon his death S. A. Monger took charge of the paper, and a few years ago sold it to enter journalism in this city. For the past two years he has been editor in chief of the Telegraph-Herald.

IOWA FIRM SUED FOR INCOME TAX JUDGMENT

Keokuk, Ia., Feb. 25.—Alleging failure to report income for the year ending December 31, 1914, a suit asking judgment for $10,000 was filed in the United States district court here against Mauro & Wilson company, a firm of Burlington. The suit was brought by Claude R. Porter, district attorney.

It is alleged the defendants neglected before March 1, 1915, to make a return as required by law of income for 1914. This is the first action of this sort to be instituted in this division of the federal court.

MURDER CASE RESULTED FROM PETTY ARGUMENT

Sibley, Ia., Feb. 25.—Ellis Hollingsworth is being tried here for the second time for killing that was the result of an argument over how many states Hollingsworth had visited in his wanderings about the country. Arthur Ainsley, another miner disputed Hollingsworth's claims as a national trotter. Ainsley was shot to death.

Hollingsworth fled and was captured last July in Texas. He was tried here at the December term of court but the jury failed to agree.

SEEKS THIRD DIVORCE, THOUGH ONLY 18 YEARS OLD

Enid, Ia., Feb. 25.—At the age of 18 years Mrs. Fannie Shepard is seeking a divorce from her third husband. She was married first when 13 years old but that marriage was annulled. She married again when 16 years old, and divorced that husband. Her third hubby is 60 years old. They were married a few months ago and she alleges he beat her.

FORT DODGE—Tenth district letter carriers in annual convention in this city voted to come here next year for their convention and to work to bring the next annual state convention here. They emphatically announced this was a get together meeting and not a grievance session because of lengthened rural routes. They elected E. T. Gunderson president, J. A. Gibson, of Fort Dodge, vice president and E. W. Bute of Stanhope secretary.

MONDAMIN—Fred Cooper, who recently sold his farm here and bought land in Texas, was killed Tuesday in a railroad wreck when nearing his new home in the southwest, where he was traveling with his live stock, farm implements and household goods. The body will be brought here for burial. Mr. Cooper was a widower. He had four children, all of whom are at the home of relatives here sick from measles. They planned as soon as well to join their father in Texas.

LEMARS—Mrs. Lulu Crocker has started divorce proceedings against her husband Clifford P. Crocker alleging extreme cruelty and asks custody of her 3-year-old boy and a 6-months-old baby. She states that when her baby was 2 weeks old, one she was in bed, her husband threatened to kick her off the place if she did not get up and help him separate some hogs which had got mixed. She also specifies other acts of cruelty.

IOWA CITY—Lieut. R. T. Phinney, head the Iowa university military department, has resigned, to take effect September 1. The war department has granted a transfer to his old regiment, the Twentieth infantry. He may go to the Mexican border or be stationed at Fort Douglas, Utah. He was formally in the Philippines.

LITTLE SIOUX—Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Ellis of this place, who celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, are real pioneers of western Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis were married in Little Sioux, February 22, 1866, shortly after Mr. Ellis had returned and recovered from a strenuous experience as a member of a company of infantrymen recruited at Magnolia, and which saw severe service in the civil war.

IOWA—Mrs. Enos Schaffer, of Enid, Okla., formerly Miss Vina Huffman, of Iowa City, was burned to death at her home when an explosion followed her use of kerosene to [illegible] a fire in her kitchen stove.

POWER FRANCHISE IN IOWA GOOD ONLY FOR YEAR IF NOT IN USE

New Policy Adopted to Prevent Speculative Holdings By Mere Promoters.

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 24.—The Iowa railroad commission yesterday adopted a policy of requiring firms securing franchises for transmission lines to build the lines within one year or forfeit the grant.

The commission has no definite evidence that there is an organized effort to monopolize the Iowa field. It has no knowledge that any of the requests for franchises are not bona fide, nevertheless the change in rule was made to safeguard the public against speculative holdings.

The state officials, however, do not want to check the building of legitimate electrical lines, for the reason that the more of them constructed the greater the commercial development of the state.

The following franchises were granted yesterday:

To Schmidt Bros. & Co. Elkader, line from Elkader to Garnavillo and Guttenberg.

To George A. Healey, Sanborn, Ia., rural line in O'Brien county.

To R. M. Burtis, Chicago, line from Fairfield to Batavia.

To Fayette Counties Utilities company, line from Oelwein to Hazelton.

The Home Electric company of Guttenberg objected to the state granting a franchise to Schmidt Bros. & Co., for building a line from Elkader to Guttenberg, on the ground the Guttenberg already is served by the home company. It claimed that the coming of another company would bring about ruinous competition and that it is against public policy.

In presenting the objections, the laws of other states were cited. The Iowa commission dismissed the protest and stated that the laws of other states with regard to granting franchises would not aid in deciding a case in Iowa, for the reason that the Iowa railroad commission does not have the powers of the public utilities commission. It can not inquire into the qquestions of whether any section is adequately served and that the rates are reasonable, the officials say. However, to guarantee against fraud, the commission will require all companies to build the lines within one year, and that a forfeited franchise can only be renewed upon a proper showing being made to the commission.

The line to be built in O'Brien county by George A. Healey will serve farmers in that locality. The farmers will use the current for lighting their homes, and for power purposes in connection with farm work.

DELEGATES INDORSED AT NINTH DISTRICT MEETING

Council Bluffs, Ia., Feb. 24.—At a conference of republicans of the Ninth district held here yesterday afternoon Major G. Hess and R. B. Wallace, of Council Bluffs, were indorsed for district delegates to the national convention in Chicago. Arthur Farquhar, of Audubon, and James Wickersham, of Villisca, were indorsed as alternates.

Financial aid for the Cummins candidacy for president was promised.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Feb. 24.—Indorsements of E. R. Moore, of this city, for lieutenant governor, and of A. B. Cummins, of Des Moines, for the presidency, were the principal features of the republican Fifth district conference held here yesterday afternoon, which was attended by republican leaders from many points. Delegates chosen to the state convention were instructed to work for Cummins "First, last and all the time."

URICK ASKS DEFINITION OF "PLACE OF AMUSEMENT"

Des Moines, Ia., Feb. 24.—What is a place of amusement?

This question is worrying A. L. Urick, state labor commissioner, and C. A. Robbins, assistant attorney general. It is necessary to define what a place of amusement is in connection with the enforcement of the child labor laws. Therefore the labor commissioner has passed the problem up to the state department of justice.

The difficulty the officials are meeting is to determine where to draw the line as to what constitutes amusement. Another phase of the matter is whether the mixing of amusements with business enterprises makes a place of amusement of the combination. Some of the operators of such places claim it does not.

SIBLEY COMMERCIAL CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL BANQUET

Sibley, Ia., Feb. 24.—The annual banquet of the Sibley Commercial club was one of the most successful events of its kind ever held in Sibley. The women of the Congregational church served the menu, and young men, sons of the members of the Commercial club, acted as waiters. The high school orchestra furnished music.

The general theme of the evening's toasts was that of "Civic Preparedness." W. W. Overholser, president of the club, acted as toastmaster. The following toasts were responded to: "The Spirit of 1916," Prof. J. R. McAnnelly. "Twentieth Century Brain Food," E. M. Taylor. "Powder, Patriotism and Peace," L. A. Dwinell. "Looking Backward—1915," T. S. Redward; "Painters (Co)-Operation," Dr. G. E. Vermier. "Neutrality—Civic and Domestic," B. F. Butler. "There's a Reason—Woman'" Mrs. Charles E. Brown, sr.

R. W. MURRAY, STORM LAKE, SEEKS LEGISLATIVE BERTH

Alta, Ia., Feb. 24.—R. W. Murray, of Storm Lake, has entered the race for renomination as representative. He first announced his candidacy for the vacancy in the senate caused by the resignation of J. H. Allen, of Pocahontas, but now says his business will not permit him to make a canvass of Buena Vista, Pocahontas and Humboldt counties.

Ex-Speaker E. H. Cunningham, of Newell, is an active candidate to succeed Senator Allen, and announcements from E. B. Wells, a Marathon banker, and Judge A. D. Ballie, of Storm Lake, are looked for immediately. It is also stated that Humboldt county will have a candidate.

REV. H. M. CASE KILLS SELF AT EMMETSBURG HOME

Emmetsburg, Ia., Feb. 23.—The Rev. H. M. Case, former pastor of the Congregational church here, shot and killed himself in his home here yesterday afternoon. Before shooting himself he called in a neighbor and asked him to tell an undertaker to come to the house. When the undertaker arrived he found Mr. Case dead.

Mrs. Case died several months ago.

BETHLEHEM COMPANY TO SPEND MILLIONS

Plant of Maryland Steel Company Will Be Improved at Enormous Cost

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 25.—[illegible] twenty million dollars will be expended by the Bethlehem Steel company in developing the Maryland Steel company's plant at Sparrows Point, Md., according to an announcement made today by Eugene G. Grace president of the Bethlehem corporation after an inspection of the Sparrows Point plant.

The Maryland Steel company is one of the concerns recently acquired by the Bethlehem Steel company. Sparrows Point, Mr. Grace said, is to be the principal unit in the shipbuilding activities of the parent company. The force of work is to be increased by the addition of 5,000 men.

ENGLAND TO CALL OUT MARRIED MEN

All Those Attested Under Derby Plan Will Be In Service By July, London Reports.

London, Feb. 26.—The recruiting statement that all the married men who attested under the enlistment plan of Lord Derby will be called up by July was unofficial, but there seems to be little doubt as to its accuracy. It is stated that private hints have been given to banks and other large institutions to enable them to make [illegible] provisions for the replacing of such employes as are called to the colors.

It is no secret that the results of the compulsory bill have been disappointing to the authorities and that the war office is short of men in training.

The unexpected early call of married men has brought a great many complaints to the newspaper [illegible] that wholesale exemptions and postponement in the cases of single men is a virtual violation of the pledge given the married men that they would not be called until all the available single men had been recruited. The recruiting committee yesterday passed a resolution that serious damage would be done married men who attested under the law, unless the government enforces compulsory military service to unattested married men.

DEMAND SURRENDER OF SEIZED GERMANS

United States Maintains Britain Violated Rights In Arrests on High Seas.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The United States today instructed Ambassador Page at London to make inquiries of the British foreign office regarding the removal of 38 Germans, Austrians and Turks from the American steamship China, in Asiatic waters, and to demand the release of the prisoners if they were arrested on the high seas, as has been indicated.

Great Britain maintains extra territorial rights over the waters immediately adjacent to Shanghai the China's sailing port for San Francisco. Should the British government set up the claim that the vessel was within waters under British jurisdiction the United States would not have cause for further action.

Advices to the state department leave in doubt the exact position of the China. One consular report fixed the location as "10 miles off shore."

The state department has been advised that the British foreign office is investigating the incident.

NEGRO ATTACKS WHITE WOMAN; QUICKLY MOBBED

Cartersville, Ga., Feb. 25.—Jesse McCorkle, a negro, was taken from jail here early today by 50 men and boys, hanged to a tree in front of the city hall, and his body riddled with bullets. McCorkle was arrested last night for the breaking into the home of A. T. Heath and attacking Mrs. Heath, whose husband was away. The woman shot the negro, in the wrist with a pistol, but she was overpowered. When caught McCorkle's wounded wrist was still bleeding and he had the pistol in his possession. He was placed in jail safely, despite threats of lynching, but during the early morning, the crowd by a ruse, gained admittance to the jail, took McCorkle to the city hall and hanged him to a tree limb, sending a volley of shots into his body.

BOOT SAVES LIFE OF OIL MAGNATE'S WIFE

Thomasville, Ga., Feb. 25.—Mrs. John F. Archbold, daughterinlaw of John D. Archbold of the Standard Oil company, was bitten by a rattlesnake while hunting on the Archbold estates near here yesterday. Physicians said a heavy leather boot prevented complete poisoning and her wound would not prove fatal. Mrs. Archbold shot the snake after she had been bitten.

SUICIDE NOT CRONES. NEWARK POLICE CLAIM

New York, Feb. 25.—The police announced today that the man who committed suicide yesterday in Newark, N. J., was not Jean Crones, the chef who attempted to poison Archbishop Mundelein and 300 guests at a banquet in Chicago, as was at first believed.

A patrolman who had known Crones personally examined the body and stated that it was not Crones.

BOMB ON LINER.

Rio Janeiro, Feb. 25.—A Bahia newspaper says that a box containing a bomb was put on board the Lamport & Holt line steamer Tennyson at Bahia at the request of a German merchant by a person whose identity has not been discovered. The investigation opened by the authorities is being actively pursued.

GERMAN SEA RAIDER NEAR BRAZIL COAST

Belgian Steamer Sunk By Teuton Craft Which Is Reported Well Armed.

London, Feb. 26.—A Reuter dispatch from Teneriffe says that the captain of one of the vessels sunk by the German raider which sent the British steamship, Westburn, to Santa Cruz with a prize crew, described the raider as a vessel of from 2,000 to 2,500 tons, carrying six 7-inch guns and having two torpedo tubes, with a number of mines, aboard.

It is also said that she could steam 17 knots an hour, that she carried a crew of 200 to 250 men, and is under command of a German count.

The crew of the Belgian ship, Luxembourg, which was sunk by the raider, say that their vessel was caught 70 miles south of Fernando De Noronha, an island in the South Atlantic, 125 miles from the east extremity of Brazil, to whom it belongs, and that they were kept under control on board the Westburn by seven Germans, armed with hand grenades.

TWO SHIPS CRASH; PASSENGERS SAFE

Liner Cretan Collides With a Schooner—All on Board Removed to Steamer Dorothy.

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 26.—The Merchants & Miners' liner, Cretan, from Philadelphia for Savannah, was in collision with the steamer Dorothy, 14 miles north of Cape Hatteras, during a thick fog early this morning, according to advices received at the general office of the line from its Norfolk office late this forenoon. No one was hurt on either vessel. The Cretan passengers were transferred to the Dorothy and both vessels proceeded to Norfolk

No schooner was involved in the accident as was reported in earlier reports.

The Dorothy struck the Cretan on the port, bow forward, which was stove in, but the damage was said to be mostly above the water line. The Dorothy was reported to be only slightly damaged.

The revenue cutter Onondaga responded to the Cretan's wireless call for help, reaching her several hours later, and was standing by, according to last reports.

Philadelphia, Feb. 25.—The steamer Cretan sailed from here late Tuesday night. There were 28 passengers on board and a crew of between 40 and 50 men. The Cretan is commanded by Capt. J. B. Wood, of Baltimore.

RUSSIA TO BUY BACK PART OF LOST FLEET

Japan to Sell Former Foe Three Warships Taken or Sunk In Late War.

Tokio, Feb. 26.—Russian negotiations for the purchase from Japan of warships which were captured in the Russo-Japanese war are reported to be proceeding satisfactorily. The Soya, the Tango and the Sagami are stated to be the vessels which Russia desires to purchase. Russia would have bought warships from Japan at the outbreak of the war, in order to take part in the bombardment of Tsing-Tao, the seaport on the Chinese coast in the German territory of Kiao-Chau, but the negotiations which were then undertaken fell through.

The Tango and Sagami are battleships and the Soya, a protected cruiser

GERMAN PATIENCE EXHAUSTED, CLAIM

Press Says Toleration of America Has Reached Limit—Prefer Breach to Yielding, Says Paper.

The Hague, Netherlands, (via London).—Berlin newspapers publish a dispatch from the United States relative to criticism in the American press of Ambassador Von Bernstorff, on the ground that he has misused his diplomatic position by attempting to influence public opinion. His position is described in this dispatch as shaken. The Cologne Gazette has published two editorials on this subject, defending the ambassador. It attributes attacks on him to exigencies of party politics in America and continues.

"Germany must go ahead in the course chosen without regard to the changing currents of American politics. Otherwise her head will grow dizzy and her foot will slip.

"If England succeeds in influencing the American government to enter a protest," the Gazette adds, "we shall prefer to let the breach come rather than to yield to the protests, and that is the will of the entire German people. We have reached the limit of our patience as far as America is concerned."

WHEAT PIT SCANDAL TO BE INVESTIGATED

Directors Seek Source of Rumor That Bernstorff Had Been Handed Papers.

Chicago, Feb. 26—A rumor, which was denied, but which while it was current on the board of trade near the close yesterday, sent the price of wheat down several cents, will be investigated by a committee of the board, it was stated today.

The rumor was to effect that the German ambassador had been handed his passports. It began circulation about 15 minutes before the close and denial of its truth came too late to check the decline.

It is estimated roughly that bull leaders dumped 6,000,000 bushels overboard and forced other holders in this and outside markets to follow suit.

It is reported that James H. Patton, the millionaire board of trade plunger yesterday dropped $300,000 in 15 minutes when the market slumped 5 cents in the last few minutes of trade. Arthur Cutten also was one of the heaviest losers.

Instead of showing a fresh break in values, the wheat market today surprised many traders by opening at an advance. Opening quotations—$1 18@1 19¼ for May and $1.14¾@1.15½ for July—were ¼@1¾c higher than yesterday's finish.

The reaction for the upturn seemed to be a reaction from the semipanicky situation of yesterday and optimism on the part of a majority of the dealers that some practical way out of the difficulty with Germany would yet be found

Despite considerable nervousness shown by rapid fluctuations, the market kept within a normal range today, the difference between highest and lowest prices being less than 3 cents.

Closing prices were firm at 1¼c net advance, with May at $1.18¾ and July at $1.15⅞.

REFUSES TO DISMISS LABOR COUNCIL CASES

Three Defendants Must Stand Trial and Are Put In Custody of Marshal.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 26.—United States Commissioner Taylor today dismissed the attack on the indictments of H. Robert Fowler, Herman Schultels and Henry B. Martin, returned in a federal grand jury's investigation of the activities of labor's national peace council and held that the three men must appear for arraignment in New York, March 7.

None of the three men gave bail and they were put in the custody of a marshal Their attorney announced he would apply to the courts here for a writ of habeas corpus.

The indictments were returned after an investigation which disclosed allegations that the labor council was connected with attempts to prevent munitions shipments to the allies.

BRYAN LEADS FIGHT OF DEMOCRATS TO REPUDIATE POLICY OF ADMINISTRATION

To Change Front Now Would Be Humiliation, Wilson Declares

To Forbid Citizens to Exercise Rights For Fear of Having to Vindicate Them Would Be Acquiescence In Violation of All Rights and Invite Demands For Still Further Concessions, Says President.

President Wilson, late yesterday, while senators and representatives made frantic efforts to reach him to advise with him about the situation in congress, shut himself in his study and penned the following letter to Senator Stone, chairman of the Senate foreign relations committee:

"Feb. 24, 1916.—My Dear Senator: I very warmly appreciate your kind and frank letter of today, and feel that it calls for an equally frank reply.

"You are right in assuming that I shall do everything in my power to keep the United States out of war. I think the country will feel no uneasiness about my course in that respect. Through many anxious months I have striven for that object, amidst difficulties more manifold than can have been apparent on the surface, and so far I have succeeded. I do not doubt that I shall continue to succeed. The course which the central European powers have announced their intention of following in the future with regard to undersea warfare seems for the moment to threaten insuperable obstacles, but its apparent meaning is so manifestly inconsistent with explicit assurances recently given us by those powers with regard to their treatment of merchant vessels on the high seas that I must believe that explanations will presently ensure which will put a different aspect upon it. We have had no reasons to question their good faith or their fidelity to their promises in the past, and I, for one, feel confident that we shall have none in the future.

National Honor at Stake.

"But in any event our duty is clear. No nation or group of nations has the right while the war is in progress to alter or disregard the principles which all nations have agreed upon in mitigation of the horrors and sufferings of war; and if the clear rights of American citizens should ever unhappily be abridged or denied by any such action, we should, it seems to me, have in honor no choice as to what our own course shall be.

"For my own part I cannot consent to any abridgement of the rights of American citizens in any respect. The honor and self respect of the nation are involved. We covet peace and shall preserve it at any cost, but the loss of honor. To forbid our people to exercise their rights for fear we might be called upon to vindicate them would be a deep humiliation indeed. It would be an implicit, all but explicit, acquiescence in the violation of the rights of mankind everywhere and whatever nation or allegiance. It would be a deliberate abdication of our hitherto proud position as spokesmen, even amid the turmoil of war, for the law and the right. It would make everything this government has attempted and everything that it has achieved during this terrible struggle of nations meaningless and futile.

Invite Further Humiliation.

"It is important to reflect that if, in this instance, we allowed expediency to take the place of principle, the door would inevitably be opened to still further concessions. Once accept a single abatement of right and many other humiliations would certainly follow, and the whole fine fabric of international law might crumble under our hands piece by piece. What we are contending for in this matter is of the very essence of things that have made America a sovereign nation. She cannot yield them without conceding her own impotency as a nation and making virtual surrender of her importance among the nations of the world.

"I am speaking, my dear senator, in deep solemnity, without heat, a clear consciousness of the high responsibilities of my office and as your sincere and devoted friend. If we should unhappily differ, we shall differ as friends, but where issues so momentous as these are involved, we must, just because we are friends, speak out our minds without reservation. Faithfully yours, Woodrow Wilson."

RUSSIANS HEADED FOR MESOPOTAMIA

Clearing Turks Out of Persia—Win Big Victories—Turks Making Stand 40 Miles From Erzerum.

Petrograd, (via London), Feb. 25.—An official dispatch from Teheran says:

"After a series of battles in Persia, the remnants of the adversary troops were reorganized and concentrated in the region of Kermanshah, and with the help of German and Turkish sappers, occupied and fortified two mountain passes—Bidesurks pass, an almost impregnable natural position and Sakahe pass. News has now been received that our troops dislodged the enemy from Bidesurk's pass and occupied Sakahe pass and are now pursuing the Turks who are in full retreat toward Kermanshah. Our forces captured three field guns, one mountain gun, a quantity of shells, ammunition and field machine guns."

The Russian success in the region of Kermanshah is a sequel to Russian operations in Persia, with the view of ending the activities of hostile mountain forces and organized bands of Kurds. Russian progress in Peria, however, is regarded here as also indicating greater possibility of a junction of the Russians with the British expeditionary forces in Mesopotamia.

After the retreat from Hamadan all hostile forces which concentrated in the Kerman shah district, fortified themselves in the mountain passes. Simultaneous frontal and flank attacks already have forced the Turks to make a partial retirement, and they are now occupying the main approaches to the difficult position of Kermanshah. The Russian troops are expected to make a determined effort to expel the Turks from this entire neighborhood.

Although little news is at hand from Erzerum front, it is apparent that having been forced back some 40 miles to the west of the captured fortresses, the Turks, who have begun to receive reinforcements, are beginning to make a stubborn stand. It is not considered impossible here that the serious fighting which has already begun to take the place of the desultory rear guard actions will develop into a big battle.

SUFFRAGISTS ARE ROUSED BY GRAFT

Fear Chicago Scandal Will Hurt Cause—Rumors of Character Assaults Are Afloat.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Fear that the present political agitation arising from the "split salary" charges made by Mrs. Page Waller Eaton against her superior, Mrs. Louise Osborne Rowe, head of the municipal department of public welfare, might result in the reflections being cast on women's political aspirations in general, led to the voicing today of strong protests by prominent suffragists. Investigation of the charges continued today before the civil service commission.

"The whole world is looking at Chicago, we have to be on our good behavior, declared Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch, a leader in the Illinois suffrage movement.

"If any woman anywhere does wrong, it is an argument against suffrage. There is no denying that. There is no logic in it, but women are on trial.

"It might be pointed out, however, that neither of the women involved was backed by the suffrage organizations. Other women who were competent were available and were recommended. But even so, the entire sex shall be judged by the conduct of two women."

Mrs. Eaton before the civil service commission today repeated the story she told yesterday before a council committee to the effect that she had been forced to give up a part of her $3,000 a year salary for the support of a relative of Mayor Thompson.

Mrs. Eaton issued a statement today saying she had been informed that an attempt would be made before the civil service commission to blacken her character. She said any such attempt would be met by resort to the courts for legal redress.

Mrs. D. M. Sabin, widow of former United States Senator Sabin, of Minnesota, was subpoenaed today to appear as a witness.

Mrs. Eaton, a number of years ago, had business dealings with Senator Sabin and after his death figured in a contest over insurance policies in which she was made the beneficiary.

VILLA SEIZES TOWN.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 25.—Francisco Villa burned several houses at San Buenaventura yesterday and occupied El Valle, according to official reports received by Gen. Gabriel Gavira, commandant at Juarez today. Gavira said Villa's movement north was due to pressure of Carranza's cavalry from the south.

Measures Held Up In Committee For Time, But Future Is Uncertain—No Word From Berlin.

Washington, Feb 25.—Telegrams to congressmen from William Jennings Bryan, supporting the movement for warning Americans off armed ships, began arriving today. Representative Bailey, of Pennsylvania, received one and planned to read it from the floor.

Representative Bailey, after a conference with Majority Leader Kitchin, however, simply made public the telegram which follows:

"I honestly hope that congress will speedily announce legislation refusing passports to Americans traveling on belligerent ships or still better, refusing clearance to belligerent ships carrying American passengers.

The Pacifist View.

"No owner of belligerent ships will claim that he has the right to safeguard a contraband cargo with American lives and no citizens is permitted to endanger the peace of a nation at a time like this. Ours is the greatest of the neutral nations, and probably will be the mediator when the time comes for mediation. It would be a crime against civilization as well as against our own people to become involved in this war and thus loan our army and navy to a European monarch to use in settling his quarrels.

"If congress has the right to declare war, it certainly has the right to promote peace by restraining citizens from taking unnecessary risks. A mayor keeps the people of his city out of the danger zone during a riot. Can our government afford to do less when the world is in riot?"

"That is right," Representative Bailey quoted Mr. Kitchin as saying, when he read the telegram

Lodge With Wilson.

Senator Lodge, ranking republican member of the foreign relations committee declared in a statement today that he was in full accord with President Wilson's views on the submarine issue as expressed in his letter to Senator Stone and that he would stand by the president.

A resolution to express the sense of the Senate that any issue affecting national honor should be referred before decision to congress and that no ultimatum should be sent to any foreign power, nor severance of diplomatic relations be permitted without reference to congress, was introduced today by Senator Jones, republican, of Washington.

Can't Be Cowardly.

"The president takes the precise position that I have taken and have been urging in speeches for the last 18 months," said Senator Lodge.

"Of course I shall stand by him. I agree fully with what he says. I believe it would proclaim us to the world as cowards to tell our citizens that they must not exercise their undoubted rights and that if they do we shall not protect them. A nation that will not protect its citizens cannot protect itself and if democracy fails to protect herself, how can we hope to live.

"The president says: 'What we are contending for in this matter is of the very essence of things that have made America a sovereign nation. She cannot yield them without conceding her impotency as a nation and making virtual surrender of her independent position among the nations of the world.'

"With this also, I am in full accord. It is the doctrine I have preached all my life and I am with the president who sets it forth and stands by it."

Washington, Feb. 25.—President Wilson reiterated his opposition to any action in congress warning Americans off armed ships in a conference early today with Speaker Clark, Majority Leader Kitchin and Chairman Flood of the House foreign affairs committee, and they in turn told the president that if such a resolution were brought to a vote in the House now it would pass by a majority of two to one.

The president was unshaken in his position that congress should take no action embarrassing his contention that the rights of Americans on the seas must be upheld at any cost and repeated what he had written last night to Senator Stone.

Safe For Time Being.

The House leaders went away telling the president nothing would be done today, but they ventured no predictions for the future. They admitted that the situation was serious and could not yet tell how far the sentiment in congress would be swayed by the publication of the president's views in his letter to Senator Stone.

When the conference was over Speaker Clark said there was a rumor that Germany would postpone the beginning of the new submarine campaign until April 1, or the middle of March. He would not say whether he got his information from the president.

"The sum and substance of the conference," Speaker Clark said, "outside of an explanation made as to the temper of the House regarding the diplomatic situation with Germany and some argument on both sides, is fully set out in Senator Stone's letter to the president, and the president's letter to Senator Stone.

Abolishing Age

It is a momentous time, fraught with—well, fraught with something or other. The spirit of change is in the air. Old things pass away, giving place to the new. Father Time, fugiting in his well known Marathon, is passing a given point. He'll get by, of course, but humanity makes a great to-do whenever he passes this or that mile post. The system of arbitrary measurement seems to be necessary to men, but it has probably slain more perfectly good people than all wars and famines and pestilences put together. Legions die of old age—by the calendar.

"Three score and ten years I have lived—goodness! And it doesn't seem like forty! But my time's up, and I gotter to be gone." Good night—be good to the children!" and we go—just because we have the notion that we are wound up for just seventy years.

Whom keep by the clock? Out with your horologes, your almanacs and calendars! And this all leads up to a suggestion:

January 1st is the day of making resolutions, presumably for the benefit of the resolver and his friends. Very well, then, let all resolve to quit having birthdays, to quit to say why stopping all on the night of years. The latter half of our readers we know, will welcome this suggestion, and the whole-headed sex may follow if the suggestion is formalized. Let us then appoint a commission on commission to abolish age. Do we hear a second?

Some people are always talking about how square they are, and we don't notice any corners sticking out of them at that.

DARKEN GRAY HAIR, LOOK YOUNG, PRETTY

Grandmother's recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens as naturally that nobody can tell.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't "stay" gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

QUIT MEAT IF YOUR KIDNEYS ACT BADLY

Take tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Drink lots of water.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

SAYS HOT WATER WASHES POISONS FROM THE LIVER

Everyone should drink hot water with phosphate in it before breakfast

To feel as fine as a fiddle, we must keep clean, and prevent its sponge ging blue and poisonous physician

If you get headaches, If you catch cold easily If you wake up with a bad taste, coated tongue, nasty breath, or stomach becomes rancid, it's your liver. Sallow skin, muddy complexion, watery eyes all denote liver uncleanliness. Your liver is the most important, also the most abused and neglected organ of the body. A few days its function or how to release the dammed-up body waste, bile and toxins. Most folks poison the violent cathartic, which is a dangerous, salivating chemical which can only be used occasionally because it accumulates in the tissues, also attacks the bones.

Every man and woman, sick or well, should drink each morning before breakfast a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of lime stone phosphate in it to wash from the liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, the poisons, sour bile and toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Limestone phosphate does not resemble the cure like calomel, because it can not salivate, for it is harmless and you can eat anything afterwards. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, and any pharmacist will sell you a quarter pound which is sufficient for a demonstration of how hot water and lime stone phosphate clean freshens the liver, keeping you fit day in and day out.

SKUNK IS SKUNK IN THESE DAYS

ANIMAL VALUED HIGHLY BY UP-TO-DATE DEALERS FOR PRICE THE PELT BRINGS

'Tit Even Said It Makes Gentle Pet—if Treated Kindly.

The gentlemanly fur dealer and the lady who buys furs are less fastidious than a few years ago when the names of the animals that furnished some of the peltries were never mentioned, a pretty alias being substituted in their stead.

Today it is quite different. The dealer in furs uses no subterfuge in his advertisement or in his colloquy with his customer. If the muff and collar are of that native American, the skunk, the salesman does not hesitate to say so openly and aboveboard.

The mephitis putida is a beautiful animal and not to be sneezed at whether it is ambulating in the wood pasture or made up for cold weather wear and adornment of some dainty dame.

Skunks usually live in burrows and in very cold places remain in their subterranean homes from December to the middle of February. The young, usually six to as many as ten in a litter, are born in the spring and remain with their parents until the following spring, when they have to make way for another family.

The skunk is a beautiful and graceful animal and when seen in the woods presents a kittenish appearance. Skunks are nocturnal in their habits and frequently travel considerable distances entering villages and the suburbs of cities where they commit havoc among fowls and eggs.

There are several species of this animal that range over North America from Hudson bay through Canada, Michigan, Indiana and to the south through Mexico to Central America. It is about as large as the domestic cat, the body twelve to fourteen inches long and the tail nine or ten inches more.

The prevailing color is black with white markings on the forehead and neck and a white stripe on each side of the back. Sometimes the white stripes are narrow or altogether wanting. The tail is black mixed with white or tipped with white.

When taken young and handled gently it is said to make an agreeable and pretty pet, but even with this recommendation culled from natural history it is not likely that this animal will ever become a popular favorite.

THINKS MARS IS INHABITED

New Proof is Discovered of Planet's Artificial Canals.

Dr. Percival Lowell of the Flagstaff Observatory, Boston, Mass., in an address describes the newest discoveries made regarding the canals on the planet Mars. He dwelt most on the two canals which made their appearance between 1896 and 1909 and adduced further arguments in support of the hypothesis of their artificial character. The subject of possible signals from Mars to the earth long has agitated scientists, and there are many who scout the theory.

"The objections arise only from those who have ever properly observed the planet," declares Dr. Lowell, "or who quote others in the like predicament. It is a case of science versus nescience, to which there can be but one outcome."

Dr. Lowell told his audience that the new canals are 1000 miles long and of a slender, geometric character, with regular lines of faultless curvature, beyond the power of unassisted nature to contrive. For fifteen years the planet has been carefully scanned, at every approach to the earth, but these canals had not revealed themselves. Thus they were either new canals or new employment of fallow ones, either of which alternatives, he claimed, arguing artificiality in their construction.

ELECTRIC CANNON NOW IN USE

Hurls Big Shells Without Use of Gunpowder.

An electric gun which hurls shells can be hurtled thru the air from cannon without the use of gunpowder as the motive power is claimed to be perfected by a Philadelphia firm.

That the new invention is to revolutionize warfare and soon will be perfected and in actual use on the battle-fronts in Europe is the claim of the promoters.

Altho declining to discuss the mechanism of the gun, Mr. Conkle asserted that a recent experiment with it had demonstrated its efficiency.

"This new gun is noiseless, odorless and from a military point of view the last word in deadliness because there is no smoke [illegible] is hidden from the enemy," explained the secretary of the company.

"A 300-pound shell can be forced for a distance of ten miles and penetrate four inches of armorplate. Owing to the construction of the gun it has an efficiency of more than 300 per cent over the ordinary cannon in the matter of loading and discharging. The biggest guns can be fired with the rapidity of our present day machine gun."

TIRED OF IT.

After some ages had elapsed, developing all sorts of problems, womenkind approached the Gods with a large package of something or other.

"What have you there?" demanded the Gods sharply, for they suspected a trick.

"It is the sum of genius which our emancipation has enabled us to develop!" replied womenkind.

"And what, pray, do your wish to do with it?"

"We wish to trade it off for real charm!"

"Hum! Of course you can't expect to get much real charm in exchange for even so large a quantity of genius."

"Oh, no! We shall be satisfied with a very little real charm. In fact, we are so disgusted with genius and its wretched fruits that we shall probably have no more of it in the future, anyway!"

Here womenkind gave their package a vicious little kick to indicate their disappointment and chagrin.

THE NEW ALADDINISM.

"New lamps for old!" the Wizard cried;
And who should hear but Aladdin's bride.

"How nice," she thought, so the story goes,
"We have one old enough, goodness knows!

"That lamp of Aladdin's is bent and mean,
Rusty and dirty, unfit to be seen.

"I'll swop it," she cried, "while hubby's not here,
I'll never have another such chance, that's clear!"

So she traded the old lamp for a lamp brand-new—
And sad is the sequel—sad but true.

The lamp she got, though showy and bright,
Wasn't worth two shucks as a magic light.

The lamp she traded, so mean and old,
Was worth, as you know, its weight in gold.

And Aladdin, poor cuss, had an awful search
Before he landed it back on its perch.

"New isms for old!" is the cry today;
But before they carry your old away

The Gay Deceiver

From Life

The only other passenger thumbed his tobacco into a melancholy pipe bowl.

"What's your line?" he asked.

"Soap and Christmas candles," I said, and held out my cigar for a light.

"Married?"

"Yes. You?"

"Um-m-m." And he stretched his legs, drew up his elbows and looked worried.

"When I was making this territory about this time last year," he began, "I met a pretty, wifely little girl, and we were married before I left town. Tarascon wasn't on my regular trip then, but now I have to strike home once a month.

"You see I was raised in a family of sisters—all older than I, all unmarried. I could never bring myself to tell them about Edyth. They don't know it yet. Live in Cranford on the Vandalia. My wife thinks I haven't any folks."

"Well?"

He blushed. "There it—we I'm going to be a father." Then he did blush.

I laughed, sympathetic. "You can't bear not to let your sisters know?" I ventured.

He nodded and gulped.

"Tarascon," called the brakeman. "Tarascon."

I was on the hot veranda of the Croxton House, at Croxton, some two weeks later when I felt a modest hand on my shoulder.

"Boy or girl?" were my first words with a grin.

"Girl," announced the father, with pride. "Sophronia Judith Rose. Named for my sisters."

He seated himself, fished in his pocket for his pipe, and smiled nervously.

"They knew it when I got home," he said. "I'd left Edyth's letter in my room. I believe they had been suspecting all along. Well, they never said a thing at supper, but when I went upstairs I saw a string of baby ribbon sticking out of my sample case. The girls had packed it full of things from their hope boxes. Baby things they were.

"I tried to bluff it out, but I—I couldn't do it, and I'd told them all about it five minutes after I came downstairs.

"We all took the train for Tarascon the next day. Edyth was tickled—said she'd suspected I had sisters. She hadn't, though, of course.

"So I had to name the baby for them. Weighed eleven pounds too.

"My, I've got to catch that 9:32 for Tarascon!"

He pulled out his watch, then turned the dial to me, sheepishly. Under the crystal was a tiny slip of narrow ribbon, baby blue.

"So long," he said. "Mayn't see you again. This is my last trip. The firm's giving me a city job where I can be with the family."

His Wonderful English

An American gentleman got acquainted with a Frenchman who was very anxious to acquire the English language. The American in order to help him, said that if he would send his exercises to him he would willingly correct them.

Nothing was heard from the Frenchman for some time, but finally a letter came cauched in the following choice English:

"In small time I can learn so many English from his textbook and her dictionary as I think I will to come at the America and to go on the scaffold to lecture."

She Wasn't Sure

A Chicago vegetarian engaged a German cook not long ago. His wife liked the appearance of the applicant; her references were good and the wages she demanded not exorbitant.

"I'd like to have you come," said the lady of the house, "but perhaps you won't like to live with us. We are vegetarians and never have any meat in the house. Would you be satisfied with a vegetable diet?"

The fraulein scratched her head. "Vell," she said, dubiously, "iss beer a vegetable?"

Not So Easily Caught

Two holiday makers in Devonshire caught a glimpse of Dartmoor Prison while strolling along.

One of them thought to take a rise out of his companion. So he said: "There, look at that!" he exclaimed. "I say, old chap, where would you be if the place had its due?"

"To be walking alone," he replied quickly.

Why He Looked Sad.

It was the week before Christmas. Photographer (taking family group)—"Now, then, Mr. Houseful, the expressions are all right but yours. Try and look happy—remember Christmas is coming."

Mr. Houseful (despondently)—"Confound it man, that's just what I'm thinking about!"

No Wonder.

"Is your neighbor a man of peace?"

"On the contrary I have reason to think that he believes in the mailed hand."

"What reason is that?"

"He's a postman."

Jump from Bed in Morning and Drink Hot Water

Tells why everyone should drink hot water each morning before breakfast.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous despondent worried some days headachy, dull and unstrung some days really incapacitated by illness

If we all would practice inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place Instead of thousands of half sick, anaemic looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions we should see crowds of happy healthy, rosy cheeked people everywhere The reason is that the human system does rid itself each day of all the waste which it accumulates under our present mode of living For every ounce of food and drink taken into the system nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out else it ferments and forms ptomaine like poisons which are absorbed into the blood

Just as necessary as it is to clean the ashes from the furnace each day before the fire will burn bright and hot so we must each morning clear the inside organs of the previous days accumulation of indigestible waste and body toxins Men and women, whether sick or well are advised to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it as a harmless means of washing out of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the indigestible material, waste sour bile and toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach

Millions of people who had their turn at constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, nervous days and sleepless nights have become real cranks about the morning inside-bath. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will not cost much from your druggist or at the store, but is sufficient to demonstrate to anyone, its cleansing sweetening and freshening effect upon the system Adv

BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK 'CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache biliousness dizziness coated tongue foul taste and foul breath always trace them to torpid liver and fermenting food in the bowels or sour gassy stomach

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines instead of being cast out of the system is reabsorbed into the blood when this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sick-headache

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels

A Cascaret tonight will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months Adv.

MEAT CLOGS KIDNEYS THEN YOUR BACK HURTS

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers You—Drink Lots of Water.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick Nearly all rheumatism, headaches liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Adv

ALL BUT ONE OF MADEROS ARE BANNED FROM MEXICO BY GENERAL CARRANZA

Despite the fact that the principles and policies which Carranza stands for are supposed to be the same as those that actuated Francisco I. Madero, Jr., in his fight for the overthrow of the Diaz administration, all the members of the Madero family, with one exception, are prohibited from returning to Mexico. Carranza's reason for this is that the Maderos favored Villa when the break came between the two Constitutionalist chieftains.

Gem Traditions Are Many.

Betsy M. Buell In Philadelphia Ledger.

The popularity of birthstones is greater today than ever before, and the National Association of Jewelers has adopted a new list of them, as follows

January garnet, February, amethyst March, bloodstone or aquamarine April, diamond May emerald June pearl or moonstone July ruby, August sardonyx or peridot September sapphire October, opal or tourmaline November topaz December turquoise or lapis lazuli

Not only are the various months represented by gems but the year has been divided into four parts with spring, in its fresh new mantle of green, associated with the emerald summer with all its brightness and warmth, is classed with the ruby autumn, blessed with the depth of azure skies, the sapphire and winter with its cold and its glittering diamond

Concerning nearly all the stones there is curious and fantastic lore often inexplicable but interesting They were worn by the ancients mostly for talismanic value In other words to exert misfortunes and bring happiness

Gems as Medicine.

They were also employed for medical purposes The effect of the latter though was frequently obtained by reducing them to powder which was so far as possible, dissolved in water and then taken internally

The emerald was supposed to relieve disease of the eyes and have a beneficial influence upon the sight To this day green is acknowledged to be restful to the nerves

The ruby was considered of more value than any other stone by many nations In fact some people place it before the diamond today The omen was that the wearer would live in peace and concord with all men It would also guard his fruit trees and vineyards from injury by tempests

The sapphire was claimed to be an antidote against poison It is one of the most antique stones, as it is said to exercise good influence over the first wearer and even after it has passed into other hands

The amethyst is an interesting stone, and in more superstitious times was employed to cure drunkenness, control evil thoughts and make men wise in business matters There is a legend that Bacchus was offended and declared that the first person whom he met should suffer

Birth of the Amethyst.

Fate sent a beautiful maiden named Amethyst on her way to the shrine of Diana Bacchus had ferocious tigers attack her, but the maiden, seeking aid from the gods was turned into a pure white stone Repenting of his act, Bacchus poured the juice of grapes over the petrified body and thus the stone became a beautiful violet hue that is so much admired today The signet ring of Cleopatra was amethyst engraved with Mithras, deity of light and life Amethysts were more highly prized in days gone by than now however on account of the limited supply A necklace of Queen Charlotte of England was valued at $10 000 but probably would not be worth $500 at present

The name of the turquoise has come down from the fourteenth century It was worn to protect the owner from falling especially if on horseback It was used exclusively by men at the beginning of the Seventeenth century Women, strange to say rarely wore There is a general agreement that turquoise can never be restored to its original color after once being turned Topaz as Plaque Cure.

To the topaz like the emerald is attributed the power to cure dimness of vision When restoring the eyes were rubbed with a topaz which had been previously left in wine for three days In the Fifteenth century topaz was said to cure plague

Apparently the diamond is unknown to the ancients so there are no traditions connected with it

Post Graduate Schools of Our Army.

Robert Welles Ritchie, in Harper's Magazine.

Since the foundation of the schools in 1881 nearly 1,000 officers of the army have been entered upon the "Army Register" as graduates, the institution has grown from a single school of application for infantry and cavalry, as designated by Gen William Tecumseh Sherman its founder, to a group of five colleges with power to command the respectful interest of European war specialists. By the widening influence of the army service schools the Colonel Shellbacks of the staff and line are being brought to appreciation of the fact that the most competent to command, whether a patrol or a division, is he whose familiarity with theory matches his experience in the practical, however wide In a word the army service schools are making the personnel of the army's commissioned force truly professional "The better preparation of the mobile army for war"—that is the comprehensive motto of the American army's graduate college The general staff is thoroughly aware of the circumstance that no science is moving forward to more infinite complexities than does the grim business of war none developing new problems with greater swiftness It looks to the service schools to keep the nation's defensive arm abreast of advancing knowledge

Great has been the change in the character of the service schools and the capacity of their plant since Fort Leavenworth's post headquarters housed the first class in 1881. Then Col Elwell S. Otis, commandant of the post, found himself at the head of a teaching staff comprising five officers highest in rank of the infantry and cavalry detachments stationed at the post Student officers from like branches of the service throughout the country were attached to the units stationed at Leavenworth and were expected to perform all their duties as company officers in addition to those of instruction Rank of student officers was not to exceed that of lieutenant "Correct reading aloud, with care and precision"—this is quoted from the prospectus of instruction for the first class. Writing a plain hand, easy to read designed for the use of the party receiving" two essentials of an officer's higher education in the days when a raid by restless Indians constituted almost the sole military problem against the horizon But with years came expansion After the Spanish war, which with the ensuing Philippine campaigns caused a cessation of work at the Leavenworth schools for four years came the reorganization, whereby the old infantry and cavalry school became first the general service and staff college and in 1911, the present collection of five schools with a roll of 75 student officers 30 instructors, and a curriculum embracing such subjects as the mobilization of national resources and the saving and repairing of ocean cable

The basic school of the five at Leavenworth and the one considered of most value is the army school of the line designed to give a year's course a general military education of the higher order to the student officer who is willing to apply himself to the stern exactions of the curriculum Attendance upon it as well as the four other schools of special character, is purely voluntary only men of enthusiasm and virile regard for the advancement of their professional standing can survive the test of a year in the school of the line shirkers who think to evade the monotony of post life by being detached for study in the graduate school at Leavenworth soon discover their grievous misjudgment. Competition dictates the selection of candidates for attendance upon the school of the line and competition of the keenest sort attends their every moment of application One officer of grade not lower than captain and of not less than five years' commissioned service is chosen from every regiment of infantry cavalry and field artillery not on duty in the Philippines; the choice lying in the hands of the commanding officer of each regiment, subject to confirmation by the secretary of war Further restriction is imposed by the requirement that the number of field artillery officers for any one class be limited to five, this because of the practical and specialized field instruction provided by the field artillery school at Fort Sill, Okla. The rigors of competition for appointment, coupled with individual hard luck in being detailed for service in the Philippines at a favoring moment, sometimes brings to the school of the line men who have grown gray in the waiting

The largest cotton-producing county in the United States, Ellis county, Texas, yielded 143 714 bales last year This is more than six times the amount produced in the whole state of Virginia and more than was raised in either Missouri or Florida

"WILL O' THE WISP" GERMAN U-BOATS

From the London Chronicle.

Paris- The Echo de Paris estimates that there are now 25 enemy submarines operating in the Mediterranean. A few of them are Austrian built, others have been sent overland in sections by rail to the Austrian naval arsenals many have made their way round by sea Every time that Gibraltar has signaled the passing of a German submarine one or more boats have been torpedoed in the western Mediterranean and shortly afterwards they have been at work in the eastern Mediterranean

How are these wandering submarines replenished with fuel and stores? The Echo de Paris says

"At the outset German submarines, coming by way of Gibraltar, were supplied on the Spanish coast between the Portuguese and French frontiers then in the Balearic Isles, where there was a determined provider of petrol But these coasts are now so closely watched that the supplying of U-boats has become impossible.

"Another center of supplies was organized later it is thought in Sicily, on the Girgenti coast, and in Augusta Bay (south coast of Sicily), into which a French destroyer pursued a German submarine and nearly caught it Since the month of May, ever since Italy declared war on Austria things have changed the Sicilian coast line has been closely watched by the Italian navy, and the German submarine supplies have found other lurking places.

"General gossip states that they are now installed in Greece, where they form a powerful organization with an ex-minister whose name is common property, at its head

"It is on the Sicilian coast of the Peloponnesus that the supply bases are most numerous

"Two other bases of supply are still said to exist on the south coast of Crete and on the island of Corfu, where submarines it is said found shelter for a long time in the roadstead of the Achilleion, the kaiser's property (Since this article was written the allies have seized Corfu)

Other bases of supply are reported in the Greek Islands of Cos, Leros and Samos To complete the story, I should mention a base which is said to be situated on the Spanish coast of Morocco, near Melilla

Then the correspondent goes on to a still more serious matter The submarines are fitted with Diesel engines, which can work at will on gasoline the heavier petroleum oils and petroleum residue But the Greek government has a monopoly of these products, which come exclusively from the Standard Oil company in oil tankers and are quite familiar to the British navy

"All such oil arriving in Greece is consigned to the government, said is the correspondent All we can say is that petroleum imports into Greece have increased in enormous proportions."

The modus operandi is as follows

"The German supply agents buy the oil or petrol from the government they then consign the precious liquid to depots hidden inland not far from the sea. On certain specific days or nights—usually nights—the tanks are transported on mule-back to the point of the coast where local craft are waiting The oil tanks are put aboard and the boats carry out their cargo to the submarines which are lying in wait in the offing In a few hours the whole thing is over

Now that the Greek government has allowed the allied warships to exercise a close inspection of the coasts, it is hoped that these alcoves will become rarer"

Where Western Front Ends.

From the London Observer

The western boundary of the allied lines, which protect a front of 500 miles with a maze of more than 10,000 miles of trenches is a natural one and it is easy to understand how the trenches of either side—the Germans, no doubt have their 10,000 miles of trenches as well as the allies—start from a line so clear and definite as the coast of the North sea. It has been said that a man could enter the great ditch which is the rampart of civilization, at the North sea and could make his way along it—always below the level of the ground—until after many days he came out on the Swiss frontier

Strictly speaking, the feat is an impossible one as the front nutty of the trenches is broken in consequence of geographical conditions but for practical purposes it is a sufficiently accurate expression of fact The question then arises What would the adventurous person who attempted to walk along the whole front in the trenches find when he reached the Swiss frontier the extreme point of the French right wing"

He would find a barbed wire fence no more formidable than those which inclose many English meadows. After the vast and complicated fields of barbed wire which protect the trenches this fence seems absurdly inadequate and artificial to be the counterpart of the great expanse of the North sea which cuts the lines on the west There are a few pieces of red and white canvas tied to the wires to show that at this point the neutral territory of Switzerland begins, and a single Swiss sentry stands, with bayonet fixed behind a movable barrier garnished with barbed wire that is set across the country road This placid, unwarlike scene seemed an impossibly tame conclusion for 500 miles of complicated earthworks and fortifications.

PREPAREDNESS PLEA COMES FROM SOUTH

Congressman W. W. Venable.

Congressman W. W. Venable, who has just filled the chair in the house of representatives made vacant by the death of Congressman "Sam" Witherspoon of Mississippi, recently startled the house by a speech in which he came out strongly for preparedness. Venable's predecessor was the leader of the anti-preparedness forces in the lower house until his death.

WAITING FOR THE END OF THE WAR

"Then Take Advantage of the Opportunities in Canada."

(Contributed by W. J. White, of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada.)

I strolled into a bank in one of the cities of the west a short time ago and the bank manager said after the war, the Canadians should be prepared for a great influx of people The crops that the western Canadian farms have produced in 1915, and the wealth that the farmers have had thrust upon them by the high price of grain, will make farm lands valuable and farming remunerative. After the war is over there will be thousands go to Canada to engage in agriculture and many other industries that will certainly prove profitable. Conditions will be wonderfully good. The advertising that Canada has had during the last year or two by its magnificent contribution of over 250,000 men to fight for the Empire, the wonderful sums it has given to the Red Cross and Patriotic funds, the excellent showing it made in subscribing over double when only 50 millions of dollars was asked as a war loan, the bravery, courage and hardihood of the soldiers who have fought the battles in Flanders, it is just wonderful" and my enthusiastic banker grew eloquent. One might have thought he was a subsidized booster for Canada. "But," he said, "they won't go until after the war"

"Well, now, Mr. ——, why wait until after the war? If all you say be true, and you have said nothing yet of the wonderful bank clearings of Canada today, nothing of the fact that the immense grain crop of Western Canada this year has given to every man, woman and child in that country, over three hundred dollars per head, why wait until after the war? After the war, under such conditions as you have pictured (and which are real) land values will go up, prices will increase. Advantage should be taken of the low prices at which these agricultural lands can be had today. They have not increased any as yet, and excellent farm lands can be had close to railways in old settlements, in excellent communities for from fifteen to thirty dollars per acre. The climate is good and will be no better after the war."

"What about conscription, though? Is there not a danger from conscription, and should I advise any to go there now, would they not have to face it? Then too, there is the report that there is a heavy war tax on lands"

I was surprised to learn that these old yarns, stories that I thought had been exploded long ago, were still doing duty in many parts of the United States, and that a gentleman of the wide learning of my friend, was inclined to believe them.

"Conscription!" I said. "With Canada contributing 250,000 men voluntarily enlisted, why conscription? There is no conscription in Canada, and neither will there be. It is not needed In any case no legislation could be passed by the Dominion Parliament which would impose military service upon people who are not citizens of Canada, either by birth or naturalization. Settlers from the United States could not become naturalized British subjects until they had resided in Canada continuously for three years." I quoted from official documents.

"In the first few months of the war I clearly stated that there would not be conscription in Canada. I repeat that statement today."

"And then as to taxes," I continued, quoting again from official authority. "All taxes levied by the Federal Government take the indirect form of customs excise and inland revenue duties. It is untrue that farmers are paying direct war-tax levies and no intending settler need hesitate to come to Canada on this account.

"Official denials should convince you that all apprehensions which have been making some would-be-settlers from the United States hesitate to make a change while the war lasts are without foundation. With these misunderstandings cleared up, the present war conditions even become an added inducement to settlement in any part of the provinces of western Canada, inasmuch as war prices and keen demands for all manner of farm products afford the farmer a special opportunity to make money"

I was glad of the chance and pleased to have him state that his views had altogether changed.

I could have continued, and told him of the fortunes that had been made in the season of 1915, out of farming. wheat growing, oat growing, barley growing, cattle raising, dairying and mixed farming. I could have told him of an Ottawa (Canada) syndicate that had a yield of 130 bushels of oats per acre from their farm at Wainwright and from 60 acres of wheat field they threshed over 60 bushels per acre. These yields while phenomenal, were repeated in many portions of western Canada. It was interesting to inform him that the average yield of spring wheat in Saskatchewan was 25.16 bushels per acre; Manitoba, 26.3 bushels; in Alberta, 36.16 bushels, and over the three provinces there was a total average of over 30 bushels per acre.

"The immense crop that has just been harvested has put millions of dollars in the hands of the farmers, the work of distribution through the regular channels of trade has already begun. Millions of bushels of grain are still in the hands of the farmers which means that there is a vast store of realizable wealth that will be steadily going into circulation benefiting the thousands who are dependent directly on the basic industry of the province for their livelihood

"The mock prosperity that rested on the insecure foundation of inflated real estate values has passed away and in its place the corner stone of the country's sound financial future is being built.

"The trust and mortgage companies the large implement companies and wholesale merchants all have a story today of marked improvement in their business. The farmers and others are meeting their just dues and paying off debts that in many cases have been long overdue Collections are better today than they have been since the most prosperous years of our history, and obligations are being met freely and promptly.

"Now," I said, "why should they wait until the war is over"

And he agreed with me

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XVIII—(Continued.) 16

"In his favor, it may be urged that a man like Swain doesn't commit murder—though, as a matter of fact, this is a dangerous generalization, for all sorts of men commit murder, but if he should do so, it would be only under great provocation and in the heat of anger, certainly not in cold blood with a noose; and, finally, if the motion of the curtain Miss Vaughan noticed was made by the murderer, it couldn't possibly have been Swain, because he was with us at that moment. You will see that there is a mass of evidence against him, and practically the whole defense is that such a crime would be impossible to one of his temperament You know yourself how flimsy such a defense is.

"Against the Hindus, on the other hand, practically the only basis of suspicion is that such a crime might be temperamentally possible to them They may have been on the ground, and the method of the murder savors strongly of Thuggee—though don't forget that Swain admitted he could have tied that knot. Besides, if it was the Thug who followed them, he wouldn't have made any noise, and most certainly he couldn't have left the prints of Swain's fingers on the body But, if Swain is right in his assertion that he saw the snake in the arbor, it is probable that the thug wasn't far away

"Against an unknown it may be urged that neither Swain nor the Hindus could have committed the crime, but I don't see how an unknown could either, unless he happened to be one of the three or four people in the world with finger tips like Swain's. And that is too far fetched to be believable.

"But this I am sure of, Lester," and Godfrey leaned forward again—"the murder was committed either by Swain or by someone anxious to implicate Swain. We agree that it wasn't Swain. Very well, then the person who committed the murder made a noise in following Miss Vaughan and her father so that she should think it was Swain who was following them, he picked up the bloodstained handkerchief that Swain had dropped, perhaps when he fled from the arbor and placed it beside the body, and in some way inconceivable to me he pressed the prints of Swain's fingers on the dead man's robe Now, to do that he must have known that Swain was injured—the bloodstained handkerchief would tell him that, but he must also have known that it was his right hand that was injured There was no blood Swain's left hand"

Godfrey paused I was following his reasoning with such absorbed attention that I could feel my brain crinkle with the effort

"Now listen" said Godfrey and I could have smiled at the uselessness of the admonition as if I were not already listening with all my faculties' "There is only one way in which the murderer could have known that it was Swain's right hand, and that was by overhearing the conversation in the arbor. But if he overheard that much, he overheard it all, and he knew therefore what it was Swain proposed to do. He knew that Vaughan's sanity was to be questioned, he knew that he would probably be placed in a sanatorium, he knew that Miss Vaughan would probably marry Swain. Presuming that it was Silva, he knew that, unless something was done to stop it, a very few days would place both Vaughan and his daughter beyond his reach.'

"That is true," I admitted, "but Vaughan was beyond his reach a good deal more certainly dead than he would have been in a sanatorium. Besides, it isn't at all certain that he would have been sent to a sanatorium"

"That's an objection, surely," Godfrey agreed, "but I must find out if Vaughan is really beyond his reach dead."

I stared at him.

"You don't mean

"I don't know what I mean, Lester. I can feel a sort of dim meaning at the back of my mind, but I can't get it out into the light."

"Besides," I went on, "if the yogi did it, how did he get back into the house before we got there?"

"He peeped in at the door, saw the coast was clear and went back through the library. Remember, Miss Vaughan was unconscious. That doesn't bother me. And another thing, Lester. How did Miss Vaughan's father come to burst in on her and Swain like that How did he know they were in the arbor? It was dark and he couldn't have seen either of them."

"He might have been walking about the grounds and overheard them.'

"I don't believe it. I believe somebody told him they were there. And only one person could have told him—that is Silva. No—there's only one point I can't get past—that's the finger prints."

And then I remembered.

"Godfrey," I cried, "there's one thing—I forgot to tell you. You heard Swain remark that Vaughan was a collector of finger prints?"

"Yes."

"And that he had a set of Swain's?"

"Yes."

"Well, when I told Miss Vaughan about the prints on her father's robe, she ran to a bookcase and got out a book. It had Vaughan's collection in it, all bound together. But the page on which Swain's were had been torn out."

Godfrey sat for a moment, staring at me spellbound. Then he began pacing up and down the study, like a tiger in its cage; up and down, up and down.

"I'm bound to add," I went on finally, "that Hinman suggested a very pladusible reason for their disappearance."

"What was it?"

"He said they were probubl, destroyed by Vaughan himself, because of his dislike of Swain He said that would be characteristic of Vaughan's form of insanity."

Godfrey took another turn up and down, then he stopped in front of my chair.

"What did Miss Vaughan think of that explanation?" he asked.

"It didn't seem to impress her, but I don't remember that she made any comment."

He stood of moment longer staring down at me, and I could feel the intense concentration of his mind; then he ran his fingers impatiently through his hair.

"I can't get it, Lester!" he said. "I can't get it. But I will get it! It's there! It's there, just out of reach." He shrugged his shoulders and glanced at his watch. "I'm getting dippy" he added, in another tone. "Let's go out and get a breath of air"

I followed him out into the yard I knew where he was going among the trees and up the ladder Silently we took our places on the limb, silently we stared out into the darkness.

And there, presntly, the strange star glowed and burned steel-blue, and floated slowly down, and burst above a white-robed figure, standing as though carved in marble, its arms extended its head thrown back

That fellow is certainly an artist,' Godfrey muttered, as he led the way back to the house

CHAPTER XIX

THE YOGI CONQUERS

The events of the day the followed—Sunday I shall pass over as briefly as may be It was for me a day of disappointment, culminating in despair and looking back at it I remember is as a grey day windy and with gusts of rain

Dr Hinman stopped for us, and Godfrey and I accompanied him to the service over the body of the murdered man We were the only outsiders there, besides the undertaker and his assistants, and they were not admitted to the ceremony This was witnessed only by Miss Vaughan, Mahbub and us three The servants were not there, and neither were Miss Vaughan's nurses

I have never seen a more impressive figure than Silva made that morning. His robes were dead black, and in contrast to them and to his hair and beard, his face looked white as marble But, after the first moments, the ceremony failed to interest me for Silva spoke a language which I supposed to be Hindustani, and there was a monotony about it and about his gestures which ended in getting on my nerves. It lasted half an hour, and the moment it was over, Miss Vaughan slipped away The yogi and Mahbub followed her, and then we three stepped forward for a last look at the body

It was robed all in white. The undertaker had managed to compose the features, and the high stock concealed the ugly marks upon the neck So there was nothing to tell of the manner of his death, and there was a certain majesty about him as he lay with hands crossed and eyes closed

We left the room in silence and Hinman signed to the undertaker that the service was ended

"I am going with the body to the crematory" he said and presently drove away with the undertaker ahead of the hearse. Godfrey and I stood gazing after it until it passed from sight then in silence we walked down the drive to the entrance The gardener was standing there, and regarded us with eyes which seemed to me distinctly unfriendly He made no sign of recognition and, the moment we were outside he closed the gates and locked them carefully, as though obeying precise instructions.

"So," said Godfrey, in a low tone, as we went on together "the lock has been repaired. I wonder who ordered that done?"

"Miss Vaughan, no doubt I answered. 'She wouldn't want those gates gaping open."

"Perhaps not," Godfrey assented. "but would she want the barrier intact? Remember, Lester, it's as much a barrier from one side as from the other"

"Well, she won't be inside it much longer," I assured him. "I'm going to get her out this afternoon."

The words were uttered with a confidence I was far from feeling, and I rather expected Godfrey to challenge it, but he walked on without replying, his head bent in thought, and did not again speak of Miss Vaughan or her affairs.

He drove into the city shortly after lunch, and it was about the middle of the afternoon when I presented myself again at the gates of Elmhurst and rang the bell. I waited five minutes and rang again. Finally the gardener came shuffling down the drive and asked me what I wanted. I told him I had an appointment with his mistress, but, instead of admitting me, he took my card and shuffled away with it.

I confess that I grew angry, as I stood there kicking my heels at the roadside, for he was gone a long time, and all these precautions and delays were incomprehensible to me. But he came back at last, unlocked the gate without a word, and motioned me to enter Then he locked it again, and led the way up the drive to the house. The house maid met us at the door of the library, as though she had been stationed there.

"If you will wait here, sir," she said, "Miss Vaughan will see you."

"I hope she is well," I ventured, thinking the girl might furnish me with some clue to all this mystery, but she was already at the door.

Quite well, sir," he said, and the next instant had disappeared.

Another 10 minutes elapsed, and then, just as I was thinking seriously of putting on my hat and leaving the house, I heard a step coming down the stair. A moment later Miss Vaughan stood on the threshold.

I had taken it for granted that, relieved of her father's presence, she would return to the clothing of every day, but she still wore the flowing white semi-Grecian garb in which I had first seen her I could not but admit that it added grace and beauty to her figure, as well as a certain impressiveness impossible to petticoats, and yet I felt a sense of disappointment. For her retention of the costume could only mean that her father's influence was still dominant.

"You wished to see me?" she asked; and again I was surprised, for I had supposed she would apologize for the delay to which I had been subjected. Instead, she spoke almost as to a stranger.

"I had an appointment for this afternoon," I reminded her ,striving to keep my vexation from my voice.

"Oh, yes," and she came a few steps into the room, but her face lost none of its coldness. "I had forgotten It is not to speak of business?"

"No," I said; "it is to speak of your going to friends of Mr Swain and me—for a time, at least."

"You will thank your friends for me, she answered calmly; "but I have decided to remain here."

"But—but," I stammered, taken aback at the finality of her tone, "do you think it wise?"

"Yes—far wiser than going to people I do not know and who do not know me."

"And safe," I persisted, 'do you think it safe?"

"Safe?" she echoed looking at me in astonishment. 'Certainly What have I to fear?"

I had to confess that I myself did not know very clearly what she had to fear, so I temporised

'Are you keeping the nurses?"

'No I do not need them They left an hour ago.

"But the servants,' I said in a panic 'they are here' They are going to stay?"

'Your questions seem most extraordinary to me, Mr. Lester Of course the servants will stay."

"And—and the Hindus" I blurted out.

"Yes, and the Hindus, as you call them. This is their home It was my father's wish."

I gave it up, her manner indicated that all this was no concern of mine, and that my interference was a mere impertinence But I tried on parting shot

"Mr Swain is very anxious you should not stay here' I said "He will be deeply grieved when he learns your decision.'

To this she made no answer, and, finding nothing more to say, sore at heart, and not a little angry and resentful I started to leave the room.

"There is one thing more," I said turning back at the threshold I shall have to go in to the city tomorrow but I shall come out again in the evening. Would it be convenient to have our business conference after dinner"

"Yes, she agreed, "that will do very well"

'At 8 o'clock then"

'I shall expect you at that time,' she assented and with that I took my leave

It was in a most depressed state of mind that I made my way back to Godfrey's and I sat down on the porch and smoked a pipe of bitter meditation For I felt that, somehow, Miss Vaughn was slipping away from me. There had been a barrier between us today which had not been there before, a barrier of coldness and reserve which I could not penetrate Some hostile influence had been at work, in death, even more than in life ,perhaps, her father's will weighed upon her I could imagine how a feeling of remorse might grow and deepen, and urge her toward foolish and useless sacrifice

And just then Mrs. Hargis came out and told me that someone wanted me on the 'phone. It was Swain.

"They let me come out here to the office to 'phone to you," he said, as he heard my exclamation of surprise "Simmonds happened in and told them it would be all right. He's here now"

'And they're treating you all right?"

'They're treating me like the star boarder" he laughed. And then his voice grew suddenly serious. "Have you seen Miss Vaughan?"

"Yes,' I answered, for I knew of course that the question was coming.

'Well"

Miss Vaughan refuses to go to the Royces Swain"

There was a moment's silence

Then where will she go"'

She won't go anywhere"

You don't mean," he cried, panic in his voice 'that she's going to stay out there"

"Yes she laughed when I mentioned danger There's one consolation the servants will stay"

Did you tell her how anxious I was for her

Yes I did my best, Swain."

And it made no difference

No it made no difference The fact is, Swain, I fancy she's a little remorseful about her father—his death has unnerved her—and there was the funeral today—and, as a sort of atonement she's trying to do what she imagines he would wish her to do.

"He wished her to become a priestess," said Swain, his voice ghastly.

"Oh well she won't go that far" I assured him cheerfully 'and no doubt in a few days, when the first impression of the tragedy has worn off, she will be ready to go to the Royces.' I'll keep suggesting it, and I'm going to have Mrs. Royce call on her."

'Thank you, Mr Lester,' he said, but his voice was still shaking. "I—this sort of knocks me out—I hadn't foreseen it. I'll have to think it over But there's one thing you can do'

'What is it?"

"Watch the house' he cried. Watch the house' And be ready if she screams again.

"All right," I said, soothingly, "I'll do that. But tell me, Swain, what is it you fear?"

"I fear Silva!" said Swain, in a voice husky with emotion. "It isn't remorse for her father—it's Silva who's working on her I feel it, some way—I'm sure of it God knows what he'll try—any villany. You must watch the house, Mr Lester—day and night you must watch the house!"

'All right," I said, again, strangely impressed by his words. You may count on me."

"Thank you," he said. "Remember, we've only you. Goodbye."

Potato a Spanish Discovery.

From "Source, Chemistry and Use of Food Products," by E. H. S. Bailey

The potato is a native of Chile, Peru and Mexico It is a much traveled tuber, as it was probably taken from Peru to Spain in the early Sixteenth century, and to Florida and Virginia by the Spanish explorers, then to Great Britain from Virginia about 1565. The wild plant still is found in South America, but with a less developed tuber

It was cultivated in Europe and in 1663 recommended by the Royal Society of London on account of its great yield, for introduction into Ireland as a safeguard against famine This, however, proved to be a false hope, as, later, too much reliance was placed in the potato by the Irish, and when a potato disease made the crop a failure in 1846 great suffering resulted.

For many years the potato was extensively cultivated in Virginia, but was only introduced into New England when carried there from Ireland in the Eighteenth century. As late as 1771 it was regarded in England as valuable only as food for stock

Use Plenty of Sugar.

From the Outing Magazine

A disputed point in dietetics is the food value of sugar and indeed of the carbohydrates in general. (Sugar is pure carbohydrate.) Voit's standard diet for a man at hard physical labor is 133 grams per day of proteid, 95 grams fat, and 437 grams of carbohydrates. Bearing in mind that cereals and vegetables are the articles high in carbohydrates, while meat consists of proteid and fat, it will be observed that this preponderance of carbohydrates is the usual thing in our ordinary diet.

Until quite recently, however, it was the idea of athletic trainers that the food required for extreme physical fitness was an excess of proteid. More recently the pendulum has taken a swoing back toward Voit's standard. Scott laid considerable stress on the high nutritive value of the carbohydrates and his sledging ration on the dash to the south pole, consisting of pemmican, butter, biscuits, cocoa, sugar and tea, contained its full share.

Edward Berry, of West Pittsfield drives a sleigh which he asserts is 154 years old. He says it was bought by the West Pittsfield Shakers in 1761 and was supposed to have been 16 years old then. It is now owned by Irving W[illegible] and has been in use fifty-five years.

A New Remedy for Kidney, Bladder and all Uric Acid Troubles

Dear Readers

I appeal to those of you who are bothered with kidney and bladder trouble, that you give up the use of harsh salts or alcoholic medicines and in their place take a short treatment of "Anuric." I have taken many of Dr. Pierce's medicines for the past twenty-five years with good results. I suffered with kidney trouble for some years. I recently heard of the newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, namely, his "Anuric" Tablets. After using same I am completely cured of my kidney trouble. A doctor pronounced me a well preserved woman for my age, all due, I believe, to Dr. Pierce's aid. MRS. MELINDA E. MILLER.

If you suffer from backache, lumbago, rheumatism, get "Anuric" now.

The Wheat Yield Tells the Story of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For, while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions.

The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common.

Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc.

There is no war tax on land and no conscription.

ZIMMERMAN PINE MOTH.

Entomologists Advise Cutting Out Brood Trees to End an Infestation of this Insect.

By the simple method of using "spike-topped," lightning-struck, and gnarly-branched mature trees for firewood or other domestic purposes, the entomologists of the department believe that the damage done by the Zimmerman pine moth, especially to yellow pine in the west and white, red and various other pines in the east, can be greatly minimized. The caterpillar of this moth is the cause of extensive boring under the bark of pine trees, which results in pitch deposits in the wood, making the lumber too pitchy for commercial use, besides killing portions of the trees.

This moth is about one-half inch long and light to reddish gray color. Its wing expanse is from 1 1-4 to 1 1-2 inches, and the fore wings are shaded reddish and marked by W-shaped lines. The hind wings are pale yellowish white. It is the parent of caterpillars which, when fully grown are about three-fourths inch in length, with a chestnut-brown head, black jaws, naked body, and a series of dots, darker than the skin, each surmounted by a bristle. The caterpillar ranges in color from dirty white, through reddish yellow, to vivid green, according to the kind of tree on which it is feeding. This caterpillar in turn changes to a chrysalis about three-fourths inch long and light brown in color, which latter changes to blackish brown. The caterpillar weaves its cocoon only in the tunnel of its operations, and the moth leaves it there upon emergence.

The moths fly and lay their eggs in batches, mostly during July, and hibernate in the form of caterpillars, hence the necessity to burn infested trees before spring. The chrysalis is formed in the spring and the moths issue shortly thereafter.

The moth as a rule attacks mature trees from 10 to 30 feet from the top down and second-growth trees from about breast-high up to 30 to 40 feet. The presence of larvae which bore into the bark is indicated by drops of pitch oozing out of the tunnels, and the young larvae shows its presence in infested trees by the mixture of bark dust and coarse castings thrown out of the holes in the bark. As a general rule, trees that below the spike show branches with yellow needles are almost certain to be infested. Such trees, as well as lightning-struck trees which remain green, and those showing knobby growth on branches are likely to harbor great numbers of the insects—to be the brood trees—and should be cut out and burned or used for firewood before spring; otherwise the moths resulting from the caterpillars in these breed trees will attack the second growth, and when a tree is badly attacked the pest may kill big portions of it besides making the lumber pitchy and unsuitable for anything where shrinkage is objectionable.

If the brood trees are cut out, woodpeckers, esjecially the hairy woodpecker, will probably attend to the higher infestation in the young trees, as this bird has been observed to feed heavily on this caterpillar.

This remedy is particularly strongly recommended for wood lots, as a number of experiments have shown that by using the right trees for firewood the damage is either greatly minimized or absolutely controlled. In one wood lot east of Missoula, Mont., covering 40 acres, 25 per cent of the second growth had been infested each year for several seasons. The cutting and use for firewood of only three over-mature trees standing on that farm, but the cutting out of one with an infested spike top and two that were full of knobby branches—the three suspected of being the brood trees—relieved the infestation.

In another locality the entomologists found over 3,000 second growth trees infested each year, and a survey of this growth indicated that the cutting out of not more than 24 brood trees in a stand of 1,000 of the same age would effectually end the depreciation.

DES MOINES FATHER APPLIES TO POLICE TO KILL SICK BABY

Child Has Scarcely Slept Since Birth on Account of Its Great Suffering.

Des Moines, Ia March 4 Charles Cleveland asked the police to kill his 2 month-old baby girl, deformed and suffering with frequent convulsions, that her suffering might be ended.

When Cleveland walked into the office of Chief Crawford he asked for a doctor to see his baby He suggested that the baby be "put to sleep" so soundly that it would never wake up again

The father further declared that he would have to "do something" himself if the police would not.

When Dr Guy Clift, police surgeon, visited the Cleveland home the mother declared the baby has hardly slept since it was born, that it cries continually and often goes into convulsions.

Mrs Cleveland asked that the baby be taken away before it "drove her crazy

"I've been to half the doctors in Des Moines, Mr Cleveland told newspapermen 'but they wouldn't do anything I would have done it myself but that would have been murder

Dr Clift told the Clevelands their baby could not live long He refused to take any action that would put it "to sleep for good'

'It is a sin against God not to do it' Cleveland answered "Why if I saw a dog in the street that was hurt and couldn't live what do you think I'd do I'd get that gun of mine that I keep here and I'd kill it"

INSURGENT TAXPAYERS TO MEET AT DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., March 4.—Insurgent taxpayers of Iowa will meet in Des Moines, March 15, in state convention This was decided at a conference called by State Senator Justin R Doran, of Boone, who asserts that Iowa is too lavish in spending taxpayers' money It is stated in the official call for the state conference, to which all insurgents are invited, that "nothing political will be tolerated"

In the campaign of 1914 a local league of taxpayers in Boone and Greene counties, headed by Senator Doran and Mahlon Head, had an important part in reducing Governor Clarke's majority, due to the governor's part in promoting the $2,000,000 park and other state extravagances

IOWA DEMOCRATIC AGENT GOES TO CONSULT BRYAN

Des Moines Ia March 4 James J Reddy, of Shenandoah, publicity manager for the progressive wing of the democratic party, which recently bolted from the organization has gone to Miami, Fla to confer with William J Bryan He will discuss the tactics to be employed by the progressive faction in Iowa and the extent to which Bryan's name may be used in connection with the progressive's fight

On Mr Reddy's return from Florida he will open headquarters for the progressives in Des Moines

His mission lends credence to the report that the progressive democrats in Iowa are not very solidly for Wilson and look instead to Bryan for leadership. At their conference here the progressives however announced they are backing Wilson

FEDERAL DEPARTMENT WILL PROSECUTE ILLEGAL HUNTING

Iowa City Ia March 4 Prof Frank E Horack, of the political science department of the state university, has been informed by the United States bureau of biological survey that Iowa hunters have no immunity from the federal law against spring duck shooting A few days ago when Dr Horack noted newspaper articles stating that the conflict of the Iowa law with the federal statute would make the latter ineffective in this state he wrote to Dr T S Palmer, of the government bureau. In the reply an administrative assistant declared that the department would prosecute every violation of the law of which it could secure evidence.

KINTNER DROPS CASE AGAINST WOMAN; SHE THINKS HE'S "CLOSE"

Wouldn't Marry Him Now on Bet, She Says—Returns Ring But Keeps Gray Suit.

Des Moines, Ia., March 4. W W Kintner, 43 years old, whom Mrs. Anna Morton left waiting at the Chamberlain hotel on the day they were to be married, dismissed a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses against her yesterday.

The release of Mrs. Morton, who had been held at police headquarters for a day, was in consideration of the farmer's realizing some salvage from the wreck. It amounted to a diamond ring, cost $50, and $20 in money Mrs Morton has the gray suit which the farmer bought her, $3 which he let her keep this morning until she gets work, and her husband in Indiana

It was not a man whose business judgment is clouded by romance with whom Mrs. Morton dealt for her freedom The farmer had spent $150 in clothes and dinners and theaters and the ring during two weeks' courtship of his housekeeper, and he wanted it back Forty dollars had been given Mrs Morton in cash to be used in getting a divorce.

"I told him I had $23 left said Mrs Morton after the meeting "I asked him if I couldn't keep a dollar or two until I got work.

"He told me 'Anna, I don't know whether I can trust you or not You have thrown me down hard and everybody is laughing at me'

"I told him I surely would pay him back when I got work and he let me have $3 of the money I asked him where to send the money and he said he didn't know where he would be He felt pretty bad.

"I wouldn't marry him on a bet," announced Anna. "He is too different from when he was spending so much money on me. Why, when he was buying clothes and things for me I never thought a dollar was anything to him"

Mrs. Morton reflected at considerable length upon the natures of men seeking a wife and the same men upon obtaining one or being disappointed She thinks Mr. Kintner would have turned out to be "close"

MARCH IS MONTH FOR APPLYING FERTILIZER

Ames, Ia March 4 This is the month for the farmer to begin spreading manure, 'the most valuable fertilizer available in Iowa," as the soils men at Ames denote it

From hundreds of experiments conducted by the soils department, it was discovered that the application of manure produced a greater net return and in most cases greater crop yields than any other fertilizing material tested.

On an eight-year test the average net return with manure alone for corn was $4 69 Other treatments returned much less and in many cases were even an expense With oats manure produced an average net return of $1 62 while all other treatments were an expense With clover manure gave a net return of $3 76, much more than any other treatment

MRS. DAVISON TELLS COURT STORY OF HER DOMESTIC TROUBLES

Is Wife of Secretary of Iowa Executive Council—Minor Outbreaks Cited.

Des Moines, Ia., March 3 Arthur H Davison, member of the state executive council, besieged the home of his wife for hours at a time after she had procured an injunction restraining him from coming on the premises, according to her testimony given in her divorce action now being heard before Judge W S. Ayres

Mrs. Addie K Davison, wife of the official, who has brought suit for a separation on the grounds of cruelty, was on the witness stand most of the day yesterday

Dressed in a black skirt and white silk shirtwaist Mrs. Davison sat through the weary and tedious hours giving her testimony in calm and clear tones

Following the filing of her petition, Davison filed an answer and cross petition Mrs Davison denied each and every charge her husband has made.

After I had procured an injunction restraining Mr Davison from coming on the place where I lived, he kept writing me letters and begging for an interview until I was nearly down with nervous prostration," said the witness.

'He measured off about seven feet from the lot line and here he would walk up and down for hours calling loud enough so that everybody in the neighborhood thought he was crazy."

Testifying relative to their relations while living together, Mrs. Davison said

"I tried to do my best in every way to make our home life pleasant."

Mrs Davison then told of her husband coming home at 2 o'clock one morning She said he was very nervous and that he told her he thought he would go crazy

"I asked him what was the matter, and he said 'it is about you and ——,'" (Here Mrs. Davison explained that the party he referred to was a woman, but she would not mention her name)

I said she is no woman to go crazy about," continued the witness, "and he answered back that he liked her very much'

Mrs. Frank Hill who with her husband, at one time lived in the same apartment house with the Davisons, testified that she frequently heard Davison quarreling with his wife

ENGINEERS DECIDE NOT TO DYNAMITE ICE GORGE

Oskaloosa, Ia., March 3 The Des Moines river rose three feet yesterday in the vicinity of Givin when a mass of ice from the upper river smashed into the huge floe that is choking the river a mile and a half west of Givin. The overflowing waters of the river received a new impetus for several hours but tonight the flood was again receding

No attempt will be made to blast a channel through the six-mile long ice gorge engineers decided tonight. The undertaking, they said, would probably prove fruitless, even though thousands of pounds of dynamite were used. W H Petersen, Rock Island engineer, sent here by Governor Clarke has opposed any further attempt at dynamiting the gorge He believes the situation will solve itself unless a severe freeze ensues.

The gorge is motionless now and is frozen from bank to bank Unless it is augmented by a further freeze or released by a sudden thaw the damage will likely be confined to the vicinity now suffering No damage further southeast is feared at present and alarm has subsided at Eddyville and points south of there.

It is estimated that more than 1,000 acres of land is submerged in the vicinity of the big gorge Thirty families have been driven from their farm homes

ALLEGED HEIR TO LARGE ESTATE NOW AT CHARLES CITY

Charles City, Ia., March 3 —Keith Edwin Dalrymple, alleged heir to between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, left by his father, was brought here yesterday by Dr C M Palmer, of Charles City The boy will make his home with the Palmer family. Dalrymple is a nephew of Mrs. Palmer, and made his home with the Palmers for a time, but ran away. He was found in a southern hospital

Dr. Palmer declined to say how much money is coming to the lad from his father's estate. He said, however, that neither time nor expense had been spared in the hunt for young Dalrymple

Recently Julius Briggs, jr of Chicago, when arrested for forgery, claimed to be the heir to the Dalrymple estate. His claim was disproved, however. Other claimants have appeared from time to time, but all proved to be other than the rightful heir

GERMANS ARE SEEING VISIONS OF WEALTH

Extreme Annexationists Would Hold Conquered Provinces of Russia.

Paris, March 4.—Some of the extremists of the annexationists say the empire borders should be extended and made safe from military and political standpoints, when peace is reached. Herr Furmann, national liberal, speaking in the Prussian diet today in support of the democratic colonization measure, said.

"By bringing in the governments of Courland, Kovno and Suwalki, the price of the land would increase to 3,000,000,000 marks and we have no occasion to let this fall into the laps of the inhabitants there as a gift. We need, along with the securing of Germany's political might and with the strengthening of our western industry, new and extended lands for colonization in the east, which we must acquire for necessary extensions of our agricultural foundations."

Polish delegates opposed the proposed colonization measure, unless it was amended to provide the new colonization state would not be discriminated against because of religion, descent, language or political activity. They referred to past discrimination against Poles in the east and asked for guarantees for the future.

The Poles referred to the fact that Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and the governor of Warsaw have prohibited real estate transfers in Poland, which have caused dissatisfaction in the districts involved, as the Poles understand that the prohibition will be continued until after peace is restored and fear that the resulting increase in values will be solely to the benefit of the Germans.

DIG WAY THROUGH PILE OF CORPSES

Blood Trickling Through Ground Give Buried Sappers Clew to Positions—Had Lost Hope.

Paris, March 4.—The story of the three French sappers who were buried alive for hours during the battle of Verdun, and who finally dug their way out to safety is told in detail by one of them who arrived in Paris on a hospital train this morning He said:

"With my friends, Bernard and Jean, I was posted in a trench at the edge of the Vauche woods. The enemy showed a disposition to attack, and, according to orders, the three of us, with a charge of powder, fuses and tools, started down a mine gallery, to fill the mine chamber, lay the wires and to pack the gallery behind it. We did this without difficulty, and were on our way back when an explosion shook us Had our mine gone off already? 'I hear stones falling,' said one of my companions. We rushed forward, the gallery was full of gravel. We realized the horrible truth, we were walled up. An enemy shell had exploded above the gallery causing the roof to fall in

"We examined the walls in feverish haste. 'We are done for' said Jean. We were not afraid of death—it was all part of the game, but we did not like to die there in the darkness. How long can we stay here? Jean asked again 'There is plenty of air and the gallery is roomy, but there is nothing to eat,' I replied. 'Well, what's the good a few hours more or less" he asked 'Why wait, I for one have already made up my mind.' He took out his revolver, but I stopped him and said, 'Don't be a fool. Let us wait a while, we may hit on some way out'

"The first horror having passed over, we began to discuss ways and means. 'Let us wait patiently for our mine to explode. If it makes a big enough hole we can dig through into it,' I said. We sat down in silence and could hear all the sounds of battle above us, for the earth is a good conductor of sound. We tried to distinguish the character of the various vibrations so as not to miss the noise when our mine exploded Finally we heard it and we rushed forward through a wave of hot air Hope strengthened our arms and we plied our picks furiously, but our packing had been so well done that it took us two hours before we got into the empty mine chamber. I listened, but the sound of firing seemed so far off that I judged there was a thick layer of earth between us and the outer world Then drops fell upon us. 'We were going to be flooded? So much the better,' said Jean, 'we shall die more quickly.'

Blood Gives Clew

"Something trickled down on my lips and I recognized the state. It was blood, and I realized that if blood was coming through we could not be far from the surface With renewed hope we set to work again, but rather clumsily, for we started a fall of earth which nearly buried us. We were all injured Bernard's leg being broken, Jean's head cut and my left arm broken Despite our pain we continued our efforts, and after a while we came on a number of dead bodies of Germans which had rolled to the bottom of the crater which the mine explosion had made

"After an hour of digging and crawling among these bodies we got out into the air. Both my comrades were so exhausted that they fainted. I watched over them, being sheltered from shells and bullets by the steep side of the crater After eight hours' waiting ambulance attendants found us and by that time we had but little life left in us"

MITCHEL AND DAHLMAN IN CLASH AT ST. LOUIS

St Louis, Mo., March 3,—Mayor John P. Mitchel, of New York, and James S. Dahlman, mayor of Omaha, clashed last night at a meeting in Mayor Kiels' office of the executive committee of mayors to outline plans for the national defense conference of mayors, which meets here today.

Mayor Dahlman charged Mayor Mitchel with trying to 'frame up" the conference when Mayor Mitchel attempted to read a typewritten statement outlining the purpose of the convention

The committee finally voted to allow Mayor Mitchel to read his statement and Mayor Dahlman said it was a "tame affair after all and withdrew his objection

Everything in Stock

A general merchant from Harlem, Mont., is in New York this week learning the latest wrinkles in the art of selling corsets. The merchant's line of goods at home includes lightning rods, chewing tobacco, crackers, hoe handles, rope, molasses, rat traps, canned goods, matches, calico, assorted candy and corsets. And it is a good bet that if the truth were known, prunes, sheet music and bustles may be obtained at his store—or if he didn't have them he could order 'em for you.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

But after a little consideration the other replied:

"Na, na; ye're wrong, lad, it canna belong to them, because it says, 'No collection on Sunday.'"

BRITISH EXPLAIN ORDERS TO SHIPS

Rules Governing Use of Guns By Craft Armed For Defense Published For First Time.

London March 4.—The British admiralty officially made public the admiralty's orders to armed merchantmen, given October 20, 1915 The orders say that the armament of such vessels must be used solely for resisting an attack by an armed vessel and for no other purpose. As British submarines and aircraft are ordered not to approach merchantmen the orders say, the approach to a British merchantman of a submarine is to be regarded as being with a hostile intention

The official statement reads as follows:

In view of the recent issue by the German government of a memorandum on the treatment of armed merchant ships the admiralty has decided to make public the instructions actually governing the actions of British merchant vessels armed for self defense.

Orders Are Issued

"Instructions dated October 20 1915, as to the status of armed merchant ships

1 The right of the crew of a merchant vessel to forcibly resist visit and search and fight in self defense is well recognized in international law and expressly admitted by the German prize regulation in an addendum issued in 1914, at a time when it was known that numerous merchant vessels were being armed for self defense.

"2 Armament is supplied solely for the purpose of resisting attack by an armed enemy vessel and must not be used for any other purpose whatsoever.

"3 An armed merchant vessel, therefore, must not in any circumstances interfere with or obstruct the free passage of other merchant vessels or fishing craft, whether they are friendly, neutral or hostile.

"The status of a British armed merchant vessel cannot be changed upon the high seas

"Rules to be observed in the exercise of the right of self defense

"1. The master or officer in command is responsible for opening and ceasing fire.

"2. Participation in armed resistance must be confined to persons acting under the orders of the master or the officer in command.

"3. Before opening fire, the British colors must be hoisted.

"4. Fire must not be opened or continued from a vessel which has stopped, hauled down her flag, or otherwise indicated her intention to surrender.

"5. The expression, "armament," includes not only cannon, but also rifles and machine guns in cases where these have been supplied.

"6. The ammunition used in rifles and machine guns must conform to article 23, Hague convention IV, 1907—that is, bullets must be cased in nickel or other substance, and must not be split or cut in such a way as to cause them to expand or set up on striking a man. The use of explosive bullets is forbidden

Use of Arms.

"Circumstances under which armament should be employed

"1. The armament is supplied for the purpose of defense only. The object of the master should be to avoid action whenever possible.

"2. Experience has shown that hostile submarines and aircraft have frequently attacked merchant vessels without warning. It is important, therefore, that craft of this description should not be allowed to approach to short range at which a torpedo or bomb launched without notice would almost certainly be effective. British and allied submarines and aircraft have orders not to approach merchant vessels. Consequently, it may be presumed that any submarine or aircraft which deliberately approaches or pursues a merchant vessel does so with hostile intention. In such cases, fire may be opened in self defense in order to prevent the hostile craft from closing to a range at which resistance to a sudden attack with bomb or torpedo would be impossible.

"3. An armed merchant vessel proceeding to render assistance to the crew of a vessel in distress must not seek action with any hostile craft thought she herself is attacked while doing so, fire may be opened in self defense.

SENATE UPHOLDS PRESIDENT WILSON ON SUBMARINE POLICY BY VOTE OF 68 TO 14

Months After Bryan Resignation Before Wilson Could Convince Berlin He Was In Earnest.

FULLY UNDERSTOOD NOW

Lansing, Bernstorff and President Discussed Likelihood of Breach In January, Report.

Washington, D. C., March 4.—President Wilson's position on the international situation as revealed further today, was that he had told congressional leaders it was months after the resignation of former Secretary Bryan before the United States could convince Germany that this nation was in earnest in its position on submarine warfare

This was brought about by the understanding in Berlin that this country was only bluffing Bryan, is has been said, had given Ambassador Dumba, of Austria, to understand that the first Lusitania note was made strong for home consumption and that the affair could be smoothed over with a friendly note from Germany.

Dumba communicated this information to Berlin Later when word of it got back to Washington, Bryan resigned and Dumba issued a statement saying that he had given this information to Berlin, but that he probably had misunderstood Bryan's meaning Nevertheless, this made a lasting impression in Berlin.

Why Wilson Has Endured.

The president is understood to have mentioned this fact to show his belief that action by congress would further weaken the position of the United States abroad. He is understood to have told the leaders that charges that he wanted to get the United States into war, were entirely disproved by his attitude during the last two years. He endured jeers and ridicule, he said, because of his efforts to maintain peace. He is understood to have declared that he has always been willing to do anything except sacrifice honor in order to maintain the United States at peace

At the same time the president declared he did not see how the United States could do anything but sever diplomatic relations with any nation which killed Americans in violations of international law.

They Discussed Break.

While both Secretary Lansing and Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador have flatly declined to comment upon the statements regarding the possibility of war attributed to President Wilson by Senator Gore, and later denied by the White House, it was learned today that mention of the result of a break of diplomatic relations had been discussed quite casually and informally by the secretary and the ambassador late in January of this year

According to authoritative information the discussion came at a time when Secretary Lansing informed the ambassador exactly what kind of communication from Germany would settle the Lusitania case in a manner satisfactory to the United States.

The ambassador is said to have informed Mr Lansing that he believed his government might change some of the expressions used in the document which the secretary had indicated would be acceptable.

They agreed that the ambassador should submit the document to his government and see what changes it would suggest, which the ambassador did At the same time, quite informally he is understood to have asked the secretary what he thought would be the ultimate result in case Germany failed to meet the requirements of the United States.

Feared It Meant War.

Secretary Lansing, it is said, told the ambassador that in event of a complete disagreement on the subject, the United States might be obliged to break off diplomatic relations. The ambassador is reliably represented as having replied that he fully understood the view of the secretary, and to have added the hope that nothing of the kind ever would occur

The ambassador pointed out that with diplomatic relations severed there would be no agency by which the enthusiasm of naval commanders could be held in check and that some circumstances was almost certain to occur to lead to hostilities. The ambassador also is represented as having pointed out that the modifications in the conduct of submarine warfare, made since the beginning of the war, had been solely on account of regard for the wishes of the United States

The authority from whom this information was obtained said it should be understood that the ambassador was only expressing his own personal opinions and that the conversation with Secretary Lansing was absolutely informal and not to be regarded as significant of anything.

DEFEATED RESOLUTION

Washington, March 3 The text of the Gore resolution which the Senate defeated follows

Whereas A number of leading powers of the world are now engaged in a war of unexampled proportions and

Whereas, The United States is happily at peace with all of the belligerent nations and,

Whereas, It is equally the desire and the interest of the American people to remain at peace with all nations and,

Whereas The president has recently afforded fresh and signal proofs of the superiority of diplomacy to butchery as a method of settling international disputes and

Whereas, The right of American citizens to travel on unarmed belligerent vessels has recently received renewed guarantees of respect and inviolability and,

Whereas The right of American citizens to travel on armed belligerent vessels rather than upon unarmed vessels is essential neither to their life, liberty or safety, nor to the independence dignity or security of the United States, and,

Whereas, Congress alone has been vested with the power to declare war which involves the obligations to prevent war by all proper means consistent with the honor and vital interest of the nation, therefore be it

Resolved, By the Senate, the House concurring, that it is the sense of the congress, vested as it is with the sole power to declare war, that all persons owing allegiance to the United States should in behalf of their own safety and the vital interest of the United States, forebear to exercise the right to travel as passengers upon any armed vessel of any belligerent power whether such vessel be armed for offensive or defensive purposes, and it is the further sense of the congress that no passport should be issued or renewed by the secretary of state, or by any one acting under him, to be used by any person owing allegiance to the United States for purpose of travel upon any such armed vessel of a belligerent power.

Gore Resolution to Warn Americans Off Armed Ships of Belligerent Nations Is Overwhelmingly Defeated In Upper House of Congress on Motion to Table, Following Days of Debate In Which Oklahoman Is Denounced For Sensational Attack Which White House Brands as Unfounded.

HOUSE TO VOTE ON LIKE PROPOSAL TOMORROW

All But Two Democrats Get Aboard Administration Band Wagon on Showdown, Even Gore Voting Against Own Measure After Amending It to Give Himself and Others of Bryan Wing of Party Way Out—Twelve Republicans Vote Against Sustaining Stand of Nation's Chief Executive.

HOW THEY VOTED

AYES: Ashurst, Bankhead Beckham, Brandegee Broussard, Burleigh, Chilton, Clarke, Arkansas, Clark, Wyoming, Colt, Culberson, Curtis, Dillingham, Dupont, Fletcher, Gore, Harding, Hardwick, Hitchcock, Hollis, Hughes, Husting, James, Johnson, Maine, Johnson, South Dakota, Kern, Lane, Lee, Maryland, Lewis, Lodge, McLean, Martin, Martine, Myers, Nelson, Newlands, Oliver, Overman, Owen, Page, Phelan, Pittman, Poindexter, Pomerene, Ransdell, Reed, Shafroth, Sheppard, Shields, Simmons, Smith, Arizona, Smith, Georgia; Smith, Maryland, Smith, Michigan, Smith, South Carolina; Sterling, Stone, Swanson, Thomas, Thompson, Tillman, Underwood, Vardaman, Wadsworth, Walsh, Warren, Weeks, Williams Total—68

Washington, March 3.—By a vote of 68 to 14, a greater majority than they expected, administration forces in the Senate today tabled Senator Gore's resolution to warn Americans off the armed ships of the European belligerents, and thereby finally quelled in the Senate an agitation which has embarrassed President Wilson in the submarine negotiations with Germany.

Senator Gore's resolution, a substitute by Senator McCumber, a republican, and an attempt by Senator Gore to strengthen his original proposal, and were defeated at one time on a roll call on a motion by Senator James, one of the administration whips, to table them. The administration victory in the Senate transferred the fight to the House

The House will consider some sort of a warning resolution tomorrow morning between 10 o'clock and noon. At the request of Chairman Pou, of the rules committee, it was agreed today to recess tonight until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning in order to give the resolution a chance to come up under unanimous consent.

Wilson Is Satisfied.

It was said at the White House that the result in the Senate was satisfactory and met the wishes of President Wilson It was added that attention would now be concentrated on the situation in the House.

Senator McCumber later reintroduced substantially the same resolution he had offered as a substitute to the Gore resolution. The McCumber resolution would go to the calendar.

Senator Gore himself voted to table his resolution Senators Chamberlain and O'Gorman were the only democrats who voted against the administration The other 12 antiadministration votes were republican Forty-seven democrats and 21 republicans voted to table the resolution

Smoot Is Excused.

During the roll call Senator Smoot, republican, asked to be excused from voting because he was not able to vote direct on the proposition. Senator Borah, republican, objected, but the Senate voted to excuse him.

When Senator Stone's name was called he arose to explain that Senator Saulsbury, democrat, was absent on account of illness. He said that if present, Senator Saulsbury would have voted on the original resolution

"I demand the regular order," demanded Senator Borah

In the confusion Senator Borah, misunderstood Senator Stone, when he added "Very, on this resolution"

"If this Senate is going to be gagged, the senator from Missouri will be gagged with the rest of us," Senator Borah shouted

When order was restored, Senator Stone explained that "on this resolution I vote aye"

DIAZ ARMY GAINS IN FIRST BATTLE

Said to Have Defeated Carranza Garrison and to Be Marching on Mexico City.

New York, March 4.—Gen. Felix Diaz, now reported to be marching on Mexico City in a revolutionary movement against the Carranza de facto government, has gained 80 per cent of the control of the Mexican Southern railway, according to an announcement by the Diaz junta here. Strong detachments of troops under Gen. Higenia Aguilar, it was said, have advanced in a northwesterly direction from Oaxaca city. The only opposition met thus far, the junta here says it has been advised, was at Ciudad Cuicatlan, where, after a fight lasting an hour and a half, the Carranza garrison was put to flight.

EFFICIENCY OF NAVY IS PLEASING TO FLETCHER

Washington, D. C., March 3.—An encouraging report on the conditions and efficiency of the nation's sea forces was given the House naval committee today by Admiral Frank Fletcher, commander in chief of the Atlantic fleet.

In individual fighting efficiency Admiral Fletcher declared the dreadnaughts of the United States led the world, while in the skill of its officers and men the navy had no reason to fear comparison of that of any other power.

Describing some of the things the navy is doing in the light of lessons on the European war, the admiral said one ship of the fleet recently had hurled seven out of 42 huge projectiles through a target 20x60 feet at a range of eight to nine miles, or 16,000 to 18,000 yards. The longest ranges used in naval engagements of the European war thus far, he explained, were 16,000 to 17,000 yards.

Declaring that the item was handed in at the instigation of E. A Holmes, the Atchison Globe prints the following: "Mrs. E. A. Holmes was called back home from St. Joe by the death of her pet goldfish, Oscar The foldfish was growing so fast it was beginning to look like a German carp. Recently it devoured several small goldfish, and indigestion may have been the cause of its demise."

ARMY OF 700,000 ON PEACE FOOTING

House Military Committee Lays Ground Work For Large Fighting Force With 170,000 Regulars.

Washington, March 3.—Congress will have before it, within the next few days, possibly tomorrow, the first of the national defense measures. This was forecast today as a result of the rapid progress made on the army bills in the House and Senate military committees. The House committee reported a final agrement late yesterday on its bill for an increase in the army and the Senate committee planned to take a final vote on its bill today.

The House bill as finally approved, calls for an increase of the army to a total peace strength of approximately 700,000 men. This would include 170,000 regulars, 425,000 national guard within five years and about 100,000 federal volunteers

The bill retains provisions for organization of industrial and technical reserves behind the fighting lines and authorizes the creation of a board of officers to control an industrial mobilization in time of war of imminence of war It also provides that manufacturers of war materials must give immediate preference to government orders in war time, or when there is danger of war, under heavy penalty for failure to do so.

While the minimum strength of the regular army remained at 140,000 a change was made before the final vote to fix the maximum of fighting troops at 170,000, bringing the total authorized strength of the regular force, including the hospital corps and other noncombatant troops to 190,000.

While all members of the committee will sign the bill, they do so under the reservation that they may support upon the floor of the House any amendment they desire.

HARDWARE MEN CLAIM ABUSES IN PARCEL POST

Des Moines, Ia., March 3.—Iowa hardware men, in convention today, passed resolutions calling upon congress to investigate the parcel post on the claim that mail order houses are improperly using it. The resolution also favors good roads, revision of credit methods and standardization of farm equipment.

Gore Cleverly Provides Way To Vote Against His Own Measure

There was some uncertainty among senators as to the status of the various resolutions when the roll call had begun. It was explained then that Senator James had moved to lay not only the Gore warning resolution, but also the so called corrected resolution, on the table It was necessary then for senators to express themselves as to warning and on the question of killing an American on an unwarned merchantman as a cause for war in one vote.

For that reason, Senator Gore voted to table, because he did not favor his own substitute and had introduced it merely to get an expression of the Senate on that issue.

The text of Senator Gore's addition to his original resolution, which was tabled with the warning resolution, was as follows

"Resolved, by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that the sinking by a German submarine without notice or warning of an armed merchant vessel of her public enemy, resulting in the death of a citizen of the United States, would constitute a just and sufficient cause of war between the United States and the German empire."

Several senators explained that the double form of the question was responsible for the character of the vote, as few senators wanted to vote on the question regarding a cause for war.

Immediately after the vote in the Senate, Senator Reed, democrat, read a statement, saying he felt it was highly important that the impression in Germany that the country and congress was not behind the president should be removed and that, therefore, he was opposed to the Gore resolution.

House Will Vote on Armed Ship Issue Tomorrow: Predict Defeat

While the Senate was voting House leaders were working. There was no doubt that the administration victory in the Senate was expected to solidify the sentiment in the House and the leaders looked for some favorable developments during the day

President Wilson after he had conferred with Acting Chairman Pou, of the rules committee, determined to have a vote in the House, even if a special rule containing a resolution were required to get it.

Insistence that a vote be taken by rules committee action, if necessary came after varying reports as to the stand of the foreign affairs committee. As yet no resolution has been agreed upon in the latter committee, which would command a majority vote and there was no positive assurance today that any resolution would be reported by it.

Chairman Flood expressed the hope that a satisfactory resolution would be drawn today when the committee meets this afternoon

Mr. Pou told members of the rules committee that he regarded the present situation above partisan politics, and for that reason there would be secret sessions of the democratic members to arrive at some plan of action He wants a nonpartisan vote.

CONGRESS IS DENIED GRAND JURY MINUTES

Justice Department Guards Secrets Involving Congressman and U. S. Attorney.

Washington March 4.—The congressional committee investigating charges filed by Representative Frank Buchanan, of Illinois, against United States District Attorney Marshall, may decide today whether to force an issue on the question whether it may inspect the minutes of the grand jury which indicted Mr. Buchanan, David Lamar and others connected with Labor's Peace council. The committee has requested Mr. Marshall to submit the minutes and Mr. Marshall has informed them that he will not honor their demands.

It is contended that if the evidence which the government has gathered concerning the labor plots of pro-German partisans were revealed at this time, serious impediment would be placed in the way of further progress. Mr Marshall's desire to protect the grand jury minutes is understood to be due to the fact that investigation of the plans is not concluded and there may be other indictments. It has developed today that Mr. Marshall, in declining to surrender the minutes, was acting upon the instructions of Attorney General Gregory, in Washington.

HAVE KATE OR HANNA.

"I have come to you," explained the tall, sallow man in a broken voice, "because I can stand it no longer."

"Sit it!" said the great detective lightly, and waved the tailor to a chair. It took the great detective but the fraction of a second to deduce that his visitor was a tailor—the knees of his trousers bagged so and his coat fitted so dreadfully about the shoulders.

"I've never been able to keep a box of cigars two weeks," continued the tailor, mending his broken voice as he went along, "without suddenly finding that someone had removed every single cigar. I almost have suspected my wife, but I've never been able to notice anything stronger than spearmint and Ceylon tea on her breath."

"How many cigars do you smoke a day?" asked the great detective thoughtfully, after he had leaned back in his chair a moment with the ends of his long fingers pressed closely together in a little way that he had.

"Four," replied the tailor.

"How many in a box?" pursued the great detective.

"Fifty," replied the tailor, wonderingly.

"Just about two weeks, eh?" remarked the great detective, pointedly.

With a guilty blush the tailor sidled out the door and slid down the bannisters so as not to make any noise.

COMB SAGE TEA IN FADED OR GRAY HAIR

If Mixed with Sulphur it Darkens so Naturally Nobody can Tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Brust Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a cup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the cells, thus driving the cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

Pain and Stiffness away with a small bottle of old honest St. Jacobs Oil

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right on the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

You can't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and never doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica or lame back misery so promptly!

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication—which means, self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood, through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress, called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drank before breakfast for awhile, will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphated hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 85 five-passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

AMERICANS GROW RICH IN CANADA

Testimony Proves Falseness of Statements as to Onerous Taxation and Conscription.

"The attempt to check emigration from the United States to our prairie provinces by [illegible] statements about the [illegible] war taxes that are being paid here $500 on a quarter section yearly about forcing [illegible] to enlist for the war [illegible] cold [illegible] crops and any old story [illegible] by their extravagant bold [illegible] men and women from returning to Canada, is really in the list of [illegible] to our people. Knowing the country we can hardly take it seriously. Our governments, both dominion and provincial, are taking steps to expose the false statements that are being made, and thereby keep the channel open for continuing the stream of settlers that has been flowing to us for the past decade. We have thought to assist in this work, and to do so purpose giving from time to time, actual experiences of Americans who have come to Saskatchewan during late years. We give the statements of two farmers in this issue as follows –

STATEMENT OF M P TYSDAL

I lived near Lee, Illinois, for 46 years. I came to Saskatchewan in the spring of 1912 and bought land near Briercrest. I have farmed this land 1,680 acres, ever since. I have had grand crops. In 1914 I had 100 acres of wheat that yielded 40 bushels to the acre. I sold this wheat at $1.50 per bushel.

I like the country and my neighbors. My taxes on each quarter section (160 acres) are about $3" a year. This covers municipal tax, school tax, hail insurance tax—everything. There is no war tax, so called. I like the laws in force here. There is no compulsion to me in any way. I am just as independent here as I was in Illinois, and I feel that my family and I are just as well protected by the laws of the province as we were in our old home in Illinois. What I earn here is my own. I have seven children and they take their places at school in sports and at all public gatherings the same as the Canadian born.

(Signed) M P TYSDAL.

STATEMENT OF STEVE SCHWEITZBERGER

I was born in Wisconsin, but moved with my parents when a boy to Stephen Co., Iowa. I was there farming for 50 years. I sold my land then for over $200 an acre. I moved to Saskatchewan and located near Briercrest in the spring of 1912. I bought [illegible] section of land. I have good [illegible] I feel quite at home here [illegible] in Iowa. We have [illegible] no trouble in [illegible] My taxes are about [illegible] on the half section [illegible] splendid crops [illegible] over 40 bushels to [illegible] more than [illegible] the land there [illegible] as much as it does [illegible] man who comes here now [illegible] at $30 an acre or less gets a [illegible]

FRUIT LAXATIVE FOR SICK CHILD

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Syrup of Figs" that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless "fruit laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When its little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleaning" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Syrup of Figs" handy, they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Adv.

DAYTON SHOWS PEOPLE HOW MONEY IS SPENT

"Municipal Show" Explains All the Details of City Government.

Dayton—The oldest of all questions, "What becomes of the money I pay in taxes?" was answered to the satisfaction of Dayton's taxpayers last week, answered in facts and not in perfervid oratory. Dayton employs a city manager.

Fifty thousand persons, most of them stockholders in the city of Dayton, but many visitors from a distance, attended the Municipal show, held in Memorial hall. This displays covered two acres of floor space, and were divided about equally between "live" and pictorial or statistical exhibits. All information on the charts was "predigested," boiled down to short crisp sentences.

What the Children Did.

The schools furnished most of the "live" displays. Grade school pupils operated typewriters, blindfolded. Boys repaired shoes at cobblers' benches. Samples of manual training and domestic science work were used where the children could be shown at work.

The dairy inspection department showed clean and unclean methods of handling milk. The food exhibits showed a comparative diet demonstrating that the same food values costing 88 cents in one form may be had for six cents in another and equally wholesome form.

The welfare department reproduced a workhouse cell with the caption "This cell exactly like those in the old workhouse except that this one is clean. It's impossible to keep the workhouse cells clean." The park department brought out [illegible] Dayton has only one acre of park land to every 3,000 inhabitants [illegible] its method of [illegible] into [illegible] that the city is paying [illegible] just half of what [illegible] city was [illegible] contract that [illegible] are city [illegible] over the cost [illegible]

"The People's University."

The People's University is the [illegible] of the public library booth. Dayton lost [illegible] of her 91,000 public library books in the big flood. Today the number is 74,000. The question department of the library answered 13,059 queries last year.

The police department furnishes the melodrama of the show. No department of municipal work is unrepresented. What the "city manager" plan of municipal government does with its revenue is shown in as complete detail as the Pennsylvania railroad accounts to its stockholders, and in more striking form.

"The show is an accounting by the government to the public," is the way the officers of the government put it. "A tour of every department of municipal work would take two weeks of concerted effort which few taxpayers have the time or inclination to exert. So we have boiled the thing down and brought it to them. We are asking for several bond issues and in this show we have stated our case to them, as it could be stated in no other way. No voter should be under any misapprehension now. He knows how he wants to vote and why. The show has made Dayton's public the best educated in the country in municipal affairs."

The bureau of municipal research originated and arranged the exhibit.

Where Stomach Pump Helps Missionary

The Nauru people love a feast more than anything in the world and although they must starve for weeks afterwards as a result of the waste of food on such occasions, they pay the price gladly. They actually gorge themselves with food at such feasts. When a man has treated himself to four or five pounds of corned beef, a bowl of rice and a number of ship biscuits and has washed the whole lot down with a few mouthfuls of "Snow Flake Brand" kerosene, the missionary is likely to be called out before morning to relieve an intense interior situation. Many of the natives have acquired quite a taste for kerosene and on several occasions it became necessary to apply the stomach pump to save their lives.

Regular meals are unknown. The people eat when they are hungry or when they don't know what else to do. Children are never asked whether they are hungry. The fond mother tenderly touches the stomach of her darling, and if that particular part of the body has not, according to her idea, the desired roundness, the child is fed until the little stomach has the shape of a rubber ball. At feasts they can accomplish astonishing feats of consumption but when times are hard and food is scarce, they know how to endure hunger, too. Periodical droughts cause frequent severe famines.

A missionary in the South Sea Islands, and perhaps in other lands as well, must be a Jack-of-all-trades. He may be preacher and teacher, but he must also be translator, doctor, dentist, accoucheur, lawyer in the frequent land disputes, and peace maker between husband and wife. The latter is even a more dangerous office in Nauru than in the homeland.

Secrecy Assured.

From the Boston Transcript.

He—Of course you understand, Betty, that our engagement must be kept secret.

She—Oh, yes, dear. I'll be sure and tell everybody that.

THE GREAT LAKES.

Harrison Rhodes in Harper's Magazine

The Niagara river, though short, is a stream of richly varied life. Along its course fantastic deeds have been done and fantastic projects have flourished. One of the earliest was the famous Major Noah's plan for building upon Grand Island an ideal city for the Jewish population of the country. Its course may still be found to be past Utopia.

West from Buffalo huge ships go through the inland seas of summer land, past the vine-clad islands of Lake Erie—the wines of which keep alive a cheap cult of Bacchus in the middle west, past Put-in-Bay, with its brave naval memories, up the beautiful strait by Detroit, through Lake St Clair and its famous "flats" dotted with fishing and shooting clubhouses and bungalows, into the broader reaches of Huron toward the storied Island of Mackinac, where one may easily recapture something of the atmosphere of Indians, fur traders and the old French missionaries and voyagers, or, if one prefers sit comfortably in a hotel rocking chair and see the whole summer pleasure traffic of the northwestern world go by along the crossroads of the lakes.

From Mackinac—Michilimackinac (it is pleasant sometimes to give it its full title)—you may choose to go on to that great upper Superior deep reservoir of waters, or south along Michigan to the smoky metropolis of the west. It is a huge fresh water world of vacation idlers, popular indeed without being exactly fashionable or famous. Few people, for example would name the lower peninsula of Michigan as one of the great holiday regions of the land.

Yet with gentle sand beaches, behind which lie peach orchards, it represents for a whole mid-western and southwestern people a cheap and accessible shore to which they flock by thousands. Even Chicago itself, also, as it might suggest itself to most of us, is a summer resort, has its own clientele from the south and southwest [illegible] establish themselves in suburban hotels by the lakes [illegible] From Niagara [illegible] the lovely [illegible] the Thousand Islands [illegible] It is not really wild, yet it has [illegible] chief charm is probably that it seems to offer so freely fulfilment of one of childhood's dreams, and a dream which does not fade with age, that of living proudly upon an island of one's own. There is something quite unreasonably attractive about the crowded islets around Alexandria Bay, the capital of the archipelago, where so many gentlemen, doubtless in ordinary life quite ordinary fellows, sit monarchs of their own domain.

Nine Lives for One.

By Frank G Carpenter in the Christian Herald

I am told that one has to be very careful as to the source of his clam supply. Some of these bivalves feed in the water near the copper deposits and the copper poisons their meat. The captain of one of our coast survey steamers, in speaking of this recently told me how his life was saved by a pussy cat. Said he:

"It was a narrow escape. I had bought a fine mess of clams and was just about to eat some of them raw when I decided I had better test their edibility by giving one of them to my cat. The pussy ate it and a moment later she rolled over and went into convulsions. She kept on kicking until every one of her nine lives had departed. The clams were poisoned by copper but they looked as sweet and healthy as any I have ever seen. Had the cat not been near, I would have tried them without question, and I really believe that that cat saved my life."

THE BIRTH OF IDEAS.

From "Hempfield" by David Grayson in the American Magazine.

You think that you can stop with enthusiastic dreams and vast ideas. But no vision and no idea is worth a copper cent unless it is brought down to earth, patiently harnessed, painfully trained and set to work. There is a beautiful analogy that comes often to my mind. We conceive an idea, as a child is conceived in a transport of joy, but after that there are long months of growth in the close dark warmth of the soul, to which every part of one's personality must contribute, and then there is the painful hour of travail when at last the idea is given to the world. It is a process that can not be hurried nor borne without suffering. And the punishment of those who stop with the joy of conception, thinking they can skim the delight of life and avoid its pain, is the same in the intellectual and spiritual spheres as it is in the physical—barrenness, sort, and finally a terrible sense of failure and of loneliness.

ONE MILLION PER DAY LOSSES IN DYESTUFFS

Chief of Bureau Gives This Information in Discussion of Dyes.

New York—That the textile manufacturers and allied industries in the United States are losing $1,000,000 a day as a result of the dyestuffs famine due to the European war, and the total loss since the war began approximates upward of $2,000,000,000, was the statement made by Dr Edward Ewing Pratt, chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commence, at a meeting of the New York section of the Society of Chemical Industry.

As a result of the meeting, recommendations will be made to congress for legislation which will protect the dyestuff industry in this country from any unfair tactics which Germany may call into play, after the declaration of peace, to preserve her supremacy in what is said to be the most profitable of any of her industrial activities.

Much new light was thrown on the dyestuff situation in the United States at the meeting. One of the most convincing illustrations of the difficulties experienced by users of dyes since the war began was given by Dr Thomas W Norton commercial agent of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. He said:

Hosiery Mill Almost Idle.

"The largest hosiery mill in the United States and in the world, employs 2,500 operatives. Ordinarily it requires 500 pounds of dyestuffs daily to cover the needs of its dyehouse. Four weeks ago its stock of colors had dwindled to half a barrel. About 160,000 dozen pairs of hose were stacked up awaiting dyes and more than 1,000 operatives were taking an unwelcome vacation."

He said that despite the efforts of the United States government to secure the release of European dyestuffs this country it has not [illegible] more than 50 [illegible] of German origin [illegible] of March 1915. Dr Norton outlined a plan for a bureau of [illegible] for dyestuffs, the establishment of which he declared would be [illegible] in creating a self [illegible] American color industry. He [illegible]

"Such an industry we are bound to [illegible] our textile and other allied interests demand they shall never again be exposed to the disasters that came with the dyestuff famine. The powerful association of hosiery manufacturers has agreed it will bear the burden of increased tariff duties on dyes of foreign origin, if that is necessary to secure the establishment on American soil of an independent industry."

He said that while in 1913 American color works produced only 3,000 tons of color made chiefly from German intermediates, and imported 22,000 tons of these colors from Germany, January 1917, would see an American production of at least 16,000 tons. He was confidently looking forward to the year 1920 as a time when the great bulk of artificial dyes consumed in the United States would be made in this country.

Will Strangle Our Industry.

Dr Pratt said that the one serious obstacle in the way of the development of the coal tar dyestuff industry in America was the certainty that upon the resumption of normal international conditions European manufacturers will try by boycott, underselling and other methods of competition, to win back this profitable market and put out of business our new and struggling dyestuff industry.

Although the United States has the raw materials, the markets, the technical skill and the capital to develop the dyestuff industry to the desired point Dr Pratt said, past attempts have been throttled by the European convention of color manufacturers, which promptly cut the regular delivery market price of their exports to this country one cent a pound and made secret contracts for sales in large quantities at far lower prices.

As showing the advance in the color industry in this country since the war, Dr Pratt stated that five domestic concerns have doubled their output, and another factory, a branch of a large German firm, has greatly increased its production, while still another aniline factory has quadrupled its output.

Standard Oil's Part in Providence.

From the World Outlook.

A missionary was preaching to the native Christians at a communion service in Fukien, China. His text was "Ye Are the Light of the World," and he made a great effort to present his theme in such a manner that it would come within the comprehension of everyone. At the close of the sermon, the regular pastor, hoping thereby to fix some of the points in the sermon in the people's minds, began to catechise the children who sat in the front rows:

"Where do our Spirits come from?" Answer "God."

"Where does our food come from?" Answer, "God."

"Where does the oil in our lamps come from?" Answer "The Standard Oil company."

SCREW EXPERT AIDS FRENCH SALVATION

Chicago Authority on Manufactures Speeded Up Munitions Factories.

From the Chicago Tribune.

When France heard the call for greater and still greater supplies of munitions for its armies in the field it was to America and to Chicago that it came for a certain American who would cross the water and furnish much needed assistance no less important than that furnished to the struggling American colonists by the Marquis Lafayette.

This man who has repaid, partially at least, the debt of all Americans to one high spirited Frenchman has returned to his work in Chicago. He is William F. Carmody, foreman of the Felt & Tarrant Manufacturing company, at 1717 North Paulina street.

He sits at a table on the fourth floor of the big machine plant and inspects small pieces of tool work whose dimensions must be accurate to the thousandth part of an inch. His knowledge and experience with the installation and operation of the modern screw machine has made him a recognized expert.

Finds Itself Unprepared.

France, working under old methods based on the needs of former wars, suddenly found that with its resources and believed preparedness it was unable to produce in two or three days the munitions that its armies consumed in one day. It was quick to learn that the life of the nation depended upon greater efficiency.

With this decision the reputation for mechanical supremacy immediately passed from the old world to the new and the American screw machine, with a capacity for output 10 times as great as the European machinery, stepped into its own.

When France called for the one man in America most capable of changing the French munition plants to conform with American methods of efficiency, the screw machine manufacturers even went outside their own plants and recommended Carmody.

Carmody's salary as foreman at the Felt and Tarrant plant is nothing small, but the compensation which the French government offered for his services doubled it several times and then some. He obtained a furlough and sailed last April.

In the company of French army officials and engineers he was rushed from one munition plant to another. He found antiquated, time losing machinery being worked night and day, but only producing an output far below the demand.

Hard Work; Small Output.

Some French screw machines needed two and three men each to operate them. Carmody began to demonstrate the superiority of the American machine, five of which could be tended by one man. The installation of the American machines followed. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of them survived the dangers of torpedoes and were landed in France.

Through interpreters Carmody instructed foremen in the operation of the machines. These in turn instructed the workmen. The American machinist was kept on the go night and day. He was whirled from one munition plant to another by automobile.

Machines in Paris Plants.

In Paris he installed 60 of the machines in two plants, both of which had been making automobile parts before the war. He directed changes in the application of power in other plants, to the increase of efficiency and output.

In Marseilles he placed 75 of the American machines and transformed one plant that had been making motors and bakers' machines into a shrapnel factory. In St Chambon, Orleans and elsewhere he replaced the methods of 1870 with up to the minute American efficiency, and increased the output tenfold.

Carmody returned to Chicago last month, his work abroad finished. Letters bearing the appreciation of the French people preceded him. Carmody is modest about his work, and refuses to talk about it. Not so with his friends, who tell the story of one enthusiastic French patriot who kissed the American machinist as he was leaving Paris and fervently declared "You have saved France!"

Sunflower as a Field Crop.

From the Chicago News

Kansas may lose its right to the title of Sunflower state, but it will probably hold fast to the title, even thought it loses the right to it, an exchange says. The new claimant for the honor of being the real Sunflower state is Arkansas.

The state of Arkansas has entered upon the culture of sunflowers, not for aesthetic but for economic reasons. Of course, as nearly all other states, sunflowers have been long grown in gardens for their beauty and their height, but they have now been given the distinction of being planted in fields. From being merely a garden pet or a back yard beauty the sunflower has been advanced to the proud position of a crop. Sunflower growing, a comparatively new industry in Arkansas, has been started in Mississippi county in that state and is now conducted on a large scale. The announcement has gone forth to the world that Arkansas will grow this year, for the first time in her history, something like 1,000 acres of sunflowers seed consumed in the United States.

Sunflower seed is used largely for poultry. Several farmers will plant as much as 100 acres and many fields of 10 and 20 acres will be set out in sunflowers.

It is not generally known in circles where education in the matter of sunflowers has not been brought up to date that Missouri is also something of a sunflower state. The sunflower has been one of the field crops of Missouri for 15 years. The reason for the extension of sunflower cultivation is because the use of the seed of the flower is becoming extensive and because there has been a marked decline in the receipt of sunflower seed from Russia, which country at the breaking out of the war furnished about 80 per cent of the try food and is considered very nutritious. Different kinds of oils are extracted from the seed, and last year it was used largely as a substitute for cottonseed products. The poultry business is growing throughout the United States, and the extension of that industry accounts in great measure for the increasing demand for sunflower seed.

The yield of seed runs from about 800 to 1,500 pounds an acre, and though the average price of the seed in the thrashing field is 4 or 5 cents a pound, the price recently has been up to 15 cents a pound. It is reported that a sunflower crop is an easy one to cultivate. An expert has said that the labor required to grow 10 acres of cotton or corn will be ample for 40 acres of sunflowers. One or two cultivations is all that is required, and the threshing is a small part of the crop labor. The rows are planted north and south, and when the heads mature a wagon is driven along the row and the heads cut off with a corn knife, falling into the wagon, where a man or a boy strikes them against the wagon bed, shelling the seed out. The seed is then put in a dry place, and finally fanned, sacked and marketed.

CANADA'S PLANS FOR WAR REVENU[E]

So Wisely Distributed That Taxation Will Affect Farmers to a Degree Practically Unnoticeable.

So many rumors have [illegible] lated regarding war [illegible] Canada that the statement [illegible] Sir Thomas White, Canadian [illegible] of Finance, of the Government's [illegible] for raising war revenue should be [illegible] en the widest circulation. Sir Thomas made it clear that the revenue will [illegible] raised by taxing the profits of [illegible] porated companies whenever the profits exceed seven per cent and profits of unincorporated firms or [illegible] nerships when the profits exceed [illegible] per cent. On all such excess pro[fits] these companies or firms will ha[ve to] contribute one-quarter to the Gov[ern]ment. Transportation compa[nies,] banks, mining, milling, and other c[om]panies will be subject to this tax[ation,] but life insurance companies and c[om]panies with less than fifty thou[sand] dollars capitalization, and compa[nies,] firms, or individuals engaged in [agri]culture or stock raising, are ex[empt] and pay no part of this taxation. [The] only other additional taxation [im]posed is an increase of fifty cen[ts a] barrel in the customs duty on ap[ples] and one-half cent a gallon in cus[toms] duty on certain kinds of oils.

It will be noticed that this tax is being applied in such a way th[at it] does not affect farmers in the sl[ight]est degree, except, perhaps, throu[gh a] small increase in cost of apples [and] oil. The war revenue is to be paid [out] of the profits of the big firms and c[om]panies with capital of over fifty t[hou]sand dollars, and even these are [al]lowed seven per cent in some c[ases] and ten per cent in others, of [their] profits before they have to pay [any] part of this taxation. It will be [seen] that the whole policy is to place [the] war expenditure taxation on those [who] have been making big profits and [are] able to pay it, and to encourage [farm]ing and stockraising by exem[pting] farmers and stock-raisers from the [tax]ation. This ought to set at rest [the] rumor that the farmer or the farm[er's] land is being taxed to pay the co[st of] the war.—Advertisement.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued.)

Swain's words gave me plenty to think over, and left me so troubled and uneasy that I made a trip to the top of the ladder to take a look over Elmhurst. But everything appeared as usual. Perhaps Swain was right—perhaps it was Silva who was using every minute to increase his influence, but what could I do? So long as he committed no overt act, there was no excuse for interfernce. As Swain had said, there was nothing that I could do but watch.

Two hours later, just as I was getting up from a dinner to which, in my perturbed condition, I had done small justice, I heard a ring at the bell, and presently Mrs. Hargis entered to tell me that there was a gentleman asking for me. I went out to meet him, and was astonished to find that it was Simmonds.

"I don't wonder you're surprised," he said, as we sat down. "Fact is, I'm surprised myself, for I don't know exactly what I'm to do out here. But Swain, after he got back to his cell, was like a crazy man, he was sure something dreadful was going to happen to Miss Vaughan if she stayed in the house with those Hindus. In the end, he got me kind of scared, too, and made me promise to come out and help you keep watch. I went down to the Record office and had a talk with Godfrey before I started. I half expected him to laugh at me, but he seemed to think I'd better come. The fact is," concluded Simmonds, shifting his cigar to the other side of his mouth, "he was so serious about it, that I brought two men along. One of them is patrolling the road in front of the house, and the other the road along the side. I've arranged for two others to relieve them at midnight. Now, what's it all about, anyway?"

"Well," I said, "in the first place, neither Godfrey nor I believes that Swain strangled that man."

"I can't hardly believe it myself," agreed Simmonds, "for he seems a nice young feller, but it's a clear case, there's the motive, he was on the ground, and there's the finger prints. How can you explain them away?"

"I can't explain them away. But, just the same, Godfrey believes the murder was committed by one of those Hindus."

"He intimated something of the sort to me," said Simmonds, "but there's no evidence against them."

"No," I conceded, "that's what we've got to find."

"Where are we going to look for it?"

"There's only one place to look for it, and that's in the house where the murder was committed. I only wish we could get Miss Vaughan out of it—that would give us a freer hand."

"What's the matter with the fool girl, anyway?" demanded Simmonds. "I should think she'd jump at a chance to get away."

"So should I—but she isn't reasonable, just now. I can't make her out. Perhaps she'll come around in a day or two, but meanwhile, if she should happen to need help, I don't see how your men out on the road, on the other side of a 12-foot wall, could do any good."

Simmonds rubbed his chin thoughtfully.

"What would you suggest?" he asked at last.

"Why not put them in the grounds, as soon as it is dark, and let them conceal themselves near the house? They can get over the wall on this side. We have ladders. Besides," I added, "it would be a great mistake to give Silva any reason to suspect he's being watched. He'd see the men out on the road, sooner or later, but they could keep out of sight among the shrubbery."

Simmonds considered this for a moment.

"I don't know but what you're right," he agreed, at last. "We'll arrange it that way, then," and he went away presently to call in his men. He soon came back with them, and gave them careful and detailed instructions as to what he wanted them to do, dwelling especially upon the importance of their keeping carefully concealed. Then we got the ladders and put them in place.

"Be careful not to touch the top of the wall," I cautioned them; "there's broken glass on top, and the merest touch may mean a bad injury."

"When you get down on the other side," Simmonds added, "take down the ladder and hide it in the shrubbery at the foot of the wall. Somebody might see it if you left it standing there. But, for heaven's sake, don't get mixed up so you can't find it again. Be back here at 11:30, and your relief will be ready. You've got your whistles? Well, blow them good and hard if there's any trouble. And be mighty careful not to let any one see you, or you may get snake bit."

The men mounted the ladder, crossed the wall and disappeared on the other side, and Simmonds and I turned back to the house. I felt as though a great load had been lifted from my shoulders. With those two men so close at hand, surely nothing very serious could happen to Miss Vaughan.

Simmonds and I spent the remainder of the evening in discussing the case, but neither of us was able to shed any new light upon it. Shortly after 11, the two men who were to form the relief arrived, and just as we started for the wall, Godfrey drove in front of the highway. It needed but a moment to tell him of our arrangements, which he heartily approved. He joined us and we were soon at the foot of the ladder. While we waited, Simmonds gave the new men the same minute instructions he had given the others, and presently we heard a slight scraping against the wall and the men who had been on duty recrossed it.

They had nothing of especial interest to report. The yogi and Miss Vaughan had taken a stroll through the grounds early in the evening, and my heart sank as the detective added that they seemed to be talking earnestly together. Then they had reentered the house, and Miss Vaughan had remained in the library looking at a book, while her companion passed on out of sight. At the end of an hour, she had closed the book, shut and locked the outer door, and turned out the light. Another light had appeared shortly afterwards in a room upstairs. It, too, had been extinguished half an hour later and the detectives presumed that she had gone to bed. After that the house had remained in complete darkness. The servants had spent the evening sitting on a porch at the rear of the house, talking together, but had gone in early, presumably to bed.

When the men had finished their report, Simmonds dismissed them and the two who were to take up the watch crossed the wall and passed from sight.

"And now, Simmonds," said Godfrey, "come along and I'll show you what started me to watching that house, and caused me to get Lester out here."

Simmonds followed him up the ladder without a word, and I came along behind. We were soon on the limb.

"Of course," Godfrey added, when we were in place, "it is just possible that nothing will happen. But I think the show will come off as usual. Look straight out over the trees, Simmonds—ah!"

High in the heavens that strange star sprang suddenly into being, glowed, brightened, burned steel blue, then slowly and slowly it floated down, straight down, hovered, burst into a thousand sparks * * *

And, scarcely able to believe my eyes, I saw standing there against the night two white robed figures, with arms extended and faces raised, and then they wandered again into the darkness.

For an instant we sat there silent, still staring. Then Godfrey drew a deep breath.

"I feared so," he said. "Miss Vaughan has become a convert."

And he led the way down the ladder.

CHAPTER XX.

CHECKMATE!

I was honestly glad to get back to the office next morning, for I felt the need of work—absorbing work—to take my mind off the problem of Worthington Vaughan's death, and especially to relieve me from the depression into which his daughter's inexplicable conduct had plunged me. When I thought of her it was with impatience and aversion, for I felt that she had deserted to the enemy and turned her back upon the man who loved her, in the hour of his utmost need.

As I saw it, her conduct was little short of heartless. She had summoned her lover to her side, and he had come, instantly and without hesitation, without pausing to consider the danger to himself, he had answered her call, in consequence of that high devotion, he was now in prison, charged with a dreadful crime, but, instead of hastening to him, instead of standing by his side and proclaiming to the whole world her belief in his innocence, she deliberately stood aloof. It was almost as if she herself believed in his guilt. The world, at least, could draw no other inference.

But she had done more than that. She had abandoned herself to the fate from which he had tried to save her. Her presence at Silva's side could have only one meaning—she had become his disciple, had accepted his faith, was ready to follow him. The thought turned me sick at heart, for her as well as for Swain, but for Swain most of all, for he had done nothing to merit such misfortune, while she, at least, had chosen her road and was following it with open eyes. Small wonder that I thought of her with anger and resentment, yes, and with a vague distrust, for, at the very back of my mind was the suspicion that she had been a decoy to lure Swain to his destruction.

I threw myself feverishly into the work which had accumulated at the office, in order to tear my mind away from thoughts like these, but when Mr. Royce arrived, I had to go over the case with him, and I have seldom seen a man more puzzled or astonished.

"I shall defend Swain, of course," I concluded, "and I'm hoping that something in his favor will turn up before long, but I haven't the remotest idea what it will be. He can't be tried till fall, and meanwhile I'm afraid he'll have to stay in jail."

"Yes; I see no way of getting him out," agreed my partner. "But the girl's danger is much more serious. Can't we do something for her?"

"It's difficult to do anything against her will," I pointed out. "Besides, I've lost interest in her a little."

"Don't blame her too much—we must do everything we can. Since she isn't of age, she'll have to have a guardian appointed. He might do something."

"I had thought of that. I'll suggest to her tonight that she let me arrange for a guardian. But if we wait for a court to take action, I'm afraid we'll be too late. Swain seems to think that the danger is very pressing."

"At least we can make one more effort," said Mr. Royce. "I'll have my wife drive out to see her this afternoon. Perhaps she can do something," and he went to the 'phone to make the arrangements.

I turned back to my work, but found myself unable to take it up, for my conscience told me that I ought to see Swain, make sure that he was comfortable, and do what I could to relieve his anxiety. It was not a pleasant task, for I should have to admit my failure, but at last I put my work aside, made my way reluctantly to the Tombs, and asked to see him.

They had given him a well lighted cell on the upper tier, and some of his own things had been brought in to soften its bareness, but my first glance at Swain told me that he was in a bad way.

"Is she all right?" was his first question, and his eyes seemed to burn into me.

"Yes," I answered a little testily, "she's all right—that is, if you mean Miss Vaughan. For heaven's sake, Swain, be a little sensible. What's the use of working yourself up into a state like this! Did you sleep any last night?"

"No," said Swain, after thinking a minute. "No, I believe not."

"How about breakfast?"

"I don't seem to remember about breakfast," he answered, after a moment's thought.

I stepped to the door, called the guard, and, putting a bill into his hand, asked him to send up the prison barber and to have a good meal sent up in the course of half an hour. When the barber arrived, I had him take Swain in hand, give him a shave and shampoo and general freshening up. Then the breakfast arrived, and I made him sit down and eat. He obeyed passively, and I could see the food did him good. When he had finished his coffee, I handed him a cigar.

"Now, Swain," I began, sitting down opposite him, "I'm going to talk to you seriously. In the first place, Miss Vaughan is in no danger. Simmonds and two men are on the premises, watching the house all night, ready to interfere at the least sign of anything wrong. That will be kept up as long as Miss Vaughan remains there."

"That's good," he said. "I didn't know that. But just the same, she mustn't remain there. Even with the men on guard, you may be too late."

"Just what is it you're afraid of?" I asked him, curiously. "Do you think her life's in danger?"

"Worse than that!" said Swain thickly, his face suddenly livid. "Oh, worse than that!"

I confess that I caught something of his horror, but I shook myself patiently.

"I can't believe that," I said. "But, in any case, our men will be at hand. At the least outcry, they will burst into the house. And remember, the three servants are there."

"They cut no figure. If they didn't hear those screams the other night, do you think they would hear any others? You must get her away from there, Mr. Lester," he went on rapidly. "If she won't come of her own accord, you must use force."

"But, my dear Swain," I objected, "I can't do that. Do you want me to kidnap her?"

"Just that—if it's necessary."

"Then I'd soon be occupying a cell here, too. I don't see what good that would do."

"It would save her," he asserted doggedly. "It would save her. That's the only thing to consider."

But I rose to my feet in sudden impatience, what consideration was she showing for him or for me or for anyone?

"You're talking foolishly, I said. You'd much better be thinking of your own danger. It's much more real than hers.' I had an impulse to add that, since she had chosen her path, it was folly to waste pity upon her, but I managed to check the words. "Has any new light on the case occurred to you?"

"No," he answered, listlessly. "I have not thought about it. When do you see her again, Mr. Lester?"

"I'm to see her tonight."

"Will you give her a note from me?"

"Yes," I agreed.

His face lighted again at that, and he cleared a corner of his table, and sat down to write the note. It was evidently difficult to compose, for he tore up two drafts before he got one to suit him. But at last it was done, and he folded it, rummaged an envelope out of a pile of papers on a chair, slipped the note into it, and handed it to me.

"There," he said, and his face was bright with hope. "I think that will settle it."

I was far from sharing his certainty, but I put the envelope in my pocket, assured myself that there was nothing more I could do for him, and returned to the office. Just as I was getting ready to leave, Mr. Royce came in, a chagrined look on his face.

"Mrs. Royce just telephoned me," he said. "She drove out there, as I asked her to, but Miss Vaughan refused to see her."

I had expected it, but the certainty that we had failed again did not add to my cheerfulness.

"Swain wants us to kidnap her," I said, with a twisted smile.

"I'm not sure but that he's right," said my partner, and went thoughtfully away.

I went to my rooms, changed, had dinner at a quiet restaurant, and then took the elevated for the long trip to the Bronx. It was after 8 o'clock when I pulled the bell beside the tall gates to Elmhurst. The gardener was evidently expecting me, for he appeared almost at once and admitted me. Without waiting for him, I walked up the drive toward the house. The lights were on in the library, and I stepped up to the open door.

Then I stopped, and my heart fell. For there were two white-robed figures in the room. One was Miss Vaughan and the other was Francisco Silva. The girl was sitting at his feet.

They had evidently heard my footsteps, for they were looking toward the door, and Miss Vaughan arose as soon as I came within the circle of light. But if I expected her to show any embarrassment, I was disappointed.

"Come in, Mr. Lester," she said. "I believe you have not met Senor Silva."

The yogi had risen, and now he bowed to me.

"Our encounters heretofore have been purely formal," he said, smiling. "I am happy to meet you, Mr. Lester."

His manner was friendly and unaffected, and imperceptibly some of my distrust slipped away.

"I have told Senor Silva," Miss Vaughan continued, when we were seated, "that you have consented to act as my man of business."

"And it is my intention," broke in Silva, "to beseech Mr. Lester to consent to act as my man of business also. I am sure that I shall need one."

I was not at all sure of it, for he seemed capable of dealing with any situation.

"It would not be possible for me to represent divergent interests," I pointed out.

"My dear sir," protested the yogi, "there will be no divergent interests. Suppose we put it in this way—you will represent Miss Vaughan, and will dispose of my interests from that standpoint. There could be no objection to that, I suppose?"

HIS SHARE OF THE HORSE

Interfering Individual Evidently Was Not as Important as He Thought He Was.

A newly admitted member of a big co-operative society boasting sixteen thousand members met one of the society's vans laden with coal, with the driver sitting on the shafts.

The new member, full of the importance of belonging to such a big society, considered it his duty to remonstrate with the driver on his want of consideration toward his horse by adding his own weight to the load instead of walking. The fault-finder wound up by saying: "I'm a shareholder in the society, and therefore part owner of your horse and van."

Shareholder, are you?" responded the coaly, pulling a hair out of the horse's tail and handing it to the astonished member, with the remark: "Here's your share of the animal, mister."

He then drove on.

BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM

Dear Mr. Editor:

For a long time I suffered from backache, pain in left side, frequent urination (bothering me at all times during the day and night), and the uric acid in my blood caused me to suffer from rheumatism along with a constant tired, worn-out feeling. I heard of the new discovery of Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., called "Anuric." After giving "Anuric" a good trial I believe it to be the best kidney remedy on the market today. I have tried other kidney medicines but these "Anuric Tablets" of Dr. Pierce's are the only ones that will cure kidney and bladder troubles.

(Signed) HENRY A. LOVE.

NOTE:—Experiments at Dr Pierce's Hospital for several years proved that "Anuric" is 37 times more active than lithia. Send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial package.

"CASCARETS" ACT ON LIVER; BOWELS

No sick headache, biliousness, bad taste or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

Ancients Knew About Mustard

Mustard is one of the most ancient medicines Pythagoras, who flourished between five and six hundred years before Christ, mentions it Hippocrates who was born in 460 B C, employed it Pliny, the elder, writing in 77 A D, describes three different kinds of mustard and says the seeds were imported to Italy from Egypt originally.

The Romans used it as a stimulant after a cold bath, they mixed mustard oil and olive oil in equal parts and used this as a liniment for stiffness of the muscles. They knew the virtues of mustard poultices and of mustard as an emetic. As a remedy for the stings of scorpions and serpents they pounded it, mixed it with vinegar and applied it to the wound.

They also made a drink out of it, fermenting the seed in a fiery spirit. The liquor thus produced they called mustum ardens, which means burning wine. The word mustard is probably derived from this.

OUR NUTTY NOVELETTE

UNDER THE ELM.

Mopping his brow under the historic elm tree, William Penn was about to consummate his well-known past with the Indians. The sky was a lovely vermilion and all about the tomahawk birds were twittering peacefully. Now and then an arrowhead chirped from the long grass. (See August Zipf's "The Bugs of Early Pennsylvania.")

Suddenly a hoary old Indian chief, Cold-in-the-Bean, who had been reclining lazily on one elbow, stood up suddenly upon both of them.

"O Quaker Oats!" he said jocularly (see Amrose Bubp's "Humor as Exhibited by the Primitive Americans") "O Quaker Oats! Puttest thou me wise to one thing!"

"Shoot, friend," smiled the founder of the Keystone state.

"'Tis this," continued Cold-in-the Bean "If we sell thee Pennsylvania for these five hundred and twenty-two long strings of beads, might not it be said in after times that thou was stringing us!"

Penn smiled nervously, and then, with a happy thought (see Socrates Robinson's "Happy Thoughts of William Penn") he passed around the box of cigars once more and the treaty was signed.

That the modest friend who offers to lend you a couple of dollars when you are broke is far more worthy of your praise than the hero of a hundred battles

SCHLEI-HAUPT NUPTIALS

On March 8th at 2 o'clock p. m. at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Haupt, the marriage of Elmer Schlei and Bertha Haupt took place. In a room appropriately decorated and under a canopy of wedding bells they made their hymenial vows and were pronounced husband and wife by Rev. Wm. P Thiel of the Reformed church. The bride wore a white satin dress with orange blossoms and pearl trimmings and carried a bouquet of carnations and roses. The groom was dressed in blue serge and wore a bouquet of carnations and roses.

The ceremony and celebration was attended by only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom, their parents, brothers, sisters and cousins. A sumptuous wedding dinner was served in courses.

The bride and groom are both favorably known in this vicinity, having been reared here, and enjoy a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The groom is an industrious young man, and has chosen the farm for his field of occupation. The bride is one of our admirable young ladies, amiable and congenial in disposition and will prove to be an able helpmate to her husband. They expect to move on the groom's farm three and one-half miles southwest of town, whither the best wishes of their friends for success, prosperity and happiness accompany them.

Under the pressure of necessity owing to its scarcity because of the war platinum is being replaced in many electrical appliances. Formerly platinum was employed for the lead in wires in electric incandescent lamps but at present wires made of nickel-chromium metallic tungsten or metallic molybdenum, are being employed with good results. Metallic molybdenum was also replaced platinum which was liberally used for the resistance wires of electric furnaces in antebellum days. Platinum was formerly employed for the ignition points of spark plugs but the greatly increased cost of the metal has compelled the use of substitutes chief among which is metallic tungsten.

Job. Christian Watson former premier of Australia now traveling in Canada rose to his exalted position from a "printer's devil." He was born in Valparaiso, Chile, but went to Australia when quite young. He is a thorough newspaper man conversant in a practical way with every end of the business and when the war broke out he had a building up and part of the staff hired for the creation of a new labor paper. A member of the labor party he is a stanch advocate of a strong army and navy believing that preparedness is a guarantee of peace.

Marvin Knorp has found a sure way to stretch boots to almost any desired size. He bought a pair and they were too small. One night he filled them with oats and poured in some water. Then he tied the tops and waited. Next morning he found them stretched aplenty. They were as big as two or three pairs of boots. "And what a shape" Robinson Crusoe never wore an odder looking pair of boots. If your boots are too small feed them oats. It's a sure cure for smallness.

The Haida Indians, living on the Queen Charlotte islands of our Alaskan possessions were until a few years ago, divided strictly into two tribes Ravens and Eagles, both strictly exogamic, which is to say that Eagle men had to marry Raven women and vice versa, the children, according to tribal law, becoming members of the mother's tribe and returning to that group when half grown to receive training and ultimately inherit the family property.

The boys of Oundle school Northamptonshire, England are taking up the manufacture of munitions of war. By the courtesy of a neighboring firm of engineers, the school is supplied with work of a varied character connected with mines, torpedoes and torpedo boats. Boys give one full day a week to the work and work in batches of 25 to 30 so that about 180 boys, the great majority between the ages of 14 and 15, are thus employed.

Submarine mines are of three types. First ground mines which are usually of great size and laid directly on the bottom of shallow seas; second anchored mines which are attached by a cable to a weight on the bottom and are designed to float at a predetermined depth so that they will touch and be detonated by passing ships and third floating mines which are dropped on the surface of the water.

Prof. W. O. Hotz of the Harvard division of geology has been sent by the Shelldon fund to study the coral reefs, the uplifted limestones and the volcanic rocks in the Fiji islands. His investigations will occupy the better part of a year and are expected to add materially to the scientific knowledge of the regions covered.

LATE PROGRESSIVE LEADER TO BOOST FOR CUMMINS

Boone Ia. March 11 Judge John L. Stevens, of Boone, first progressive nominee for governor of Iowa, is about to file with the county auditor the papers that signalize his return to the republican party. He will support Senator A B. Cummins for president. Judge Stevens was an influential republican prior to the bolt of the Roosevelt followers in 1912.

In referring to his return to the republican party he said he hoped Senator Cummins would be nominated for president, but that he would also gladly support Colonel Roosevelt if the latter is the nominee.

Though he criticises President Wilson's policy in Mexico and believes the executive wrong in his stand on the armed merchantmen issue, Judge Stevens said Wilson had proved a remarkable president both courageous and honest.

SHERIFF CREMER TO FIGHT OUSTER PROCEEDINGS

Ottumwa Ia March 11. That Sheriff C C. Cremer will keep his place as an officer of Wapello county during the pendency of his trial on ouster proceedings instituted against him by the state department of justice and the county attorney, seems certain, from the view of the question taken by both sides in the case. No affidavits asking that the office be declared vacant at once accompanied the petition from Des Moines and Sheriff Cremer is now at his office.

"I am here to stay," said the sheriff. "If they want me out, they will have to put me out. I am not going to back up. Dirty politics is the way I look at the whole thing." Should Mr Cremer be found guilty of the charges of maladministration, extortion and misconduct in office it will be up to the board of supervisors to appoint some one to fill out his term, which expires January 1 1917.

WOMAN AND YOUTH PLEAD GUILTY TO ARSON CHARGE

Bedford, Ia., March 10.—Suspended sentences of one year in jail and fines of $1,000 and $500 respectively were given Mrs. Louise Page and D. Hewitt, 19 years old, on their pleas of guilty of conspiracy and arson. February 6, the barn on the Page home at the outskirts of Lenox was burned and sensational disclosures showed Mrs. Page as the instigator and the young man as the firebrand. The latter was to receive $100 for setting the fire. The Page family is wealthy and prominent.

IOWA FARMERS WILL PUBLISH PAPER AND URGE RURAL DEMANDS

Not Satisfied With Promoting Influences Shown In Many Farm Publications.

Cedar Rapids Ia March 11 Farmers from Muscatine Howard, Winneshiek Jones, Cedar, Linn, Scott, Van Buren, Iowa, Hamilton and other counties in this section of Iowa, in session here Tuesday formed the Iowa Farmers' Protective association.

The organization took steps toward the establishment of a new farm journal of some nature in the near future. With the start of the new journal the proposal was made that the publication be made a daily operated expressly for farmers and under the official auspices of the organization. The proposal met with fairly general approval among those present, but it was later decided to leave this question open until a committee of three can visit Des Moines and other places and obtain authoritative estimates on the comparative operating costs of dailies as compared with weeklies, and on the comparative values of the two classes of newspapers. It is claimed that many of the farm journals and general newspapers give erroneous estimates on actual rural demands.

The members of the association have announced themselves strongly in favor of good roads but are equally determined in the stand that the residents of cities and towns must aid in standing the expense of the road improvements to be made throughout Iowa. The new organization is expected to absorb and cement the numerous county good roads organizations that have flourished in the past.

IOWA INVENTOR CLAIMS BLOW AT GASOLINE COST

Cedar Falls Ia March 11 M M Mether, young Cedar Falls inventor, claims to have solved the biggest problem of the automobilist—a way to dodge the ever ascending price of gasoline. Mether has invented a device, he says, which will run an automobile engine on kerosene, distillate or any other low grade oil fuel. The device is simple and easy to install, Mether asserts.

Friends of the young inventor declare tests, even in the coldest weather have proved the efficiency of his device. Automobiles have been started and run on common low grade fuels when his device was attached they say.

Mether has applied for a patent on his machine. The exact character of his appliance he has refused to reveal till it shall be fully protected by a patent. He has been working on it since 1913.

SENATOR ALLEN "STANDS PAT" ON VIEWS ABOUT DOCTORS

Clinton Ia March 11 State Senator I H Allen has replied to the attack of the Journal of the Iowa Medical Society of which Dr D S Fairchild sr of Clinton is editor.

The magazine assailed him for supporting "irregular systems of medicine," in the legislature.

In his reply, Senator Allen says:

"I am not looking for a debate on if the Iowa Medical society wants one I'll see that the public knows a few things before we get through.

"Why shouldn't I be for the chiropractics and osteopaths? Members of the State Medical society told me they could do nothing for my little girl and that she would at least suffer curvature of the spine.

"I called in osteopaths and chiropractors and my little girl is well and strong today. Wouldn't I be unnatural and ungrateful if I didn't lend them my support when they needed it in the legislature.

"I am tired of hearing one school of medicine attack another. No wonder the public is losing faith in all of them."

BOWEN AGAIN HEAD OF IOWA COMMISSION MEN

Des Moines Ia March 11 Charles B. Bowen, of Rolfe was reelected president of the Iowa Wholesale Egg, Butter & Poultry Dealers' association, at the 22nd annual convention of that organization held at the Savery hotel yesterday.

In his annual address Mr Bowen announced that the association now has more than 300 members, and urged that the dealers unite to demand the matter of claims. He declared, however, that the commission men had been much maligned. The active membership of the association he explained is made up of dealers only while the associate membership includes the commission men railroad men and supply men.

The officers in addition to President Bowen who were elected are P A Casey of Atlantic, vice president, W W Wertz of Grand Junction, treasurer, and M A Hagensick, of Des Moines, secretary. The executive committee is made up of C H Wilson, of Winterset Hans Halverson of Humboldt H S Rhynsburger, of Oskaloosa, F L. Loomis, of Fort Dodge and F Meinhart of Maquoketa.

MINISTERS FAIL TO SECURE CONVICTION ON SUNDAY MEASURE

Charles City Movie Man Twice Acquitted—Sheriff Hooted In Making Arrest.

Charles City, Ia., March 11 Charles City's Sunday movie fight entered its second chapter early this week when W E. Waterhouse, manager of the Hildreth theater, was arrested for a second time and for a second time acquitted. The charge against him was operating a moving picture show on Sunday in violation of the city ordinance. Local justices of the peace refused to handle the case this time and it was taken to Rockford.

The Charles City Ministeral association is back of the movement to close the movies on Sunday and it is making its fight despite the outspoken opposition of the city council and the county supervisors. The council recently expressed itself in favor of permitting Sunday shows and the supervisors remonstrated against paying the costs of suits growing out of arrests for operating Sunday shows.

Instead of the city being equally divided on the issue the supervisors say that at least 90 per cent of the people here favor Sunday shows.

When the sheriff arrested Waterhouse Sunday he was hooted by a crowd that gathered about his car.

"SUFFS" STORM DRUG STORE TO PROCURE PETITION

Lehigh Ia., March 10. Armed with hatchets and axes a body of representative women of Lehigh who favor suffrage and who are willing to go to any lengths to quell a movement which did not favor equal rights, entered the drug store of Oscar V Peterson and secured the petition sent out by the state Anti-Suffrage association. This had been placed in the drug store, and, though it had very few signers, the women did not intend that any such bit of paper should come to the notice of the voters.

Hatchets and axes, which played an important part in the raid were secured at a hardware store. These were all returned intact, proving that the men did not seriously contend the point. Mr Peterson has been entirely converted and the would be voters anticipate no further trouble.

Peterson his friends say started the petition as a joke.

JUDGE SUGGESTS PROBE ON WATERLOO CITY OFFICIALS

Waterloo Ia March 10 -In empaneling the March grand jury Monday afternoon Judge Mullan called specific attention to the duty of investigating public officials against whom reports of misconduct have been rumored. It is surmised that the court's remarks were prompted by the report of state bankers. Judge Mullan urged the necessity of returning indictments if the investigation discloses that any officer whether county, city or school, has failed to account for funds, has misappropriated public money or has been guilty of any official misconduct.

F W Edwards, representing Loren Risk, an attorney who was recently bound over to the grand jury on a charge of subornation of perjury in connection with the trial of the Scribner case against the street railway, examined the jurors and passed them for cause making no challenge.

SYNDICATE CANNOT BUY ROCK RAPIDS LIGHTING PLANT

Rock Rapids Ia., March 10 George J Boxham, of Sheldon, Ia., representing a syndicate that is buying up electric light plants all over the country, was before the city council last night to ascertain if the municipal plant here could be purchased. He was informed by the council that the plant was not for sale. The water works system here depends on the electric light plant for power for pumping water, and the two plants will not be separated. The plant was built in 1897, and has been a source of profit from the first. It is planned to add about $12,000 of improvements to the plants the coming season. The two plants are probably worth close to $75,000.

IOWA SPENT $12,379,024.26 ON ROADS AND BRIDGES

Des Moines Ia March 10 —The Iowa highway commissions, in the March bulletin states that $12,379,024 26 was expended on roads and bridges in Iowa in 1915. This is $1,000,000 more than the estimate of expenditure made last December, when the annual report of the commission was filed with the governor.

The latest report is made up from reports submitted by the engineers of the 99 counties of the state, showing the actual expenditures for the year. This report is now being printed, and will be ready for distribution the latter part of March.

POLK COUNTY FIRMS MUST PAY REMITTED 1915 TAXES

Des Moines, Ia., March 10. By a ruling of the executive council 16 exempted Des Moines concerns must pay Polk county 1915 taxes to the amount of $22,288.28. The county auditor had previously received an order not to collect back taxes for 1915, but to place assessments on the books in 1916.

The order was annulled. The county valuation will be increased $1,048,855 as a result and the Des Moines base ball club, Coliseum company and others will be compelled to liquidate. The concerns were mostly manufacturing firms, for whom taxes had been remitted without authority as an inducement to locate here.

CRESTON John Long, a farmer residing near Talmage, Ia., is getting his small share of the millions of dollars being spent in the United States by the warring nations of Europe. Only a few days ago he shipped two carloads of walnut logs to a Des Moines mill, which is devoting almost its entire energy to the making of gunstocks since the European war orders began to flood this country. The same Iowa farmer is still felling the walnut trees on his timber land and expects to have several more carloads ready for shipment within a short time.

FRENCH ARE HOLDING AT ALL POINTS

Furious Assaults By Crown Prince Fail to Bend or Break the Lines Defending Verdun.

RETAKE CORBEAUX WOODS

Counter Attacks Win Back Lost Positions — Germans Admit Loss of Ground Gained at Vaux.

PLAN NEW MOVES

London March 11 There are signs of renewed activity on the eastern front as the spring approaches. The Russians and Germans have been feeling out each others lines at various points.

Reports from Saloniki say it is believed the allied forces there there are preparing to launch a great offensive movement about May 1.

Paris March 11.- The situation at Verdun is regarded as much better from the French viewpoint as a result of yesterday's fighting. The public is greatly cheered by reports of successful resistance on the part of the defenders of the fortress. Notwithstanding an enormous expenditure of ammunition and unstinted sacrifice of life, the Germans have failed to bend, much less break, the blue line.

There was no change last night in the situation before Verdun, either east or west of the Meuse according to a semi-official announcement made here this afternoon.

The announcement adds that the violent bombardment continues on both banks of the Meuse but that there has been no infantry attack by the Germans.

French Clear Woods.

Exhausted by three days of violent efforts the assailants called a half day's rest to replenish the depleted ranks of infantry. The French took advantage of the respite to sweep out the Germans still remaining in Corbeaux wood and in this effort were almost successful.

The renewal of heavy fighting east of the Meuse attended by a series of assaults on Douaumont, has centered interest once more on this portion of the front. A good road runs through the gently sloping ravine up to the plateau before Douaumont, possession of which would enable the attacking forces to take the defenses in the flank. Massed infantry, well supported by artillery struggled hard to win command of this easiest approach to the famous position, but the French were able to hold off the assailants and at the same time to deal with attacks on the village of Douaumont.

Ardor in Attack.

Not often in the long battle have the French infantrymen had the order to advance. When they did receive it, they showed that their offensive spirit had lost nothing by being held in. They had such opportunities on Wednesday and Thursday in Corbeaux wood. On Tuesday night the Germans held virtually the whole wood.

To prevent cutting of communications of the French force on Goose hill. French infantrymen were brought out from the trenches shortly before midday of Wednesday. They crossed the Bethincourt-Cumieres road, climbed the slope on the opposite side and entered the wood. From the southwestern edge, another strong attack was directed from Les Caurettes about a mile farther down the same road, against the Germans in Cumieres wood. In the wood a desperate fight took place. An officer of light infantry said:

Take Machine Gun.

"I had not seen my men go at the enemy with such fury. They cleared my section of the wood in less than an hour."

"At one point on the opposite edge of the wood, a German machine gun was posted in a ditch protected by breastworks of felled trees. It poured a deadly fire into us. A sergeant and 20 men volunteered to drive out the enemy.

"Advancing by leaps and bounds from tree to tree they got in among the Germans with bayonets. They took the gun and turned it about, starting a raking fire on the Germans. This did not last long for they soon jammed the gun in their enthusiasm."

By early afternoon virtually the whole wood was in the hands of the French. The Germans, however, prepared another onslaught. While reserves were being gathered behind hill No. 265, artillery fire was concentrated on the reverse slopes of Goose hill to prevent the bringing up of French supports.

The German attack began at dusk. The fighting lasted intermittently all night and most of Thursday. The Germans steadily lost ground until at nightfall of yesterday they retained a bare footing in the wood.

Great Battle At Vaux.

The hottest fighting of yesterday, however, was around Vaux, northeast of Verdun. Still intent on getting Douaumont, plateau the German commander hurled troops against the village. Brigade after brigade dashed against the French front along the mile between the villages of Vaux and Douaumont. On one occasion 10 companies reached Vaux but a French counter attack soon drove them out.

Time after time German troops were annihilated by the French artillery, but they were replaced immediately by fresh regiments.

The text of the communication given out by the French war office this afternoon read as follows:

"In the Argonne district our artillery has bombarded certain convoys of the enemy moving along the road from Montfaucon to Avocourt."

FRENCH LOSSES ARE MORE THAN 70,000, IS BELIEF

Berne (by wireless to Sayville). Maximilian Harden military expert of the Berliner Zeitung estimates that the total losses in the battle of Verdun to date total 70,000 to 80,000. Major Moraht holds that more than 20,000 French soldiers have been made prisoners.

More Chances of Excitement.

Old Captain Bowline usually spends his time pottering about in a little sailing boat. Recently, he was chatting with a friend on the subject of his hobby.

"I think I'll get a motor boat next summer," said he.

"Whatever for?" asked his friend. "I thought you were so keen on sailing?"

"Well, I am, but motor boats are much more exciting," replied the hardy old chap. "In a sailing boat you can only drown, while in the other you can be drowned, burned to a cinder by a petrol explosion or even starved to death if your engine breaks down ten miles from land."

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built up on Right Food.

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics.

New material from which to rebuild used up tissue cells is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"I found myself on the verge of a nervous collapso, due to overwork at study, and to illness in the family," writes a Wisconsin woman.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics, but their effects were only shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me.

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early, after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts.

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained weight and felt like a different woman. Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish these happy results." "There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Feared Mexicans Will Unite Forcing Armed Intervention

Washington, D. C., March 10 -The foremost question which sticks up as the result of decision to send troops after Villa is this:

Will the expedition bring about such a uniting of Mexican elements as to force armed intervention?

The possibility is clearly foreseen here, as up to late today Carranza has not yet granted his permission for American troops to cross the border

The president ordered the troops in without waiting on Carranza

Villa Long Ago Planned To Invade United States; Zapata Refused Support

Columbus, N M, March 11 Papers found on the battle field yesterday revealed that Francisco Villa decided last October to wage warfare against Americans This step according to Villa's personal documents was taken immediately after formal recognition by the United States by the Carranza de facto government and began with the institution of Villa's campaign in Sonora, which ended disastrously at Agua Prieta on November 20 Among the papers found was what purported to be an agreement between Villa and Mexican residents of Colonia Morelos, near El Tigre, Sonora, pledging mutual support in an effort to oust Mormons and other Americans, confiscate their property and operate their mines and farms

Promised To Stock Farms

The citizens, according to the alleged agreement promised to take up arms with Villa to gain this end Villa was to furnish the Mexicans of the district with livestock to be delivered by April, 1916 "after he had overcome Carranza and established himself as supreme chief in Mexico"

Another of the papers acknowledged receipt of $25,000 in gold from the consolidated Cananea Copper company, at Naco, Sonora, shortly after Villa's retreat from Agua Prieta The receipt credited the money to export duties on copper ores from Cananea, but a notation showed that the money really was paid for the lives of three Americans held as prisoners and who at the time, were reported to have been marked for execution

An invitation to Gen Emiliano Zapata to march north and join in an attack on the United States was sent by Francisco Villa in January, according to a copy of a letter found among Villa's captured papers. The letter was dated San Geronimo, Chihuahua, January 6 1916

Sought Zapata's Aid.

I shall not expend another shell on brother Mexicans," Villa wrote in the letter, but will prepare and organize to attack the Americans on their own soil and let them know that Mexico is a land of the free and the tomb of hornless crowns and traitors"

Villa proposed that the joint movement with Zapata against the United States should occur six months from January 6 Zapata so far as known made no move to accept and this may have been responsible for Villa's decision to march on Columbus alone.

Villa in the letter attributed his defeat at Agua Prieta last November to the action of the United States government in permitting Carranza authorities to send over American territory reinforcements for the Mexican town opposite Douglas, Ariz., and declared that act an invasion of the sovereignty of Mexico and an insult to the people

"At that time," Villa told Zapata, "I restrained but with the greatest difficulty, the impulse of my troops to attack the city of Douglas."

Carranza, he also stated in the letter, had sold Mexico to the United States, agreeing to lease Magdalena bay for 99 years, and giving over control of the Mexican National railroad

"Iowa will be for the nomination of Senator Cummins at Chicago,' said Mr. Adams, "and the delegation will not stop voting for him In my opinion, Senator Cummins has the best chance of any man to win the republican nomination He will get on the first ballot the votes not only of Iowa, but Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska and other western states, and probably Kansas, Wyoming and Montana, as well as votes from many eastern states. Iowa will have no second choice at Chicago."

HOG MARKET HITS HIGH LEVEL TODAY

Live Pork Sells at Chicago For $10.05 Per Hundred—Supply Exhausted By Foreign Demands.

Chicago, March 11 —Owing to scarcity of supplies, the hog market today jumped up 25 cents to $10.05 per 100 pounds. This is $3 55 above the low point of December 22, and is 85 cents over the price of a week ago. Only 18,000 hogs were received here today. The comparative exhaustion of the hog supply is explained by the unprecedented demand for pork, induced largely by the tremendous call from warring European nations Since January 1 more than 500,000 hogs in excess of the total for the corresponding period of 1915 have been marketed in Chicago.

CARRANZA ARMY EXPECTED TO HELP RUN DOWN VILLA

Columbus, N M, March 10 Carranza authorities according to information from Juarez, would not object to the entry of American troops into Mexico, to attack Villa

In fact messages have been received here stating that Carranza aides had left Guzman to take the bandit chief in rear, with the expectation that American troops whom they suppose to have already crossed the border would attack him.

The Carranza troops, it was stated carried a black and white flag to notify the American troops of their identity. General Gavira, commanding at Juarez, has the bandits' escape to the eastward blocked, and official information from Agua Prieta, was to the effect that Military Governor P Elias Calles, had disposed troops in the last 24 hours to cut Villa off from entry into Sonora

One Destroyer and One Torpedo Boat Sunk By Striking Mines—45 Seamen Are Reported Lost.

London March 11 —The British torpedo boat destroyer Coquette and torpedo boat No. 11 have been sunk by striking mines, it was officially announced this afternoon

The official announcement says the number of casualties in connection with the sinking of the warships was 45.

The statement follows

"The torpedo boat destroyer Coquette, Lieut. Vere Seymour, R. N. R., in command, and H. M. torpedo boat No. 11, Lieut. John A. T. Legh, R. N., have struck mines off the east coast and sunk The casualties were.

"Coquette—One officer and 21 men

"The Torpedo Boat—Three officers and 20 men"

The normal complement of the Coquette was 60 men. Torpedo boat No. 11, ordinarily carried 350 men

The Coquette was built in 1897. She was 210 feet long and 19½ feet beam She displaced 355 tons. Her armament consisted of one 12-pound gun, five six-pound guns and two torpedo tubes

Torpedo boat No. 11, was built in 1906. She was 172 feet long and displaced 253 tons. She was armed with two three-inch guns and three torpedo tubes.

STEEL ORDERS ARE PILING UP RAPIDLY

The orders stood on February 29, at 8,568,966 tons, an increase of 646,199 tons over January 31, and comparing with 8,489,718 tons December 31, 1906, the previous high record.

CARRANZA SILENT ON BORDER RAIDS

Refuses to Discuss Incident—Censor Suppresses All News of Developments and Press Is Muzzled.

Mexico City, March 10.—General Carranza does not care to make a statement in regard to the situation resulting from the raid on Columbus, N. M. A rigid censorship has been imposed. Newspapers are priting nothing of the raid and the public has not been advised of it

The Mexican embassy got a telegram from General Carranza late today, saying that 5,000 troops from various garrisons to the south had been ordered to move upon the Villa bands. No mention was made of the proposal of the United States to send forces.

AUSTRIANS DECLARE WAR ON SAN MARINO

Notice Sent to Smallest Nation In World—Citizens Are Ordered Interned.

Rome, March 10.—Austria regards herself as at war with the republic of San Marino, is the message conveyed by Frederick F Penfield, American ambassador to Austria Hungary, to the regents of the smallest state in the world, who had applied through him to have their citizens interned in Austria released. Austria justified her refusal with the statement that San Marino has committed a serious breach of neutrality

The republic of San Marino, in northern Italy, 14 miles southwest of Rimini, is 22 square miles in area and has a population of 9 500. The supreme power of the republic is the general assembly and it is governed by two regents selected twice a year from the 60 life members of the great council. The available armed forces of the republic form a total of 1,200 men, all citizens able to bear arms being technically obliged to do so from the age of 16 to 60 years. This little state has had an existence of about 1,000 years.

President Wilson, Following Cabinet Meeting at Which Official Family Are In Accord, Orders U. S. Troops Across the Border Without Waiting to Ask Consent of Carranza Government—Fall Introduces Senate Resolution Calling For 500,000 Volunteers to Police Mexico.

DE FACTO OFFICERS NOT EXPECTED TO OBJECT

Administration Makes It Clear That Sovereignty of Republic Will Not Be Interfered With Unless There Is Opposition From Other Sources—Fleet May Cooperate With Army to Limited Extent—More Troops Will Be Detailed From Interior Posts to Strengthen Present Guard.

Washington, March 10 - President Wilson today ordered American troops over the Mexican border to capture or kill the Villa bandits who yesterday raided Columbus, N. M.

Senator Fall introduced his resolution providing for the recruiting of 500,000 volunteers to police Mexico.

Major General Scott, chief of staff of the army, announced that the expedition would consist of not less than 5,000 men, all of whom are available on the border under Major General Funston.

In its present stage, the president's order does not mean armed intervention in Mexico. It provides for a punitive expedition to deal with lawless forces over which the Carranza government has no control.

As Secretary Lansing left the cabinet meeting he indicated further representations, probably giving notice of the decision would be sent to the Carranza government immediately

The following statement was issued at the White House

"An adequate force will be sent at once in pursuit of Villa with the single object of capturing him and putting a stop to his forays.

"This can be done and will be done in entirely friendly aid of the constituted authorities in Mexico and with scrupulous respect for the sovereignity of that republic."

It was said at the White House that the American government wants Villa dead or alive and that no steps will be negleCteLd to carry out that object

It was declared that the United States will not consider the punitive expendition an invasion of Mexico, and will continued to deal with the Carranza government The American government is still opposed to armed intervention in Mexico, but has decided that the peace of both Mexico and the United States is imperiled by the continued activities of Francisco Villa.

The cabient was unanimous in deciding that Villa must be caught.

Democratic and republican senators particularly interested in the Mexican situation seemed to be agreed today that there was nothing for congress to do at this time. Chairman Stone, of the foreign relations committee, found republican leaders were not disposed to discuss the situation.

Senator Fall, who has a plan embodied in a resolution for policing Mexico with 500,000 American volunteers, said that he might introduce it and ask that it be referred to the foreign relations committee, but was not certain he would do it today

McCumber Offers Resolution.

Senator McCumber, republican, of North Dakota, introduced a resolution in the Senate today providing that congress shall direct the president to immediately send an armed force into Mexico "to hunt and destroy" murdering bands guilty of atrocities against American citizens.

Eliseo Arredondo, General Carranza's representative here received the news of the president's decision with the statement that he could make no comment and would at once notify General Carranza.

Yesterday he declared it was his own opinion that such action would not be resented.

Need More Troops.

General Scott said today that the necessity of providing even a stronger force for the border than it now has, while the American troops are operating in Mexico, would necessitate using some troops not now there for the punitive expedition. They probably will be ordered from other posts. No plans have been made so far as is known, for use of the national guard

It is said the pursuit of Villa would be undertaken in a comprehensive way.

Cabinet members and army officials regarded the decision to go after Villa with troops with undisguised satisfaction. A general feeling of relief that the administration had finally decided to take the step was apparent.

Fleet May Cooperate.

No orders had been issued to the navy this afternoon, but it was considered probable that some of the Atlantic fleet might be placed in Mexican waters to be near if the Americans in coast towns were endangered by anti-American demonstrations. The government is reluctant to make any naval demonstration that might be construed as against General Carranza

Wilson Determined to Settle Border Trouble For All Time

The president himself is represented as being as determined to oust Villa as he was to oust Victoriano Huerta.

The announcement of the intention of the president to send troops into Mexico was accompanied by scenes not equaled by those at the White House since the determination to send the Atlantic fleet to Vera Cruz in 1914.

Officials hoped General Carranza would realize the spirit in which the American troops were being sent after Villa.

Carranza will be notified immediately that the United States has no intention of taking any Mexican territory whatever and will respect fully the sovereignty of that nation.

Fear Mexican Sentiment.

American officials realize that Carranza may have difficulty in consenting to the presence of American soldiers on Mexican soil because of popular feeling in his country.

At the cabinet meeting the discussion of the situation was brief and to the point The cabinet unanimously agreed that the only thing to do was to send troops.

President Wilson took the same position and at once instructed Secretary Baker to issue the necessary orders. He also instructed Secretary Lansing to inform General Carranza of the attitude of the American government.

Congress With Wilson.

Leaders of both houses of congress were immediately notified from the White House of the president's action. They approved his course.

Before deciding finally to send the troops after Villa, the president conferred over the telephone with Chairman Stone of the Senate foreign relations committee, who told him he believed sentiment in congress would solidly support his action.

It was considered possible that within a few days President Wilson will go before congress to recite the series of acts by Villa which led up to the ordering of troops to effect his capture. The president desires to move with the entire cooperation of congress.

No move will be made by the navy for the present. Practically the entire Atlantic fleet, however, is within two days' sail of the Mexican coast and should Carranza's forces be unable to protect Americans or other foreigners in case of riots, the navy will be pressed into service immediately This was stated authoritatively today at the navy department.

Congress Approves Course of President in Mexican Action

While the president and the cabinet are deciding to send the troops over the border, the agitation had broken out afresh in congress.

Senator McCumber and Senator Fall, both republicans, introduced resolutions proposing armed action in different ways. Both resolutions were referred to the foreign relations committee, while Chairman Stone counselled his colleagues to let the executive departments of the government handle the situation.

Speeches Quickly Stopped.

While the Senate was talking and some desultory speeches were being made in the House, the president acted, and the leaders, notified quickly by telephone from the White House, passed the word around.

It spread quickly, but both House and Senate received it as cooly as an announcement of the passage of a routine bill. The democrats generally expressed the opinion that the president's action was wholly justified and the republicans, who have been urging action expressed gratification that it had been taken. There was no sign of dissension

When the Atlantic fleet went to Vera Cruz in 1914 congress at the president's request passed a resolution authorizing him to use the armed forces of the United States Such action is considered unnecessary in the present situation at this stage The administration holds the president is fully vested by the constitution with authority to repel invasion

Applause greeted a statement in the House that troops would be sent across the border

"The government should take this matter in hand at once, said Representative Smith, of Texas "send troops after the assassins and pursue them until they are captured They should be brought back alive or dead If they are captured alive, they should be brought to Columbus and hanged I would put no limit on the number of miles our troops might have to go into Mexico to do this To Carranza I would say that we are only doing our duty "

Grape Shot, Not Grape Juice.

Senator Ashurst, democrat, of Arizona, sought immediate consideration of the McCumber resolution but it was blocked on objection of Senator Stone. Mr Ashurst declared that from his own information of conditions on the border of his state, he knew that troubles in Mexico, instead of nearing an end are only beginning.

"It is the duty of the Senate," he said to vote authority to send troops after these banded cutthroats, bringing them back to Columbus where they made a brutal pute out of American citizens Then, on the spot, I would give them grape shot instead of grape juice

Our Chemical Relation to Life

Our most constant and vital relation to the world without us is a chemical one. We can go without food for some days, but we can exist without breathing only a few minutes. Through these spongy lungs of ours we lay hold upon the outward world in the most intimate and constant way. Through them we are rooted to the air. The air is a mechanical mixture of two very unlike gases—nitrogen and oxygen; one very inert, the other very active. Nitrogen is like a cold, cold, lethargic person—it [illegible] with other substances very reluctantly and with but little energy. Oxygen is just its opposite in this respect, it gives itself freely, it is "hail, fellow, well met!" with most substances and it enters into co-partnership with them on such a large scale that it forms nearly one-half of the material of the earth's crust. This invisible gas, this breath of air, through the magic of chemical combination, forms nearly half the substance of the solid rocks. Deprive it of its affinity for carbon, or substitute nitrogen or hydrogen in its place, and the air would quickly suffocate us. That changing of the dark, venous blood in our lungs into the bright, red, arterial blood would instantly cease. Fancy the sensation of inhaling an odorless, non-poisonous atmosphere that would make one gasp for breath! We should be quickly poisoned by the waste of our own bodies. All things that live must have oxygen, and all things that burn must have oxygen. Oxygen does not burn, but it supports combustion.—John Burroughs, in Harper's Magazine.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Restore Color, Gloss and Attractiveness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

YOU CRACKED THIS LAW

Uncle Sam Has Rule Against Writing Check for Less Than $1.

There is a law that even the local bankers were not "wise" to and has undoubtedly been broken by nearly every one who carries a checking account

Do you know that when you write a check, or any paper that is to circulate as money, for less than $1.00, you are laying yourself liable to a fine of $500 and imprisonment to six months in jail under the United States laws?

Though there is a law against writing a check for less than $1.00 it is done hundreds of times each day in the business world

Under the title of "Offenses against the currency, coinage, etc.," section 178, criminal code of the United States the law relative to checks is made very plain. Section 178 is as follows:

"No person shall make, issue, circulate, or pay out any note, check, memorandum, token, or other obligation for a less sum than $1.00 intended to circulate as money, or to be received, or used in lieu of lawful money of the United States; and every person so offending shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

SPRING TIME, DRAGGING TIME

Up to Each Farmer These Days to See that Every Inch of County Road is Dragged.

Road dragging time is here. Getting the drag busy right now will help dry up the road and get it into good shape more quickly for spring work.

"It's up to each farmer, if during the next few weeks the drag is not applied to county roads in his community, to telephone the county supervisor and find out the reason why," say the highway commissioners at Ames. "Contracts are let to drag every inch of county roads in Iowa and if the farmer to whom the contract is let shirks his duty he should be reported

"For his own lanes and private roads it will most surely pay every farmer to own a drag," say the commissioners They recommend the log drag because it is heavy and easy to make

For a four-horse drag split a 16 foot hard wood log from 8 to 10 in. in diameter through the center lengthwise. Reinforce each half along the flat lower edge with a heavy metal strip to stand the road wear. Flat side forward, connect the halves at the angle desired by three 2x4 cross pieces. By changing the clevis pin, any dragging angle can be obtained and by shifting his weight backward and forward the driver will soon be able to collect and deposit dirt in the spots where necessary.

SPRING SHOOTING

To shoot or not to shoot is the subject that will very soon be stirring the gray matter of the average Iowa sportsman. Since the enactment of the federal migratory bird law two or three years ago the question of spring shooting has been both cussed and discussed, up and down and back and forth, with the sober-minded element, the far-thinking element unalterably opposed to the slaughter of wild fowl in the spring during their annual pilgrimage to the North.

The days of abundant feathered game and unlimited shooting are over forever in this country. The most that can be done is to conserve the present limited supply of wild fowl, that a modicum of sport may be provided once a year for the man with red corpuscles and a love for burnt powder. Market shooting should be stopped for all time. Also an effectual stopper of some sort should be put on the fellow who persists in slaughtering birds in the spring contrary to the law, and in open defiance of public sentiment and the rights and wishes of his fellow men.

Iowa has not been so enthusiastic in the matter of enforcing the federal law prohibiting spring shooting as could be wished. The state law, it is true, sanctions it, but it is in direct violation of the federal statute. Also it is in violation of common sense and the general fitness of things.

Overland Model 75

Roadster $595, both f. o. b. Toledo

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25 It is of the most modern design

It has high-tension magneto ignition This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed With these springs riding comfort is insured

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money

You will be delighted when you see it And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

OLD-TIME COLD CURE— DRINK HOT TEA!

Get a small package of Hamburg Brust Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the herbs, put a cup of boiling water upon them, pour through a sieve and drink a cup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking up a cold.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB RHEUMATISM FROM STIFF, ACHING JOINTS

Soreness from joints and muscles with a small trial bottle of old St. Jacobs Oil

Stop "dosing" Rheumatism.

It's pain only; not one case in fifty requires internal treatment. Rub soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil" right on the "tender spot," and by the time you say Jack Robinson—out comes the rheumatic pain. "St. Jacob's Oil" is harmless rheumatism cure which never disappoints and doesn't burn the skin. It stops pain, soreness and stiffness from aching joints, muscles and bones; stops neuritis, lumbago, backache, neuralgia. Limber up! Get a 25 cent bottle of old-time, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, and in a moment you'll be free from pains, aches and soreness. Don't suffer! Rub rheumatism away.

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completly eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomain-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Three Hundred Million Bushel Crop in 1915

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.

Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land, low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. The climate is healthful.

There is no war tax on land, nor is there any conscription. For complete information as to settlement, reduced railroad rates and descriptive illustrated pamphlet address Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, or

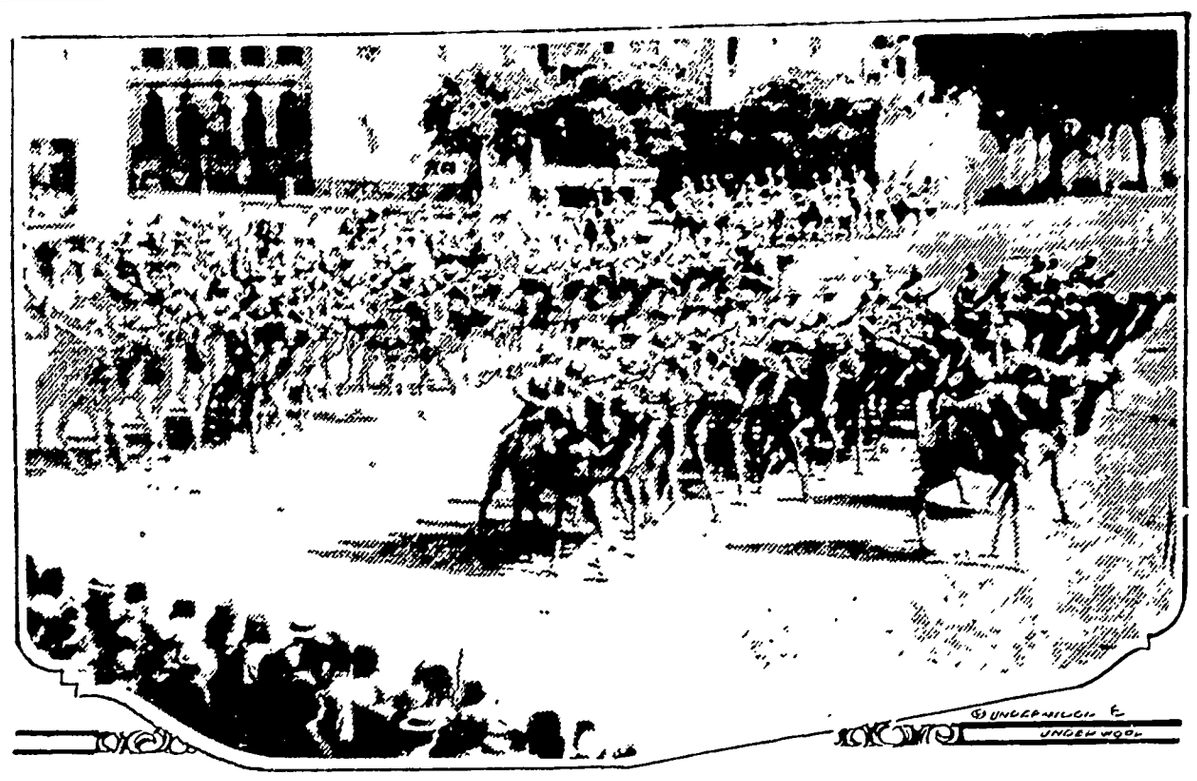
BRITISH CAMEL REGIMENT LEAVES CAIRO TO DEFEND SUEZ CANAL



British camel regiment leaving Cairo, Egypt.

The contest for the supremacy of the Nile and the Suez canal has but begun If the Germans can but lead a big Turkish army in a drive across the canal and over the lower valley of the Nile, she can isolate Great Britain from her far eastern possessions. To combat this attempt, Great Britain is bending every effort to block such possible moves by concentrating men, ammunition, food and supplies in Egypt. Camels are used extensively in the British operations

GERMANY IS FACING GREAT TAX PROBLEM

Business Men and Statesmen Looking Ahead to Needs After the War

Berlin New taxes, perhaps an entire new taxation system, are in prospect for Germany after the war What is to be their effect on the great mass of the working population Will salaries and wages have to go up to enable the workers to pay them? Will retrenchment in personal expenditures alone be sufficient to cover them? How probably will salaries after the war compare with those paid before the conflict started? Will the before-the-war industries that are all but dead now revive immediately so as to give employment and money to men, now soldiers who must pay the taxes?

These are questions put by an Associated Press correspondent to some of the leading industrial men and economists of Germany in an effort to get at least a hypothetical solution of the problem that is being discussed in almost every newspaper in the empire under the heading, 'New Taxes.'

The majority of men to whom the foregoing questions were put seemed to be unanimous in the opinion that salaries and wages after the war probably will not advance beyond their present height—which is far beyond what they were before the war in the case of wages because they are high enough to care for all proposed increases in taxation This majority is so confident in Germany's thorough economic soundness and in her economic future that they maintain in effect no new taxes is going to be necessary A combination of frugality which the average German is easily capable of and of trade prosperity of unprecedented proportions the men believe is going to do away with the necessity of imposing the burden of higher wages on employers

The minority is divided between those who do believe that increased emoluments for workers are going to be a necessity with a consequent reduction for a time of capital available for investment and those who are not sure but who think that it will easily be found employers will feel that it is just if not the necessary thing for them to lengthen their payrolls

The correspondent found, however an almost universal tendency to touch but very lightly on that salaried class of workers petty officials, clerks and so on who benefit least from their country's economic well being, but who must help carry the burden of extra taxation if that becomes necessary In virtually every instance the answers to the questions in the opening paragraph applied to workmen getting wages rather than to workers receiving salaries

Sigmund Bergmann, principal owner and director general of the Bergmann Electrical works, probably the second concern of its kind in Germany of its kind in Germany may be said to be a fair example of the majority except that he makes certain reservations He believes existing wages are high enough to cover whatever taxation may come—unless the countries now at war with Germany consistently and for a long period of time refuse to renew commercial relations with her

"For approximately a year and a half after the war, he says, 'I expect to see a tremendous boom in electrical and mechanical industries in general We shall need that much time merely to resupply our own countries with the things that have been used up during the war We shall not need an order from outside to keep everything going full blast

'The continued well being of the German workman after that depends, in my opinion, entirely upon the foreign countries. If England France Italy and Russia continue to hate us, if they are willing to try to injure us by not buying our goods and by using others no matter how expensive then there is no question but that wages will go down

"Such a course is in the nature of 'cutting off one's nose to spite one's face' and I do not think that any of the countries in question will do it. Russia and Italy especially need our goods, and England cannot manufacture them as cheaply as we, nor as well, because her labor is infinitely more expensive

Wages today in Germany are unprecedentedly high—high enough according to my belief to meet the expenses that are going to come after the war The return of a few million soldier workmen won't drive them down either because we need the men They will stay where they are and take care of after-the-war-expenses until such time as our internal needs are supplied and the 'present enemy countries' decide they can afford to boycott us.'

Prof Dr Julius Wolf one of Germany's best known economists assumed on optimistic standpoint because he says that Germany even today, with war loans of almost 26,000,000,000 marks, plus the entire debts of empire and all the states, is really only just about even now This enormous debt, he says, is balanced by the state and national possessions—railroads, forests domains and mines The entente powers collectively and individually, he believes are so much worse off that after the war they will be broken and Germany [illegible] will have a com-

[illegible] in which to recuperate with [illegible] present [illegible]

For tax or [illegible] is in question only [illegible] to the says But Germany's position is the best of any because she starts [illegible] to adjust her financial affairs with a huge sum on the credit side [illegible] consisting of her railroads [illegible] mines The Prussian railroads alone today are worth more than the combined debts of all the German states

Contrast is with England [illegible] huge state debt and immense war [illegible] and with only its Suez canal interests as a credit Compare us with Italy the most over-taxed nation in the world In contemplating what our taxes will be remember that England's taxes even today may be called sky scraper taxes in comparison with which ours are like the proverbial white raven

Our taxes after the war will higher than now [illegible] be [illegible] than Italy's were before Taxes are not happy things and no one likes to pay them but they are not going to be so high that we will have to raise wages [illegible] We shall probably [illegible] articles and other articles [illegible] going to have a commercial [illegible] we never have had before

In place of higher wages we shall probably [illegible] than ever the saving for which Germans are noted Economy [illegible] in the German's blood [illegible] almost no difference how Germany comes out from a military standpoint the [illegible] France Italy and England are going to be weakened and broken that they won't be able to compete with us We are looking forward to the future confidently

[illegible] Dr Schmidt economic expert of the Victoria Insurance company one of the largest [illegible] of its kind Germany Dr Schmidt not only has a deal [illegible] that with [illegible] millions of thousands of employes [illegible] of policies [illegible] position know [illegible] taxation on the [illegible] that it probably [illegible] to [illegible] may [illegible] that the [illegible] and [illegible] forced by the [illegible] spite of the [illegible] employes and man of [illegible] is shown himself [illegible] self [illegible] ing [illegible] on him

Dr Schmidt [illegible] to get ready [illegible] for the [illegible] the returning soldiers of the war are going to be [illegible] wages and upholds the contention of Herr Bergmann and others that Germany needs [illegible] and will need for some time to come all the workers she can get merely to resupply herself Dr Schmidt adds that the size of a man's income really has less to do with his expenditures than his his own individuality What comes in and how you come out bear little relation to each other is the way he puts it Expanding on this idea he declares that whether increases in salaries come or not Germany will be able to meet any new taxation by means of retrenchments simply because Germany is saving by nature He anticipates both new imperial taxes and indirect assessments. The former he prefers because they cost less to collect but he believes both will be necessary and hopes on the whole for an increase in pay to meet them

The best representative of the out and out believers that Germany is to see a general and all around rise in salaries is the director of one of Germany's largest banks who looks at the matter from the standpoint of the salaried employe rather than that of the wage-earning workingman

He is confident that the heavy taxation following the war will necessitate a general advance in both salaries and wages. and that this in turn will cause a slowing up in the creation of new capital for investment The war however he says, has revealed Germany's economic strength in a new light which makes a new scale of measurements necessary and that which earlier seemed an impossible task now seems much easier

The burden of the new taxation, he declares will not be as great as superficially appears for there is likely to be a good indemnity coming to Germany The empire's war outlay, he estimates, at a probable 50,000,000,000 marks ($12,500,000,000)

ADEN, DRYEST CITY IN THE WORLD

From the Brooklyn Eagle

The wife of an army surgeon who on United States transports has been three times around the world, in showing her very choice collection of various products from faraway ports, called special attention to the baskets from Aden, a port little known outside transports and traders' occasional visits until the big war brought it into a casual notice Aden, at the mouth of the Red sea, she said, is noted chiefly for its fortress-like mountains, entirely barren of any tree, shrub or blade of grass and the great tanks below the grim stony mountains are wonders of engineering

The masonry is marvelous and built across the A-shaped bases, the need of these great tanks for a water supply is caused by the infrequent rains making water storage an imperative necessity In 1904 the last record of rain was in 1882, so that one can understand why it is utterly devoid of natural vegetation, and its nearest approach to a garden is an oasis 25 miles distant

There are no wells, the only water supply the great tanks and bottled water and Aden baskets, which are so unusual and rare they can be had only at Aden, where they are of the greatest use as water carriers, so made that they hold water as well as glass or metal or wood receptacles It is amusing to see the natives fight for possession of tin cans thrown out by visiting ships The food mainly used by natives is dates

The old tanks, made years before Christ, have been reinforced by the moderns, and hold the 30 or 40 of them, millions of gallons The old tanks were supposed to have been made by the Romans, and the cement lining is of a compound not known to moderns Besides the great tanks there are many small cisterns owned by middlemen who sell the storage water in large or small quantities for daily consumption There are steps leading down to the bottom of the tanks so that as the water level lowers it can be had as long as the supply lasts which is usually until another torrential flood of rain pours down the flute-like stone mountains into the tanks at their base A scant supply answers for the natives to whom cleanliness is neither a virtue nor a necessity

Frohman and "Peter Pan."

John D. Williams in the Century

Frohman weighed a play by the idea in it and he never produced a play however arbitrary in story or characters as for example Peter Pan without being able to name specifically the elements of success he thought it possessed

Barrie has gone out of his mind, Frohman I am sorry to say it, but you ought to know it, we are both so fond of him,' said Sir Herbert Tree to Frohman one night. 'He's just read me a play He is going to read it to you, so I am warning you. I know I've not gone woozy in my mind, because I have tested myself since hearing the play, but Barrie must be mad. He has written four acts all about fairies, children and Indians, running through the most incoherent story you ever listened, to, and what do you suppose—the last act is to be set on top of trees!"

"But the following day Frohman heard 'Peter Pan,' and accepted it at once. Long after, he gave these as his reasons 'First, it was written by Barrie, next, it was unmistakably a fine novelty The most emphatic play in any theatrical season, the one that is most likely to focus general public attention, is the most novel. You can estimate its novelty by the amount of fineness a play contains for the common in life, like the poor, is always with us and can never seem novel. Only the fine registers with the emphasis of novelty People go to the theater not to see life as it is, but as they wish it were The theater's business is to present not life, but the illusion of life. Youth is the illusion of life, old age the delusion, and 'Peter Pan' is packed with youth, so I was for it.'"

How Russia Goes to Extremes.

In the Woman's Home Companion Laura Spencer Portor says that you find greater extremes of human nature in Russia than in any other country.

"In the national history and in the national character you shall find strange and striking extremes: extremes of crudeness and gentleness, of cruelty and pity, of injustice and mercy Here, too, you shall find a people at once the most superstitious and barbaric, and the most intellectual and enlightened; the most religious, and the most free thinking; the most splendidly wealthy—taking as an example the fabulous wealth of the czar—and the most squalid and poor; peasants in some parts living in tiny huts shared with them by fowls and pigs and cattle Here, too, you shall find the most selfish and the most unselfish; the most tyrannical and autocratic, the most democratic and self sacrificing; here, above all, the most enslaved and the most free.

"We speak of youth as the season of extremes. Then the mind goes with rushness and inconsistency from one view to its extreme opposite. 'As extreme as youth,' we say. Remembering this, and studying the strange and pervading extremes of Russia, Russia seems like a very personification of youth."

Feeding the Land.

From the Richmond Times-Dispatch

"Is this land rich?" asked the prospective purchaser cautiously

"It certainly ought to be replied the gentleman farmer 'I have put all the money I had into it.'

No sick headache, sour biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now Turn the rascals out—the biliousness, indigestion, sour stomach and foul gases—turn out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets

Millions of men and women use Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a torpid liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of misery. Let Cascarets cleanse your system, remove the sour, fermenting bile, take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the decomposed waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean healthful liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv

DRINK LOTS OF WATER TO FLUSH THE KIDNEYS

Eat Less Meat and Take Salts if Backache or Bladder Trouble Neutralize Acids.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XX (Continued)

"No," I answered, slowly, "but, before we go into that, let me understand exactly what these interests are Mr. Vaughan's estate, I understand is a large one."

Silva shrugged his shoulders

"I have understood so, he said but I know nothing about it, beyond what Mr. Vaughan himself told me

"What was that?"

"That it was his intention to give this place as a monastery for the study of our religion, and to endow it."

"Did he mention the amount of the endowment?"

"He asked me, not long ago if $1,000,000 would be sufficient.'

"Had he drawn up a deed of gift?"

"I do not know."

"Or made a will?"

Again Silva shrugged indifferently to dicate that he was also ignorant on that point, and I turned to Miss Vaughan

"If there is a will, I asked, where would it probably be?"

"There is a safe here,' she said, "in which my father kept his papers of value," and she went to the wall and swung out a hinged section of shelving. The door of a safe appeared behind it.

I approached and looked at it, then tried the door, but it was locked

"To open this, we must know the combination," I said, "or else we shall have to get an expert."

"I know the combination" she broke in, "it is * * *"

But I stopped her

"My dear Miss Vaughan,' I laughed, "one doesn't go around proclaiming the combination of a safe How do you happen to know it?"

"My father often had me open the safe for him."

"Does anyone else know it?"

"I do not think so."

"Well, suppose we see what is in the safe," I suggested, and, as she knelt before it, turned away I, at least, did not wish to know the combination. That Silva already knew it I accepted as certain

I heard the twirling of the knob, and a sharp click as the bolts were thrown back. Then I walked to Miss Vaughan's side and knelt beside her. The interior of the safe was divided into the usual compartments, one of them equipped with a Yale lock. The key was in the lock, and I turned it, swung the little door open, and drew out the drawer which lay behind it

"If there is a will, it is probably here," I said "let us see,' and I carried the drawer over to the light.

Miss Vaughan followed me, but Silva had sunk back into his chair, and was staring abstractedly through the open door out into the darkness, as though our proceedings interested him not at all. Then, as I looked into the drawer, I gave a little gasp of astonishment, for it was almost filled with packets of bills. There were five of them neatly sealed in wrappers of the National City bank, and each endorsed to contain $10,000.

"Why did your father require all this money?" I asked, but Miss Vaughan shook her head.

"He always kept money there," she said, "though I never knew the amount."

I glanced at the yogi, but his revery remained unbroken. Then I laid the packets on the table and dipped deeper into the drawer. There were two bank books, some memoranda of securities, a small cash book, and, at the very bottom, an unsealed envelope endorsed "Last will and testament of Worthington Vaughan."

"Here we are," I said, took it out, and replaced the rest of the contents. "Shall we read it now?"

"Yes, I should like to read it," she answered quietly.

The document was a short one It had evidently been drawn by Vaughan himself, for it was written simply and without legal phrases. It had been witnessed by Henry and Katherine Schneider, and was dated only a week previously—but three days before the murder.

"Who are these witnesses?" I asked.

"They are the cook and the gardener."

"Do you recognize your father's writing?"

"Oh, yes, there can be no question as to that."

It was a peculiar writing, and a very characteristic one; not easy to read until one grew accustomed to it But at the end of a few minutes I had mastered it. The provisions of the will were simple Elmhurst and the sum of $1,000,000 in negotiable securities were left absolutely to "my dear and revered master, Francisco Silva, priest of the third circle of Siva, and Yogi, of the ninth degree, to whom I owe my soul's salvation," the bequest to be used for the purpose of founding a monastery for the study of the doctrines of Saivaism, and as an asylum for all true believers. The remainder of his estate was left absolutely to his daughter, to dispose of as she saw fit. "It is, however, my earnest wish," the will concluded, "that my daughter Marjorie should enter upon the way, and accept the high destiny which the master offers her as a priestess of our great Lord. May the all seeing One guide her steps aright!"

There was a moment's silence as I finished; then I glanced at Miss Vaughan. Her eyes were fixed; her face was rapt and shining.

She felt my gaze upon her, and turned to face me.

"As your attorney, Miss Vaughan," I said, "it is my duty to advise you that this will, would probably not hold in law. I think it would be comparatively easy to convince any court that your father was not of sound mind when he drew it. You see, Senor Silva," I added, "that there is at once a conflict of interests."

But Silva shook his head with a little smile

"There is no conflict," he said. "If Miss Vaughan does not approve her father's wishes, they are as though they were not!"

"I do approve them!" the girl cried passionately, her hands against her heart. "I do approve them."

"All of them?" I asked.

She swung full upon me, her eyes aflame.

"Yes, all of them!" she cried. "Oh, Master, receive me!" and she flung herself on her knees by Silva's chair.

CHAPTER XXI

THE VISION IN THE CRYSTAL

Silva laid a hand tenderly upon the bowed head, as though in benediction but I could have sworn there was an holy triumph in his eyes. I caught but a glimpse of it, for he veiled them instantly and bowed his head, and his lips moved as if in prayer. The kneeling figure was quivering with sobs, I could hear them in her throat and my heart turned sick as I saw how she permitted his caressing touch Then suddenly she sprang erect, and without a glance at me hurried from the room.

There was silence for a moment, then Silva arose and faced me

You see how it is Mr Lester?" he said

Yes I answered dryly I see how it is

I refolded the will slipped it back into its envelop, restored it to the drawer made sure that all the packets were there too, replaced the drawer in the safe, closed the door twirled the knob, swung the shelves into place in front of it and finally my self control artially regained turned back to Silva

'Well I said, and my voice sounded very flat "let us sit down and talk it over

He wheeled his chair around to face me and sat down. I looked at him in silence for a moment The man was virile, dominant, there was in his aspect something impressive and compelling Small wonder this child of 19 had found herself unable to stand against him.

"I know what is in your mind,' he said at last. "But, after all it was her father's wish. That should weigh with you."

"Her father was mad

'I deny it He was very sane He found the way and he has set her feet upon it."

"What way?" I demanded "Where does it lead?"

"The way of life It leads to peace and happiness."

He uttered the words as with finality, but I shrugged them impatiently away

"Don't float off into your mysticism,' I said "Let us keep our feet on the earth You may be sincere or you may not it is impossible for me to say But I know this—it is not fair to that child to take her at her word She doesn't realize what she is doing. I don't know what it is you plan for her, but before you do anything, she must have a chance to find herself She must be taken out of this atmosphere into a healthier one, until she has rallied from the shock of her father's death, and emerged from the shadow of his influence She must have time to get back her self control Then, if she chooses to return well and good."

"To all your 'musts,' Mr Lester retorted Silva, "I can only say that I am willing I have not lifted a finger to detain her. But what if she will not go?"

Then she must be made to go

"Another 'must,' he rejoined lightly "I would remind you that she is mistress of her own actions. Neither you nor I can compel her to do anything she does not wish to do. It has been a great happiness to me that she has chosen as she has, it would have been a great sorrow to me had she decided differently But I should have acquiesced. Now it is for you to acquiesce. After all, what claim have you upon her?"

"I admit that I have no claim," I said, more calmly. "But there is one who has a claim, and to whom she is bound to listen."

"You refer, no doubt, to that misguided young man who is now in prison?"

"I refer to Frederic Swain, yes," I retorted hotly "It is true he is in prison. And how did he get there? By coming when she called him, by trying to assist her."

"Was it assisting her to kill her father?" queried Silva, and his lips were curled with scorn.

I paused a moment to make sure of my self-control, for it seemed to be slipping from me.

"Senor Silva," I said, at last, "how her father came to his death I do not know; but I do know that Swain had no hand in it."

"Yet he is is prison," he reminded me.

"Innocent men have been in prison before this. I will get him out"

"By what means?"

"By finding the real murderer'" I said, and looked at him with eyes which I know were bloodshot.

He returned my gaze steadily

"So you think I am the murderer'" he asked, quietly.

"I got a grip of myself— I saw that I had gone too far.

"I do not know what to think," I answered. "I am seeking light. In any event, Swain merits some consideration. Miss Vaughan should, at least, listen to what he has to say She promised to marry him."

"She has withdrawn that promise.'

"She has never said so."

"She has withdrawn it in choosing as she has chosen. They who serve in the temple of Siva turn their backs on marriage."

I put the words away from me with a gesture.

"That means nothing to me," I said. "I know nothing of the temple of Siva. I wish to know nothing, for mysticism repels me. But I do know that she gave her word; I do know that she loved him."

"Earthly love fades and passes," said the yogi, solemnly. "She has given her heart to the master," and he made his gesture of reverence.

There was anger in my eyes as I looked at him. How was one to reply to such jargon?

"I would point out to you, Senor Silva," I said, "that Miss Vaughan is not yet of legal age, and so not quite her own mistress."

"Does your law interfere in matters of the heart?" he inquired blandly; "or in matters of religion?"

"No," I said, flushing at his irony; "but the law demands that, until she is of age, she have a guardian to protect her interests. I shall ask that one be appointed at once."

"To that," said the yogi, "I have not the least objection. In fact, Mr. Lester, I do not know why you should tell me your plans. But, for some reason, you seem to regard me as an adversary I am not—I am no man's adversary. I object to nothing: I have no right to object to anything. I am simply Miss Vaughan's friend and well wisher, and seek her happiness. I should like to be your friend also."

And Swain's" I queried a little brutally

The friend of all men,' said the yogi, simply They are all my brothers. We are children of the same Great Spirit

I was silent for a moment Then I took Swain's letter from my pocket

"If you are sincere" I said "you can easily prove it. I have a letter here from Swain He gave it to me today, and I promised to give it to Miss Vaughan tonight"

Without a word he crossed to the bell and rang it. The maid answered.

"Mr Lester has a letter which you will give to your mistress,' he said.

'And you will wait for an answer," I added

The girl took the letter and went away. Silva sat down again, and when I glanced at him, I saw that his eyes were closed Five minutes passed, and the girl appeared again at the door

Miss Vaughan says there is no answer, sir," she said, and let the curtain fall into place again.

I made a gesture of despair. I felt that the game was lost.

After all, Mr. Lester," said Silva, kindly "what is this fate that you would prepare for her? You seek her marriage with a young man who, when I saw him appeared to me merely commonplace Admitting for the moment that he is innocent of this crime, you would, nevertheless, condemn her to an existence flat and savorless, differing in no essenital from that of the beasts of the field"

It is the existence of all normal people," I pointed out and the one which they are happiest in

"But Miss Vaughan would not be happy She has too great a soul that young man is not worthy of her You yourself have felt it'"

I could not deny it

Few men are worthy of a good woman' I said lamely

Faugh Good woman'' and he snapped his fingers. 'I abhor the words' They are simply cant' But a great woman, a woman of insight, of imagination—ah, for such a woman the way that I prepare is the only way. There she will find joy and inspiration there she will grow in knowledge there she will breathe the breath of life' Mr. Lester," and he leaned forward suddenly, "have you the courage to consult the sphere?"

"What do you mean?"

'You saw how I spent the White Night of Siva," and he made his gesture of reverence. 'Will you gaze for an hour on the crystal"

'For what purpose'"

"I do not know what may be revealed to you," he answered. "That is in the keeping of the Holy One. Perhaps nothing, perhaps much. Will you make the trial?"

His eyes were distended with excitement, his lips were trembling with eagerness.

'I feel that it will not be in vain " he added

There was something compelling in his gaze After all why not" I struggled to my feet

With a strange smile he held back the curtain, and I passed before him into the hall and up the stairs. As I hesitated at the top, he opened the door into the entry, and again my senses were assaulted by a heavy, numbing odor In the middle of the room the crystal sphere glowed softly.

'Take your place upon the couch, he said sit thus, with your legs crossed, and your hands folded before you. But first, listen to me There is in this no magic this sphere is merely a shell of crystal, which a small lamp burns. It serves ly to concentrate the mind, to enable it to forget the world and to turn in upon itself. The visions which will come to you, if any come, will come from within and not from without They will be such visions as the Holy One may will, and by the Holy One I mean that Spirit which pervades the universe, even to its farthest bound, the Spirit which is in all of us alike the Spirit which is in good men and in bad, men like you and me, and men like the one who slew my pupil. It is with this Spirit, if the Holy One so wills that you will commune, so that you will see no longer with the poor eyes of the body, but with eyes from which nothing is concealed, either in the past or in the future. Do you understand?"

"I think so," I murmured, unable to take my eyes from the glowing circle.

"Then to the Holy One I commend thee'" said the yogi, and sat down on the couch opposite me.

I felt that his eyes were upon me, but mine were upon the sphere, and in a moment I was no longer aware of him. I was aware only of the glowing circle, which seemed to widen and widen until the whole universe revolved within it. The sun and the moon and the stars were there, and I gazed at them as from a great distance. I saw stars glow and fade; I saw great nebulae condense to points of light, and disintegrate to dust; then, slowly, slowly, a single planet swung into viey, 1,000,000 miles away, at first, but growing clearer and more clear, until I was looking down upon its seas and continents; and suddenly, as it turned before me, I recognized the earth. Europe, Asia, the broad Pacific swung below me; then land again—America! I saw great mountains, broad plains, and mighty rivers.

Burial of a Tramp.

From the Spokane Cathedral Chimes.

A tramp about 30 years old was found dying near a Missouri haystack. He died without speaking and could not be identified. A subscription was taken for his burial, and new clothes and a coffin were bought The man was buried in the village cemetery without the services of a minister, without flowers or mourners, but with becoming reverence.

The following touching words were those which a local newspaper used in describing the incident:

"From whence he came we do not know Where he has gone we can only hope. Before departing he suffered and paid the price of whatever wrong he may have done here. We did for him the best we could for the sake of some mother, sister or brother in a land we know not where. He was found in rags, breathing his last. He is now, we trust, in the bosom of the great universal Father, clothed in garments of brightness. Whatever was given for him to do he has done, ill or well, we do not know.

"It may be some wife and child are waiting for him beyond the great stretch of plain and mountain. If they see this they will know that at the last their loved one fell into Christian hands and was laid in the sepulchre with due reverence and solemnity. By this they will know that had we found him sooner every effort would have been put forth to fan the ebbing spark of life into vigor. His body has received careful consideration of a Christian gentleman in a Christian land. To us he it not a tramp, but a member of the great brotherhood of man, our kinsman by blood. We have treated him as we would be treated should the turmoil of life's great battle cast us out on the edges of the field where the land is strange, the faces of the people unfamiliar. It may be you, it may be I, to whom this shall some day come. We pray to the good God that it may not be so, but we can not tell.

"Life is strange. There is no time between the raising of the tiny hands above the soft covering to the tottering of aching limbs at the edge of the tomb, where we can tell surely what the next hour will bring. No one is rich enough and great enough to say that such a fate as befell this poor wanderer will never be mine.

"The lesson" Here it is "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these ye have done it unto Me"

Peat drum is being tried in Chile as fuel for locomotives.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head, no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your druggist or at the store. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish tinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.—Adv.

Colds Make Backs Ache

MORE aching backs, more kidney troubles come in March, than in any other month. Slushy sidewalks, dampness, raw winds and sudden changes cause chills and colds. And chills or colds tend to hurt the kidneys. It is good sense to use a kidney remedy when recovering from a cold and at any time when suffering from a lame back, sharp pains when stooping or lifting, dizzy spells, irregular or annoying kidney action, and a run-down, nervous state.

Don't delay and take a chance of getting dropsy, gravel, Bright's disease or some other serious kidney disease. Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the best-recommended, special kidney remedy. All over the world grateful people frankly praise Doan's.

Here's What South Dakota People Says:

John S Miles, 613 W. Seventh Ave., Mitchell, S. D., says "Doan's Kidney Pills are certainly a fine kidney medicine. They have brought me relief and have also helped others of my family I have taken this remedy for a cold on my kidneys and it has always done me a world of good I only hope that other kidney sufferers will read my statement and be helped by my experience."

Mrs. I N Nelson Belleview Addition, Belle Fourche, S. D., says "I suffered a lot with my back. The kidney secretions bothered me and I was so languid I couldn't do my housework At times I was overcome with dizziness and whenever I caught cold, it settled on my kidneys, making the trouble worse After using Doan's Kidney Pills awhile I found relief and I have felt much better ever since."

BRETHREN, I'VE BEEN A GRE-AA-T SINNER! BUT I KNOW I'M GOING TO BE SAVED, FOR I'VE JOINED THE GLORIOUS ARMY OF SEED CORN TESTERS.

TEST THE SEED CORN

The first and most important duty of the hour for corn growers is the testing of seed for the coming planting. The significance of such work, to the individual corn grower and the world in general, is too well known and has been too thoroughly demonstrated to be any longer a topic for discussion. The ancient method of climbing into the crib at the eleventh hour and picking out a sufficient supply to satisfy the demands of the planter has been shelved. However it is entirely possible that not a few growers will do that very thing in this enlightened year of 1916, but it will not be because they think it is the best method For the corn-growing world has learned better

But spring is a season of numerous duties for the farmer When the lengthening days and warming sun of March begin to stir the sap of a new growing season he finds a thousand and one duties clamoring for immediate attention Too many of them, alas, are the aftermath of procrastination indulged in the closing days and weeks of the previous year, and they add in no unable to the confusion by e bowing out and usurping the rightful place of the duties of the hour.

Many a man is telling himself today that he will tackle the seed-corn matter tomorrow, certainly by the day following. And so, as tomorrow is always a day ahead, neglected day after day in the increasing labors of the season, it finally loses out altogether and the climb-into-the-crib route is chosen as a last resort.

"Now is the accepted time" for seed corn testing. If it can not be done today certainly its chances a month from today will be slender indeed. "Do it now." That is positively the best working maxim ever coined for the urge of loitering humanity anyway, and the wonder is that some bright individual did not think of it ages ago. Test it today and find out just where you stand. In the lingo of the day "find out where you're at."

And while about it make the test a thorough one It will call for a little more time, it is true, also a little more pains and a little more labor. But the end will justify it all, and there will also be the satisfaction of labor well done To be thorough it must be an ear test. For what shall it profit a man to discover, after having tested a hundred ears, that 90 per cent are fit for planting if he cannot spot and throw out the ten that have failed to make good?

There are seed corn testers and yet other seed corn testers, great and small, factory made and of humble home manufacture. But it is doubtful if any of them has anything on the "rag doll" tester, which any ten-year-old can make and handle. It is convenient, efficient and accurate with the additional quality of cheapness to recommend it.

Take stout muslin and cut or tear into strips ten inches wide and say five feet long, which is convenient for handling. Hem the edges neatly that everything may be in ship shape. You don't want any annoying raggedy ends interfering. With a heavy pencil draw a clean line through the middle of the strip from end to end. Then cross line it every three inches. Number each one of these squares. Moisten the strip and lay it out smoothly. We will suppose it has fifty numbered squares. Lay out fifty ears of corn to correspond to the numbered squares on the strip. Select six kernels from each ear and place them on the squares, number for number. When the strip is filled roll up carefully and smoothly, and tie snugly but not too tight with string or rubber bands. After all the strips have been filled and rolled place them in a bucket of water for from two to twelve hours. After the water has been poured off the pail can be turned upside down over the "dolls," or they can be packed loosely in a box and covered with sacking or some similar material.

At the end of five days the "dolls" will have their story ready for you By comparing the "doll" numbers with the corresponding ear numbers the germinative qualities of each and every ear will be shown in mute but convincing testimony. Examine the kernels carefully and critically. Be hard to please. It will be corn in your crib and money in your pocket later on. Retain for planting only those ears which show strong and enthusiastic germinative qualities. Be like the old darky preacher when he passed the hat for contributions; don't stand "fer no half-way doin's." An ear may possess sufficient germinating qualities to sprout in the "doll" and yet be so lacking in strength and stamina that it would be useless for planting. Throw away everything but the best. It will take nerve to do it, but you will be rewarded next fall in proportion to the rigidity of your test For there is only one kind to plant—the best.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Alvin Katter accompanied us to Fort Dodge last week to take in the Auto show. After looking over the large number of cars on exhibit, he could not find anything that suited him quite so well as the King "8", for which we have the agency, so he gave us an order for one and the same was unloaded at Belmond, Tuesday, Ben Katter driving it to Garner. What we want to impress on your mind is this, if you wish a King, Oakland or Auburn auto it will be necessary for you to give us your order in the very near future as these three factories have nearly enough orders now to keep them busy the balance of the season and if you lose out all you will be able to get is a "ford." We know just what we are talking about.

Why It Pays To Trade With Firms That Advertise

¶ Advertising creates sales. The modern business man knows this; he also knows he must depend upon many sales with a small profit rather than on a few with big profits The world knows the firm that advertises most can sell cheapest.

SOME THINGS TO CONSIDER

The average ear of corn has about 800 kernels, If we guess that an ear will grow and it doesn't grow it means 800 missing stalks, 266 missing hills, 310 yards missing in a corn row, on a basis of a hill of corn every 42 inches.

One bad ear planted means 11½ square rods of land wasted,

With land worth $150.00 per acre it means $11.00 worth of land lying idle.

It means wasted labor on one fourteenth of an acre.

It costs from one-tenth to one-fourth of a cent to test an ear of corn.

Is it not worth while to spend one-fourth of a cent in order to know and not guess that an ear of corn will grow?

By spending one-fourth of a cent in time now we may save wasted labor on 310 yards of a corn row next summer.

Testing corn saves labor. Guessing on corn wastes labor,

Test each ear. Do it now. Don't put it off

Home grown seed corn gives best results.

The best seed is always sold in the ear. The best is none to good.

KLEMME CREAMERY TOPS THE MARKET

The farmers should take notice what the Klemme creamery is paying for cream. For the last half of February the price for butterfat was 37c. This surely is a good price and should induce more farmers to milk more cows and get the profits of the prevailing high prices. Get in the game right and see how it will pay you in dollars and cents to dairy farm.

RURAL CREDIT TRICKSTERS

Farmers Warned to Be Cautious in Dealing With Them.

The department has recently received letters from a number of farmers who have subscribed for stock in rural-credit companies, including so-called co-operative companies which appear to have no real co-operative features.

In some of these letters the complaint is made that the agents selling the stock make misrepresentations as to when loans may be obtained by subscribers and that the companies later disclaim responsibility for the statements made by the agents. In a number of instances farmers seem to have gained the idea from the agent that they would be able to secure loans within a relatively short time, and express disappointment on realizing that they must wait for an indefinite period for the promised loan and go on making payments just the same on the stock which they have agreed to take.

Where farmers are confronted with a proposition of this character, they should first read the prospectus and the contract very carefully and make sure that they know exactly what these mean, especially the contract. If the contract is so worded that its meaning is not clear after a careful reading, this in itself should be reason enough for extra caution. The agent's explanation of the contract is not a part of the contract, nor is his promise that the company will do things not specified in the contract by any means sure to be recognized by the company.

Farmers ought, first, to find out what provision has been made for the protection of the interests of subscribers, either through responsible government supervision over the activities of the company, or in any other way, and if they are in doubt they should consult competent advisors with regard to the responsibility of the company before paying over, or agreeing to pay over, their own good money. Always, in the matter of subscription to stock in any kind of a company, they should exercise caution.

SECRETARY OF STATE PREPARES LISTS FOR FOR APRIL PRIMARY

Four Political Parties Will Participate—Rotation System on Names.

Des Moines, Ia., March 18 - W S. Allen, secretary of state, is preparing to certify the list of candidates filed for the presidential preference primary April 10, to the count auditors of the state

The form of the primary ballot and the rotation of names of candidates by counties now is being given attention The completed forms will be in the hands of the county authorities on or before next Tuesday, as required by law

Although the socialists did not file nomination papers for any candidates for president, vice president or delegate to the national convention, the party is entitled to participate in the Iowa primary While the matter is not definitely determined state officials yesterday indicated they will instruct the county auditors to prepare a ballot for the use of the socialists at the primary The ballot will be blank from top to bottom for there are no names to be printed on it Spaces will be provided however, so that names may be written in

The socialists by referendum vote decided upon a candidate for president But the decision was made too late to file affidavit of candidacy in Iowa for the April primary

The secretary of state will rotate on the ballot the names of the candidates for all officers where there is competition This includes the vice presidency, party national committeeman, delegates at large to national convention and alternates at large

The regular and insurgent democrats filed different slates for committeeman, delegates at large and for delegates in some of the districts. The republicans have two candidates for vice president, Elmer J Burkett, of Lincoln, and William Grant Webster, of Chicago In three districts there are more candidates running for delegate than there are places so that there may be interesting developments.

When the county auditors get the list of candidates, they in turn will rotate the names of the candidates for district delegate, in the various precincts

Four parties will participate in the presidential primary republican democratic progressive and socialist.

IOWA GUARDSMEN NOT NEEDED IN MEXICAN AFFAIR

Des Moines Ia March 17—Adj Gen Gov I Logan who offered the Iowa National guard to the war department to aid in capturing Villa, yesterday received the following telegram from General Mclver acting chief of the bureau of militia affairs

Your offer of troops is appreciated by the secretary of war but no additional troops are needed at this time

Gen H A Allen and members of the military advisory board arrived in Des Moines yesterday to consult with Adjutant General Logan today on Iowa military affairs The board will proceed to plan for the summer encampments and maneuvers as if the Mexican situation was not giving trouble The board probably will fix the dates for the encampment of each regiment, although several plans never tried before in Iowa will be discussed with the possibility of being adopted

Owing to the Mexican trouble, some of the military organizations of the state have begun to recruit up to the full strength Adjutant General Logan is issuing material to the organizations to treat the soldiers so as to make them immune from typhoid fever

General Allen stated yesterday that if the Iowa National guard is called for Mexican service it will be possible to mobilize the men in Des Moines within 12 hours. He says the guard has sufficient equipment to permit immediate advance to the front

SOAP CONCERN QUITS.

ASKS $7,000 DAMAGES FOR SAID MULE'S KICK

Centerville, Ia., March 18 —Seven thousand dollars is the figure Thomas Brinegar fixes upon as the amount it is worth to stand up and be kicked at by a mule when one is confined to a six-foot areaway with no chance for escape He has sued the Exline Coal company for that sum, because, as he alleges 'when said mule backed toward said plaintiff and commenced kicking by reason of the narrowness of the entry the plaintiff was unable to retire far enough to escape, with the result that after said plaintiff had retired about six feet he was unable to back farther and said mule's heels reached his person'

When 'said mule's" heels reached his person they caused damage that land Brinegar up for several months.

OLD CROOKED LINE MAY BECOME ELECTRIC INTERURBAN

Webster City, Ia., March 18—The Fort Dodge, Des Moines & Southern Interurban company bid in the Crooked Creek at the receiver's sale, held in this city yesterday, for $112,300 The line will be electrified and connected with the interurban at Fort Dodge.

It was also announced upon good authority that the interurban is planning an extension from Webster City to Ames which would give them a loop out of the latter town There were but three bidders for the Crooked Creek, and the bondholders, who hold $'16,000 in bonds against the line, did not even bid

There was some dissatisfaction because Receiver Sam McClure refused to permit open bidding Only sealed bids were received, and the road awarded to the highest bidder, without further opportunity of others to bid.

IOWA PAROLE BOARD IS DOING WHOLESALE BUSINESS

Des Moines, Ia., March 17.—Since January 1, 1916, the state board of parole has liberated 79 convicts. The Iowa prisons have been more crowded during the present winter than at any previous period More men were convicted and entered the Iowa penal institutions in the last six months than in any like period. Other states have had the same experience, it is said.

If the present rate of paroling men continues, the record for the year will be more than 365 paroles. Of the 79 convicts liberated since January 1, four were women

FORMER KINGSLEY BANKER IS KILLED IN ENGLAND

Des Moines, Ia., March 17 —Through the report of the death of a policy holder, an Iowa insurance company received the first word of the demise of a man well known in banking circles in Iowa. The report to the insurance company told of the death at Westorgate House, Aldingborne, Eng., of William W. Payne, for many years a banker at Kingsley. His death resulted from getting caught under a wall which he was pulling down.

The English press in reporting Mr. Payne's death described the former Iowan as "a gentleman of independent means." Then followed a romantic story of a penniless young Englishman coming to the United States to make his fortune, of his success and rise to wealth As he grew older, Mr. Payne longed for the fertile fields of his native land, and returned home to end his days in Britain He was working on his estate with his gardeners when the accident which caused his death occurred.

Mr. Payne's brother, Rudolph Payne, is president of the bank at Kingsley, Ia., in which his brother former was a heavy stockholder

LOSS OF STEAMER TUBANTIA ROUSES IRE OF HOLLAND

Belief That Great Liner Was Torpedoed Inflames Public —Von Tirpitz's Farewell Hotly Resented.

TALK OF GERMAN BREAK

Tired of Excuses, Papers Say —Country Demands Such Occurrences Cease—Loss of Life Unknown.

Amsterdam March 18 (via London). —The newest and finest steamship sailing under the Dutch flag, the Tubantia, of the Holland-Lloyd line, was sunk early yesterday, 30 miles off the Dutch coast Although it is not positively established whether the sinking was due to a mine or a torpedo, there is a singular unanimity on the part of those who were on board in attributing it to a submarine act

The members of the crew base their belief in this regard chiefly on the intense violence of the explosion, and that it occurred amidship.

The vessel was bound from Amsterdam to South American ports, carrying a crew of 294 and 82 passengers, the latter mostly neutrals, including, it is said, three Americans The ship bore the usual identification marks of her neutral character, including an illuminated name and flag

Amounts to Same Thing.

The disaster has created a profound sensation throughout Holland. The press comments reflect anger and indignation The Nieuw Rotterdamsche Courant says

"Between being torpedoed and being mined, the only difference which exists is that known in criminal law between intention and conditional intention. If the ship was torpedoed, there was absolute intention, or ignorance, or neglect equivalent to intention. The submarine commander must have known, when he gave the command to fire that the ship was the Tubantia

"No words can be found to qualify this crime no excuse can be accepted"

It is now believed there was a small number of lives lost in the sinking of the Tubantia either in the explosion or in an accident which attended the launching of a life boat The steamer remained afloat several hours

No Panic on Steamer.

According to all reports there was no panic The boats were launched in their appointed order and the passengers were all taken off The rescue work was difficult owing to the darkness and the heavy mist and the rough sea

The captain and part of the crew remained on the gradually sinking ship for some time the wireless operator keeping up the work of guiding Dutch vessels to the rescue

The captain was on the vessel for two hours after she was struck and was the last to leave. The rescuing vessels took the passengers and crew to Fishing, Amsterdam and the Hook.

The Hague March 17, (via London). —The loss of one of Holland's finest steamships has stirred the country deeply The sinking of the Tubantia, valued at $1 600,000 and insured for $1,240,000, means loss of valuable cargo space not easily replaceable

Public Sentiment Roused.

The opinion, accredited to the captain, that the Tubantia was torpedoed, adds to the feeling of resentment aroused by the disaster The Vaderland calls attention to the fact that the vessel was sunk at almost the same time that announcement was made of the resignation of Admiral Von Tirpitz as German minister of marine and of the statement that his successor would continue submarine warfare without abatement

This newspaper refers to the cases of the Dutch steamers, Katwyk, Artemis and Bandoeng, sunk or damaged as a result of German "mistakes," and says that if the Tubantia was sunk by a German submarine there will be increasing danger that Germany, against her wishes, may find herself in conflict with neutral states on account of the conduct of her submarine commanders The Vaderland voices the hope that the change in leadership of the German marine ministry will be utilized as an opportunity for issuing more binding rules to submarine commanders.

Von Tirpitz' Farewell.

The Nieuwe Courant, says:

"Is this Von Tirpitz' farewell greeting to friendly Holland? Germany ought to be ashamed at this fresh proof that her admiralty has not her submarine commanders properly in hand They sink neutral merchantmen and are reprimanded and punished, yet, on the next occasion flout their government's measures and promises and fire away blindly."

A stronger note is sounded by the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant, which says that no matter whether the Tubantia was sunk by a torpedo, or a mine, the country demands that such occurences cease It declares the government must make the strongest representations to Berlin, and continues:

"The Tubantia was not a mere tramp. She was the pride of our mercantile marine. Every responsible naval commander would know what she was and whither she was bound. No account of the disaster mentions a warning of any kind There is no excuse. No words can qualify this misdeed, which stultifies all German assurances and promises.

Between Devil and Deep Sea.

"We have nothing to do with officers' mistakes The German admiralty is responsible, and the demand must be made that definite instructions be given to the German navy to render it certain that such mistakes will not arise in the future."

This newspaper says Holland is unfortunately placed between one belligerent. "who professedly fights for the interests of small nations, but holds up our ships, seizes what she likes and paralyzes our imports and industries," and another belligerent, who, "while contending for the so-called freedom of the seas, sinks our ships on sight, without notice."

SCHILLING IS IDENTIFIED.

Washington, March 17.—The state department today received unofficial advices that Richard Schilling, referred to in foreign news dispatches as an American consul and who was saved with his wife and daughter when the Tubantia sank is a New York life insurance man

NEBRASKANS IN SARCASTIC VEIN

Presidential Filings for Emperor Wilhelm and King George.

Lincoln, Neb. March 18.—If the secretary of state in Nebraska gives recognition to two federal filings made for presidential candidates the voters can make direct choice between Emperor Wilhelm and King George.

Under the Nebraska law, filings for presidential candidates can be made with a petition of 25 names. Recently some sarcastically disposed persons submitted a filing for William Hohenzollern, emperor of Germany

This sarcastic outbreak was met yesterday by the presentation of a formal filing for King George, of England

It is probable that the secretary of state will take judicial notice of the ineligibility of both candidates and will decline to accept the filings.

In the meantime politicians generally are coming to a realization that the anti-German propagandas and the anti-England propagandas are not scientific demonstrations of American neutrality

APPLY BRAKES TO GERMAN FINANCES

Imperial Treasurer Shows Conditions Are Still Sound, But That Rigid Economy Is Necessary.

Berlin (wireless to Sayville), March 18—Dr Karl Helferich of the imperial treasury introduced in the reichstag yesterday the budget proposals and bills for new war taxes Dr Helferich insisted upon the necessity for rigid economy in framing the budget, saying:

"We shall put on the brakes wherever we can"

Dr Helferich said it was essential to make adequate provisions for war requirements in the way of loans

"This is not red tape" he said "It is nothing but duty and foresight for a coming day"

The secretary pointed out that an increase in revenue by taxation was necessary although he said every German expected peace would bring financial advantages. After stating that war expenses were not included in the budget he referred to the fact that the influence of the war was noticeable in the increase of interest on the public debt which was 1,268,000 000 marks last year, and is now 2,303,000,000 marks.

New Taxes Necessary.

He said the budget showed a deficit of 480,000,000 marks, which was to be covered by new war taxes

Dr Helferich, took exception to statements that he had said no new taxes were contemplated during the war. As a matter of fact he had said new taxes should be avoided as long as the regular budget, together with requirements for providing for the public debt, balanced without them The secretary who replied to criticisms that he had shown a lack of originality in devising the new taxes, declaring he cared more for money than originality

Dr. Helferich urged the reichstag to expedite the financial legislation, saying that the new taxes would provide 10,000,000 marks each week for carrying on the war

The secretary compared the financial resources of Germany as exhibited during the war with those of her enemies. He said France, up to the present, had not raised even 10,000,000 marks in war loans, and that England had raised between 18,000,000,000 and 19,000,000,000 marks, of which 15,000,000,000 was in the form of a short term floating debt. Germany, he said, had raised 27,000,000,000 marks and all the loans had been consolidated. At the same time, the cost of the war in January and February fell below 2,000,000,000 marks.

Savings Show Increase.

German savings banks, the secretary continued, now have deposits 500,000,000 marks in excess of 1914, in addition to which 4,500,000,000 marks has been withdraw from the banks for war loan investments.

Germany's enemies, Dr Helferich asserted, are carrying on a campaign of defamation, which extends even into this country, where paid agents spread rumors for the purpose of impairing the success of war loans.

The secretary reminded the reichstag of the battle now in progress at Verdun, saying

"Our troops have the right to expect that we at home prove worthy of them and also that everyone shall contribute as he is able in the effort to bring about victory and peace"

ARMY BILL TO BE RUSHED IN HOUSE

Debate Limited to Ten Hours —Measure Expected to Be Put on Final Passage Tomorrow.

Washington D. C., March 18.—Under a rule limiting general debate to 10 hours, the House today began considering the army bill—the most extensive proposal for increasing the military establishment ever laid before it in peace times If possible a final vote will be reached tomorrow night.

Chairman Hay, of the military committee, and Representative Kahn, ranking republican member, apportioned the 10 hours equally. So far as is known no committee member will favor reduction of the provisions for the regular army or the national guard although several are known to favor a larger standing army

Speaker Clark, who will deliver an address in support of the measure, surrendered the chair to Representative Garrett, of Tennessee, at the beginning of the debate

Gordon Leads Off.

Representative Gordon, democrat, of Ohio, led off for the bill. He had been listed as opposing preparedness, but explained today that his opposition was only to a great standing army

Representative Hay told the House the fact that the committee had reached a unanimous report on the bill indicated the feeling of the country on the vital subject of preparedness

In fixing 140 000 men as the strength of the army he said, the committee had gone to what war department officials had testified was the limit of peace time recruitment A force of 250,000 regulars would mean compulsory service to which the country was opposed and an annual expenditure of $750 000 000 for the army alone, he said.

"Of course" Mr Hay said "if it came to war, congress would go any extent"

Applause greeted the statement.

Representative Kahn interrupted to point out that while the bill provided for a peace strength of 140,000 fighting men, in the imminence of war the president could bring it up to more than 170,000, exclusive of auxiliary troops

Regarded as Makeshift.

Representative Hull, of the Second district, who is on the House military committee, spoke late today on the army bill. Mr Hull as a member of the military committee supported the bill in a general way The two features of it which he approved especially are the utilizaton of the national guard and the fact a provision has been put in for an investigation of government manufacture of munitions.

While it is expected the measure will pass the House it is widely regarded as a makeshift Good reasons exists for the belief the administration is opposed to it, and that the new secretary of war, Newton D Baker, looks on the House measure as unsatisfactory, the administration is understood to consider the Senate bill preferable

Senate Bill Ready.

While the House was debating the army bill today, the final draft of the Senate army bill was favorably reported by Chairman Chamberlain

Senator McCumber, republican of North Dakota, made a speech urging the country not to be swayed from a middle course between war hysteria and utter defenselessness. He contended the United States was in less danger of attack than ever before

"Congress, in its growing servility," he said, "has allowed its function to be usurped by the executive until it has become the tool to convert presidential programs into law. Congress should be the judge of the necessity and of the propriety of changing our historical attitude."

"I do not believe," Mr. Hay said, "that the two-year enlistment would be a good thing. Half the time the army would be composed largely of 'half-baked' recruits. Those who advocate the short term enlistment also desire that there be no reenlistment: Few men would enlist if they knew there was no future and the backbone of the army today is the noncommissioned officer"

The proposed increase in the army, he explained, could be accomplished through a four-year enlistment, as proposed by the bill.

Explains Guard Feature.

Mr. Hay then turned to a general explanation of the plan to federalize the national guard He contended that congress had full constitutional power to do it.

"We provide," he said, "that the national guard can be mobilized at once in time of war without the delay and confusion of Spanish war days. I do not believe that any question will arise as to the powers of congress over the militia But, if it does arise, the bill will stand the test even before the supreme court The president will have the power to send the guard anywhere he can send the regular army."

GOVERNOR OF UTAH GETS DEATH THREAT

Jack of Spades, Warning Symbol, Sent to Spry By Mysterious "K O D."

Salt Lake City, Utah, March 18.—The Jack of Spades the death warning of the "K O D.," a mysterious organization which has been threatening the life of Gov William Spry, has been received at the office of Governor Spry The governor is in New York When his secretary, John K Hardy, opened an envelope addressed to the governor, the Jack of Spades fell out

Six months ago Governor Spry received among the thousands of letters threatening him with death in the event of the execution of Joseph Hillstrom, the I W W leader, several which were signed "K O D" In each of these letters this statement was made

"When you receive the Jack of Spades, you will know that your time has come Your death will follow"

Following the execution of Hillstrom the threatening letters ceased coming to the governor until about two weeks ago when he began to receive a number of particularly vicious letters from all parts of the United States Following this came the Jack of Spades The envelope containing this dire card was mailed in Salt Lake

In the governor's mail have come from Chicago a number of postcards containing a picture of the body of Hillstrom, showing the wounds made by the Utah firing squad which executed Hillstrom These postcards bear the inscription

"Murdered by the authorities of Utah We never forget"

The governor's office is informed that thousands of these postcards have been mailed from Chicago to all parts of the country

BRITISH HUSBANDS FIGHT COMPULSION

Objection to Enforced Military Service Causes Heated Argument In Parliament— Army Plans Upset.

London, March 18—It was well past 1 o'clock this morning when the house of commons adjourned after a protracted debate, nominally on army estimates, but really covering a wide range of topics.

There were many heated passages regarding the problem of calling out married men. Sir John A. Simon, ex-secretary for home affairs, among others, appeared as the champion of the married men, but his speech met with sharp criticism from other champions of the married men, owing to his argument that there was danger of over-recruiting

It was announced in the lobby of the house of commons that a conference would be held Saturday at the war office between the higher military authorities and the recruiting commanders, when the whole requirements of the army for men will be fully discussed and explained

It is stated that the widespread agitation on the part of the married men had already interfered somewhat with the war office arrangements, but there is little doubt that the calling up of further groups of married men has been only briefly postponed

Among the proposals now being considered is that of extending the military age for single men to 45 years There is also a widespread feeling that the compulsion act should be extended to the married men as a considerable part of the ill feeling among married men now being called is due to the fact that those who voluntarily enrolled under the Derby scheme must go into the army, while married men who declined invitations to enroll are allowed to continue in their civil occupations.

OWEN REVIEWS WORK OF PARTY IN POWER

Easier to Go to War Than to Keep Out, He Says—Praises Legislative Record.

Concord, N. H., March 18.—A detailed eulogy of the work of the executive and legislative branches of the federal government under democratic control was delivered by United States Senator Robert Owen, of Oklahoma, at a Jackson day dinner of the New New Hampshire democrats here last night. Senator Owen took up the important measures passed by congress since the inauguration of President Wilson, summarizing his conclusions as follows

"All of these bills—the tariff bill, the federal reserve act, the Clayton anti-trust bill, the federal trade commission bill, the seamen's act—have had one purpose—the promotion of common good, the abatement of monopoly, the betterment of mankind, the lowering of the cost of living and the greater happiness of all our people."

Senator Owen praised the work of the various executive departments continuing

"Perhaps the greatest accomplishment, the one for which our people are more deeply grateful than any other, is that the president has kept us out of war and in a condition of profound peace while all the world besides seems torn with war or internal violence. Under existing provocations the president has, nevertheless, used his great powers and his influence against any act that would involve the people of the United States in war either with the weakest of our neighbor nations or with the strongest nations of the world, such as Great Britain and Germany, both of whom, because of excitement and stress of a life and death struggle, have disregarded in various ways the international law and our legal rights. An administration less wise and less thoughtful might easily have been swept into war with Mexico, with Germany and Austria or with Great Britain and its allies."

AMERICAN TROOPS RAPIDLY NEARING VILLA STRONGHOLD

Pershing's Forces May Come In Contact With Bandits at Any Time Now, El Paso Is Informed.

MANY RUMORS ARE AFLOAT

Most of Them Believed to Be Unfounded and Due to Activity of Sympathizers of Outlaw Gang.

Douglas, Ariz., March 18 Carranza troops of Gen P Elias Calles, military governor of Sonora, were making every effort today to cooperate with the soldiers composing the punitive expedition from the United States in the pursuit of Francisco Villa according to reports received here

San Antonio, Tex March 18—The American expeditionary force has had no casualties and has had no clashes with Villistas, to date, according to reports received today at Fort Sam Houston There has been no instances of sniping reported

Washington D. C, March 18.—Very satisfactory assurance regarding the attitude of the Carranza government toward the entrance of American troops into Mexico were conveyed to the state department today by Consul Silliman, who is with General Carranza. He reported no trouble from the Carranza forces was to be expected

El Paso, Tex., March 18—Expectation along the border was keyed to its highest pitch today by the general belief that before nightfall the advance guard of the American expeditionary force would have entered Villa territory in the mountains of Casas Grandes region of Mexico.

While the censorship prevented any official news of the whereabouts of the American column reports brought by Americans arriving from the interior coupled with the calculations of men thoroughly familiar with the territory over which the expeditionary force was passing made it reasonably certain that the United States soldiers must be close to the district where Villa is believed to exercise his greatest influence and have the largest numbers of sympathizers.

Battle May Be Near.

With the possibility that actual fighting with the Villistas might begin at any moment, interest was redoubled in every item of intelligence that threw any light on the attitude of the Carranza adherents, and more especially on that of the five detachments of Carranza troops who are declared by the officials of the de facto government to be operating against Villa

Americans Are Alarmed.

Rapidly growing uneasiness among Americans throughout Mexico, especially in the north and west was evidenced today by reports from various sections that United States citizens were either on their way to the border or were preparing to leave

At practically every point of entry along the northern and northwestern front Americans arrived today from the interior, but in the majority of instances they said they were leaving Mexico as a matter of precaution and not because of any overt acts of hostility against them

The most significant report was received from Durango, where the American vice consul advised his wife and child be sent out of the country. This followed closely on the arrival last night on the border of the American consul from Torreon with a large number of Americans.

Bring Alarming Stories.

Americans arriving here brought numerous disquieting stories about the attitude of the Mexicans in the interior especially in Chihuahua, Durango and Coahuila, but invariably they told these stories privately and when asked to make a statement for publication, insisted that everything was quiet in the section from which they came. They explained the contradiction by saying that they expected to return to Mexico when things became more settled and they did not wish to say anything which might arouse resentment of the Mexicans. An American who arrived today from the City of Chihuahua, reported that all was quiet there yesterday

Andreas Garcia, the Carranza consul here, who is recognized as the closest man to the first chief on the border, refused to make any definite statement as to what cooperation the American officers might expect from the Mexican authorities

It was suggested to him that the Carranza forces could render valuable aid in supplying guides, aiding in the obtaining of forage and in similar directions

"The Americans have guides of their own," he said, "who, I am sure, are as good as any we could give them. I feel equally certain that they have better maps than any we have. The soldiers of General Carranza are marching against Villa; the American soldiers are doing the same That seems to me to be cooperation and it is all I have to say."

Rumors Mostly Groundless.

Rumors of disaffection and revolt among the Carranza troops are plentiful here, as there are people to spread them, but all reliable information is to the effect that thus far, at least, the first chief and his lieutenants have maintained strict order. There seems to be no question but that there are a considerable number of the Mexican people that bitterly resent the presence of the American forces in their country, but as far as is known they have shown their hostility by no overt act.

The 12th Mexican suspected of Villista activities was arrested here last night and placed with the 11 other former generals and "cabinet ministers" of Villa in jail. Villista maneuvers in El Paso seem to be mainly concerned with the dissimination of sensational reports reflecting upon the Carranzistas and intended to provoke ill feeling between them and the Americans.

REPORTED KAISER WANTS TO CHANCE BIG NAVY BATTLE

Ouster of Von Tirpitz Said to Have Been Partly Due to Opposition to Take Chance In Sea Battle.

CHANCELLOR MAY ALSO GO

No Indiscriminate Use of Submarines Will Be Countenanced By Emperor, Berlin States.

London, March 18.—Dr Von Bethmann-Hollweg the imperial chancellor may follow Admiral Von Tirpitz into retirement, according to a dispatch from Geneva to the Daily Express, quoting Berlin reports which also state that Prince Bernhard Von Buelow the former chancellor, will soon leave Lucerne for Berlin

Paris March 18.—The retirement of Admiral von Tirpitz is considered in French official circles according to the Paris newspapers to be due to the fact that he has opposed the coming out of the German fleet, while Emperor William desires to see it engage the British naval forces. The conclusion is consequently drawn that a change may be looked for in the German naval policy and that the recent appearance of German warships in the North sea is a sign that preparations are being made for early action by the high sea fleet.

GREAT SEA BATTLE NEAR.

London, March 18.—The Rotterdam correspondent of the Daily Mail says he can confirm the report that the German fleet is preparing to fight the British fleet Discussing the reasons for the German decision to accept battle after refusing it for 19 months, the correspondent says

"Without acting on the theory that if she loses the war Germany will lose her fleet, German statesmen take the view that if the fleet is lost its destruction must first cost the enemy enormous sacrifices.

"'No German ship shall surrender,' is the unwritten order

Aim Deadly Blow at Britain.

"But the Germans will not sacrifice their fleet merely for the sake of national sentiment. They will not send their ships to destruction merely to save themselves the humiliation of seeing them towed out of the Kiel canal. The German naval staff is about to challenge Great Britain's naval supremacy because they think they can deal that supremacy a severe if not a deadly blow

"The increasing effect of the blockade, internal unrest, and the military menace of the Allies undoubtedly have had an influence on the naval policy but have not decided that policy, only stimulated it."

Germans Prepare Great Effort.

After detailed reference to the confidence of the Germans in their fleet's future achievements the correspondent says

"Putting aside sensational press articles and idle cafe chatter it is a fact that in the near future our navy will achieve its great desire and the most terrible sea fight in history will bring the end of the war in sight Germany is preparing a last desperate throw in which she will employ all her resources on land, sea and air. Zeppelins are being built with feverish speed The German plan is to forestall the Allies and strike before our men, guns and munitions have achieved a superiority that must insure victory"

VON TIRPITZ OUSTER MEANS U BOATS WON'T RUN AMUCK

Berlin, (via London), March 18—German officials repeat the statement that submarine warfare will go on in the limits set by the German memorandum to neutral powers of last month, but that the demands of those who wished to see the indiscriminate torpedoing of "whatever comes in front of the torpedo tubes," to use the expression of one of those who advocates this policy, will not be fulfilled.

This is also the deduction which those acquainted with the situation declare can be drawn from the resignation of Admiral Von Tirpitz which was foreshadowed a few days ago by the reports of his illness. The conclusion is said to be strengthened by the fact that Admiral Von Capelle has been chosen as the new minister He is known merely as an excellent administrative officer, not having had ship command in the last 25 years During this period he has been at the admiralty, first as adviser on military affairs, then in the budget departments and finally as head of the administrative department. He was looked on as the right hand man of Admiral Von Tirpitz until his retirement last November

The Tages Zeitung one of the strongest supporters of Admiral Von Tirpitz, says that it is shaken by the news of the admiral's resignation and does not feel itself in a condition to comment thereon"

The Morgen Post says

"There will be universal regret that circumstances made the retirement of the grand admiral necessary The reasons for this and the inner relations of affairs with one another cannot now be discussed, but it will be regretted that there was no other way out"

All the newspaper pay high compliment to the career of Admiral Von Tirpitz.

WASHINGTON MOST WASTEFUL

Leads all American Cities in Throwing Away Food

Washington, D. C.—The federal government conducts many kinds of investigations, but Washington was hardly prepared to learn that United States agents had been digging into the garbage dumps of the country.

As a result of this latest inquiry, the department of agriculture announces that Washington is the most wasteful city in the United States. Careful examinations of the contents of garbage cans were made with a view to determine what percentage of food products daily thrown away might have been put to wholesome use had housewives of the various cities conducted their establishments more economically.

A complete report on the Federal Government's investigation will be published soon.

SAGE TEA BEAUTIFIES AND DARKENS HAIR

Don't Stay Gray! It Darkens So Naturally that Nobody can Tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

SALTS IF BACKACHY AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

With Electric Starter and Electric Lights

Four Inch Tires

HERE is another Overland Model. A brand new car at a brand new price. Many people prefer a car with the advantages of the larger and higher priced cars but that is smaller, lighter and more economical to run.

Model 75 is a comfortable, family car with virtually all the advantages of the very large cars at a price which is well within your reach.

The body is the latest full streamline design with a one-piece cowl.

It is handsomely finished in solid black with bright nickel and polished aluminum fittings.

Five adults can ride comfortably.

The tires are four inch all around because we believe in the advantage of large tires. They insure greater mileage and comfort than can be obtained from the smaller size used on other cars of similar specifications.

The motor is four-cylinder, long stroke bloc type, having a 3¼-inch bore and 5-inch stroke. Horsepower is 20-25. It is of the most modern design.

It has high-tension magneto ignition. This is the kind used on the most expensive cars.

The electric starting and lighting system is one of the most efficient on the market. It is of the two-unit type.

The electric switches are conveniently located on the steering column. This is the same arrangement used on the highest priced cars.

It has the easy working Overland clutch which any woman can operate. The pedals are adjustable for reach. The steering wheel is large and turns easily. The brakes are large and powerful.

The rear springs are the famous cantilever type. These are probably the easiest riding and most shock absorbing springs ever designed. With these springs riding comfort is insured.

It has a one-man mohair top.

In short, there is everything that makes this car up-to-date and comparable with many cars costing considerably more money.

You will be delighted when you see it. And when you ride in it you'll know instantly that this is your ideal of a modern automobile at your idea of a moderate price.

Other Overland models are—Model 83 five-passenger touring car the famous Overland Six seven-passenger touring car $1145. All prices being f. o. b. Toledo.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Brust Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a cup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure it, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system.

Try it the next time you suffer from a cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

RUB BACKACHE AND LUMBAGO RIGHT OUT

When your back is sore and lame or lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism has you stiffened up, don't suffer! Get a 25 cent bottle of old, honest "St. Jacobs Oil" at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub it right on the pain or ache, and by the time you count fifty, the soreness and lameness is gone.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin.

Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so promptly!

Physicians the world over recommend the inside bath, claiming this is of vastly more importance than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing ill health, while the pores in the ten yards of bowels do.

Men and women are urged to drink each morning, before breakfast, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of helping to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible material, poisons, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Just as soap and hot water cleanse and freshen the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the eliminative organs.

Those who wake up with bad breath, coated tongue, nasty taste or have a dull, aching head, sallow complexion, acid stomach; others who are subject to bilious attacks or constipation, should obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store. This will cost very little but is sufficient to demonstrate the value of inside bathing. Those who continue it each morning are assured of pronounced results, both in regard to health and appearance.

Calls for Farm Helpers

There is a very urgent call for farm workers this Spring for the Province of Manitoba Canada Owing to the keen demand for all kinds of foodstuffs caused by the war together with the enlistment of so many thousands of our young men, the farmers of Manitoba find themselves face to face with a serious labor shortage. In order to encourage farmers' sons and other farm workers from the United States to answer to this call the Railway Companies are offering reduced rates to all such passengers from all points on the International boundary line northward, going West in Canada. This will enable anyone who wishes to see Western Canada to do so at a very small cost and will permit inspection at first hand of the thousands of acres of cheap land which are still available

The scale of wages for experienced men will run from $25.00 to $45.00 per month according to experience, and it is estimated that from 3,000 to 3,500 such men are needed In order to allay any apprehension on the question, it may be asserted that absolutely no military obligation of whatever sort is imposed upon anyone coming into or living in Canada

BATTLEFIELD VISIONS.

Sikh Soldiers See Their St. George."

By St Nihal Singh in the London Spectator

Many Sikh officers and soldiers who have taken part in recent battles relate that they have seen their great spiritual leader on the battlefield urging them on to charge the foe. These accounts are by no means the Indianized versions of the tales told about St. George appearing before the British troops at Mons Many of the Sikhs who tell of their experiences do not know a word of English, and never heard that their British comrades had seen visions of their patron saint The statements of the Sikhs, therefore, refer to an experience all their own.

According to one account, Guru Govind Singh—who lived in the 17th century and who infused the martial spirit into the Sikhs—appeared on the battlefield riding a beautiful white charger with a long, flowing tail He wore a resplendent aigrette fastened to his turban which waved above his head like the "white plums" of Navarre, a veritable oriflamme to the followers It may be recalled that the Guru is invariably depicted in Sikh annals and shown in old paintings riding a white horse and wearing a large aigrette One of the favorite names by which Sikhs of this age rememoer Guru Govind Singh is "He with the aigrette"

According to a second version "the photo of Guru Govind Singh," was the only thing that the Sikhs advancing in a bayonet charge, saw to their "right, left and front" The words quoted are from the account given by Subadar (Indian Major) Sardar Narain Singh of the Fourteenth Sikhs who received six bullet wounds while engaged in action in Gallipoli from which he has recently recovered He says that the vision of Guru Govind Singh appeared before the Sikh soldiers just as the bugle sounded "March," and they brandished their bayonets. He declares that he cannot explain in words

"The spirit this holy sight infused in us. It emboldened us to march on, piercing through the abdomen of the enemy, unmindful of the havoc being wrought by the horrid machine gun We shouted 'Sat Eri Akal' (God is timeless'—the battle cry of the Sikhs), and chanted the Shabads (hymns) of Halla (attack), as if ours was a nuptial procession. Those among us who fell wounded or dead we minded never as the only thought before us was devotion to the Guru who was so omnipresent in the march, and adherence to government"

The 249th anniversary of Guru Govind Singh's birth occurred less than a week ago, and was celebrated by the Sikhs at the depot for wounded Indians at Milford-on-Sea, as, indeed it is celebrated every year by the Sikhs wherever they may be The celebration was largely organized by Jemadar (Indian lieutenant) Arjan Singh who, in his own case shows how truly the Sighs believe that the founders of their religion gave India to the British and are ready to make any sacrifice in order to strengthen the British cause. When the hostilities commenced Arjan Singh was in Argentina, engaged on a plantation He immediately gave up his position in order to come to Europe to rejoin the Sikh regiment in which he had formerly served and which had been ordered to France The ship which brought him to Liverpool carried on board a large number of Britons who were hurrying home to join the colors Arjan Singh at their request, drilled them throughout the voyage

YUAN BUILDING GREAT ARMY CAMP AT CAPITAL

Peking Present Yuan Shi-kai emperor-elect is adding [illegible] army camp at Pao-ting of his native province Hopei while crushing his enemies [illegible] sion

Chances are [illegible] opins this great [illegible] means of strengthening [illegible] the monarchy and desires [illegible] as a place of refuge after [illegible] of no local importance.

The great camp is three miles [illegible] the city of Honan-fu, and [illegible] the river It covers [illegible] of land. Two thousand men [illegible] work erecting walls and barracks in preparation for the accommodation soldiers. The work has commenced [illegible] five months, but is only about one [illegible] completed

Army officials have stated that the new camp is to shelter 10,000 troops but newspapers, out of sympathy for the administration say the camp is to accommodate 30,000 men

The barracks are arranged with streets 30 feet wide between them and at intervals there are kitchens and store houses Open spaces are left in various parts of the camp, in which groups of 500 men may drill In addition, there is a great drill ground provided for larger units

Honan-fu is a strategic position of great importance. It is located on the Lo river, in the most important pass affording easy communications between the east and west It is connected by rail with the line between Hankow and Peking and projected railways will give it connections far to the east and west

Consequently, Honan-fu will be a natural place from which to distribute troops into any part of northern China It is about half way between the capital and Hankow, the commercial metropolis of Central China location on the Yangtsze river

Unfriendly papers are all speculating as to whether Yuan Shi-kai intends to make Honan-fu the [illegible] capital of China For over 1,000 years the ancient city was the site of the dragon throne, and it is rich in tradition. Formerly Honan-fu was called Lohyang, and it was the capital of China under the Chow dynasty from 770 B. C. It was from that city that Emperor Ping Ti sent a deputation to the west to discover the great sage who had arisen, and the deputation returned, bringing Buddhist books and Buddhist priests from India

Soothsayers regard Honan-fu as a location upon which heaven smiles When the capital was first located there by the Chow dynasty, the oracles were consulted and pronounced the situation ideal They said the inheritance would last for 30 generations, or a total of 700 years. The dynasty really lasted for 800 years, or 39 generations.

The Remedy For Anger.

Seneca

The greatest remedy for anger is delay beg anger to grant you this at the first not in order that it may pardon the offense, but that it may form a right judgment about it If it delays, it will come to an end. Do not attempt to quell it all at once, for its first impulses are fierce by plucking away its parts we shall remove the whole We are made angry by some things which we learn at second hand, and by some things which we ourselves hear or see. Now we ought to be slow to believe what is told us * * * if you were about to give sentence in court about ever so small a sum of money you would take nothing as proved without a witness, and a witness would count for nothing except on his oath You would allow both sides to be heard You would allow them time

JAPAN IS ENJOYING UNUSUAL PROSPERITY

War Has Given Mikado's Kingdom Greatest Era of Material Welfare.

Tokio—Never in her history has Japan met with such a period of material prosperity as today. This is entirely due to the war. The entente allies have been buying great quantities of war supplies since the beginning of the conflict and more orders are being placed constantly Money is literally pouring into the country in such quantities that there is actually a plethora of it Money has become so cheap that bankers have begun to complain

The first great call upon Japan has been made and will continue to be made by Russia. The exports to Russia have realized several million yen. They include not alone military equipment and supplies such as guns, rifles and ammunition, but huge quantities of cloth many hundred thousands of pairs of boots, leather pouches, caps, sashes, food products and medical supplies. Even rice is exported to Russia to be made into gruel for wounded soldiers and of the medical exportation a notable item is tincture of iodine

Another great channel in which Japan is finding prosperity is through her shipping Her big merchant marine is not only transporting supplies for the entente powers, but so far as the Orient is concerned has practically taken over at an immense profit the sea transportation which is held in time of peace by the vessels of Great Britain Freight charges to all points including the United States have soared and Japanese shipping companies have recently petitioned the department of communications to sanction a further increase in tariffs.

The year 1915 was exceptional in Japanese trade, but this year is expected to prove still more remarkable. Last year the total exports amounted to about $350,000,000 and the imports to about $266,000,000 The total trade was $616,000,000. Compared with the preceding year the figures show an increase of about $58,000,000 on exports and a decrease of $31,500,000 on imports. Whereas in 1914 imports exceeded exports by $2,317,000 the balance of trade last year was in favor of exports by about $84,000,000. Anything approaching such a large excess of exports is unprecedented in the annals of foreign trade in Japan. By glancing over the trade returns for the last 10 years, it will be found that with the exception of 1906 and 1909 when exports owing to greatly reduced imports, were in excess by $2,485,000 and by $9,456,000 respectively, the balance of trade for the remaining eight years shows an excess of imports ranging from $2,317,000 to $48,485,000. In 1914 the outbreak of the war diminish the volume of trade, especially that of imports. This explains the fact that in that year the excess of imports over exports amounted to only $2,317,000, as compared with $48,485,000 recorded for 1913 and with $46,000,000 for 1912.

With the continuation of the war last year importations still further diminished while a remarkable increase was noted in the export trade The markets in India South America and other places previously taking German and Austrian goods demanded Japanese substitutes for goods which no longer came out from Europe All this combined to create a new record in exports while the difficulty of Europe in sending its goods abroad contributed to a decrease of imports into Japan.

HEALTHY COUNTIES.

The North Carolina department of [illegible] has established a [illegible] between the counties of that state In every [illegible] press [illegible] which they issue is at best the [illegible] commending some county officer for doing some one thing better than his competitors. Those who read these press articles have learned to expect something of accomplishment from the competitors among the North Carolina counties

A recent number of the Journal of the American Medical association has an article by the health officer of New Hanover county which should be widely read New Hanover county people want to be healthy In five years they reduced their general death rate from 29 to 16 their death rate of children under [illegible] from 1123 to 474, of diarrhea from 411 to 80, of typhoid from 100 to 9

The United States public health service made two sanitary surveys of New Hanover county, one in 1914 and the other in 1915 At the first survey each home in the rural districts of the county was scored on a score card and the owner was told when his premises were [illegible] and how they could be improved The survey in 1915 showed [illegible] conditions in the homes had improved 15 per cent

A study of disease to New Hanover showed that as sanitation of the homes improved all diseases except one lessened That one was pellagra. The [illegible] rate was 16.69 in 1913 It had risen to 64.6 in 1915 As the result of these surveys and other studies made by the city and county health department Mr Nesbitt concluded (1) there is no relation between soil pollution and pellagra, and (2) close supervision of all cases, disinfection, fumigation, isolation and the other usual means of controlling infection have no influence on the amount and spread of pellagra

Why did the amount of pellagra increase in spite of the improvement in general sanitation and the efforts of the health authorities to control the disease" Dr Nesbitt's conclusion is that it was due to "business depression, lack of employment, a limited market for products, and increased price of food, with consequent increase of poverty"

The years 1912 and 1913 were years of prosperity in Wilmington and New Hanover county Everybody had work. Money was plentiful and food was 20 per cent cheaper than in 1915. Then came the war in Europe The bottom fell out of the cotton market. Times were hard Many people had to do without lean meat and live largely on cornmeal fat meat and molasses. It was in consequence of these economic changes that pellagra had increased in New Hanover county since August, 1914

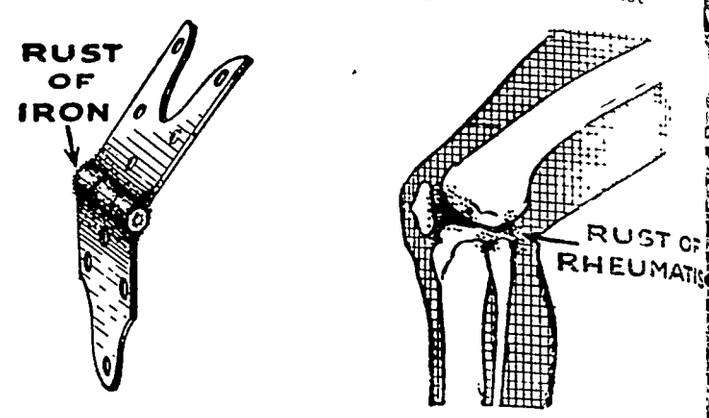
DRINK HOT WATER AND R[illegible] JOINTS OF RHEUMATIC RU[illegible]

Why rheumatism and lumbago sufferers should drink [illegible] hot water each morning before breakfast



Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste material, toxins and ptomaine-like poisons, called uric acid, is formed and then sucked into the blood where it continues to circulate, collecting grain by grain in the joints of the body much like rust collects on the hinge as shown above.

Men and women who suffer from lumbago, rheumatism or sore, stiff, aching joints should begin drinking phosphated hot water, not as a means to magic relief from pain, but to prevent more uric acid forming in the system. Before eating breakfast each morning, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will first neutralize and then wash out of the stomach, liver, kidneys a[illegible] vious day's accumul[illegible] poisons; thus, cl[illegible] and freshening th[illegible] canal, each morn[illegible] more food into the [illegible]

A quarter pound [illegible] phate costs very [illegible] store but is suffi[illegible] rheumatic or lumba[illegible] thusiast on the mo[illegible]

Millions of people [illegible] free from these rh[illegible] are [illegible] practicing this daily [illegible] tion. A glass of hot [illegible] spoonful of limestone [illegible] before breakfast, is [illegible] orating; besides, it [illegible] health measure because [illegible] alimentary organs of all the gases and sour fermentations one look and feel clean, sweet fresh all day.

Those who try this for [illegible] may find themselves free from headaches, constipation biliousness, tacks, sallowness, nasty breath stomach acidity.

Efficiency built the Panama Canal, after inefficiency failed. The efficiency of the Panama Canal doubled the effectiveness of the U. S. Navy without adding a ship to it. It took over 8,000 miles out of the trip from New York to San Francisco and changed the highway between London and Australia from Suez to Panama.

Efficiency insures against lost motion—it produces the utmost service out of equipment and yields the finest product, at the least cost.

Certain-teed

Roofing

is an efficiency product

Every advantage that men, money and machinery can offer is used to increase the production, maintain the quality and lower the cost. Each of the General's enormous mills is advantageously located to serve the ends of efficient manufacture and quick distribution. Each is equipped with the most up-to-date machinery. Raw materials are purchased in enormous quantities and far ahead of the needs of manufacturing, thus guarding against increased cost due to idle machinery. This also insures favorable buying, and the pick of the market.

Expert chemists at each mill are employed to select and blend the asphalts, and every roll of CERTAIN-TEED is made under their watchful care.

CERTAIN-TEED resists the drying-out process so destructive to ordinary roofing, because the felt is thoroughly saturated with a blend of soft asphalts, prepared under the formula of the General's board of expert chemists. It is then coated with a blend of harder asphalts, which keeps the inner saturation soft. This makes a roofing more pliable, and more impervious to the elements than the harder, drier kind.

CERTAIN-TEED is made in rolls; also in slate-surfaced shingles. There is a type of CERTAIN-TEED for every kind of building, with flat or pitched roofs, from the largest sky-scraper to the smallest residence or out-building.

CERTAIN-TEED is guaranteed for 5, 10 or 15 years, according to ply (1, 2 or 3). Experience proves that it lasts longer.

THE GLOVED HAND

A Detective Story

By BURTON E. STEVENSON

Author of "The Holladay Case," "The Marathon Mystery," "The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet," etc.

CHAPTER XXI (Continued.)

The motion ceased. I was gazing down upon a great city, built upon a narrow spur of land between two rivers, a city of towering buildings and busy streets, then upon a single house, set in the midst of lofty elms, then I was in a room, a room with books against the walls, and a door opening upon a garden. From the garden the light faded, and the darkness came, and a clock somewhere struck 12. Then, suddenly, at the door appeared two white robed figures, an old man and a girl. The man was talking violently, but the girl crossed the room without a backward glance, and passed through a door on its farther side. The man stood for a moment looking after her, then flung himself into a chair, and put his hands before his face.

With creeping flesh I looked again at the outer door, waiting who would enter. And slowly, slowly, the drapery was put aside and a face peered in. I could see its flashing eyes and working mouth. A hand, in which a knife gleamed, was raised cautiously to the cord, and when it was lowered, it held a piece of the cord within its grasp. I could see the eager fingers fashioning a knot, then, with head bent, the figure crept forward foot by foot, it was at the chair back, and even as the old man, conscious at last of the intruder, raised his head, the cord was cast about his throat and drawn tight. There was a moment's struggle, and I saw that the hand which held the cord was red with blood. From the wrist, a stained handkerchief fell softly to the floor.

And then the assassin turned to steal away; but as he went, he cast one awful glance over his shoulder. The light fell upon his face—and I saw that it was Swain's!

* * *

I opened my eyes to find myself extended full length on the divan, with Silva standing over me, a tiny glass of yellow liquid in his hand.

"Drink this," he said, and I swallowed it obediently.

It had a pungent, unpleasant taste but I could feel it running through my veins, and it cleared my mind and steadied my nerves as though by magic. I sat up and looked at the crystal. The other lights in the room had been switched on, and the sphere lay cold and lifeless. I passed my hand before my eyes, and looked at it again, then my eyes sought Silva's. He was smiling softly.

"The visions came," he said. "Your eyes tell me that the visions came. Is it not so?"

"Yes," I answered, "strange visions, Senor Silva. I wish I knew their origin."

"Their origin is in the Universal Spirit," he said quietly. "Even yet you do not believe?"

"No," and I looked again at the crystal. "There are some things past belief."

"Nothing is past belief," he said, still more quietly. "You think so because your mind is wrapped in the conventions amid which you exist. Free it from those wrappings, and you will begin really to live. You have never known what life is."

"How am I to free it, Senor Silva?" I questioned.

He took a step nearer to me.

"By becoming a disciple of the Holy One," he said, most earnestly.

But I was myself again, and I rose to my feet and shook my head, with a smile.

"No," I said, "you will get no convert here. I must be going."

"I will open the gate for you," he said, in another tone, and led the way down the stairs, through the library, and out upon the gravelled walk.

After the drugged atmosphere of his room, the pure night air was like a refreshing bath, and I drew in long breaths of it. Silva walked beside me silently. He unlocked the gate with a key that he carried in his hand, and pulled it open.

"Good-night, Mr. Lester," he said. "The sphere is at your service should you desire again to test it. Think over what I have said to you."

"Good-night," I answered, and stepped through, into the road.

The gate swung shut and the key grated in the lock. Mechanically, I turned my steps toward Godfrey's house; but I seemed to be bending under a great burden—the burden of the vision.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE SUMMONS.

I was confused and shaken. I had no idea of the hour; I did not know whether that vision had lasted a minute or 1,000 years. But, when I blundered up the path to Godfrey's house, I found him and Simmonds sitting on the porch together.

"I had Godfrey bring me out," said Simmonds, as he shook hands, "because I wanted another look at those midnight fire works. Did you come up on the elevated?"

"Yes," I answered, and I felt Godfrey turn suddenly in his chair, at the sound of my voice, and scrutinize my face. "I had dinner in town and came up afterwards."

"What time was that?" asked Godfrey, quietly.

"I got up here about 8 o'clock. I had an engagement with Miss Vaughan."

"You have been with her since?"

"With her and Silva," and I dropped into a chair and mopped my face with my handkerchief. "The experience was almost too much for me," I added and told them all that had occurred.

They listened, Godfrey motionless and intent, and Simmonds with a murmur of astonishment now and then.

"I'm bound to confess," I concluded, "that my respect for Silva has increased immensely. He's impressive. He's consistent, I almost believe he's sincere."

"Have you considered what that belief implies?" asked Godfrey.

"What does it imply?"

"If Silva is sincere," said Godfrey slowly, "if he is really what he pretends to be—a mystic, a priest of Siva intent only on making converts to what he believes to be the true religion—then our whole theory falls to the ground, and Swain is guilty of murder."

I shivered a little, but I saw that Godfrey was right.

"We are in this dilemma," Godfrey continued, "either Silva is a fakir and charlatan, or Swain is a murderer."

"I wish you could have witnessed that horrible scene as I did," I broke in; "it would have shaken your confidence, too! I wish you could have seen his face as he glanced back over his shoulder! It was fiendish—no, Godfrey, positively fiendish! It makes my blood run cold. It makes it run cold now to remember it!"

"How do you explain all that crystal sphere business, anyway?" asked Simmonds, who had been chewing his cigar perplexedly. "It stumps me."

"Lester was hypnotised and saw what Silva willed him to see," answered Godfrey. "You'll remember he sat facing him."

"I," I objected, "no one remembers what happens during hypnosis."

"They do if they are willed to remember. Silva willed you to remember. It was cleverly done, and his explanation of the origin of the vision was clever, too. Moreover, it had some truth in it, for the secret of crystal gazing is that it awakens the subjective consciousness, or great spirit as Silva called it. But you weren't crystal gazing, tonight, Lester—you were simply hypnotised."

"You may be right," I admitted, "I remember how his eyes stared at me. But it was wonderful! I'm more impressed with it than ever."

"It isn't the fact that he hypnotised you that bothers me," said Godfrey, after a moment. "It's the fact that he has also hypnotised Miss Vaughan."

The words startled me.

"You think that's the reason of her behavior?" I asked, quickly.

"What other reason can there be?" Godfrey demanded. "Here we have a girl who thinks herself in danger and summons to her aid the man who loves her and whom, presumably, she loves. And two days later, when he has been imprisoned for a crime of which she declares it is absurd to suspect him, instead of hastening to him or trying to carry out his wishes, she turns her back on him and deliberately walks into the danger from which, up to that moment, she had shrunk with loathing. Contrast her behavior of Saturday, when she declared her faith in Swain and begged your assistance, with her behavior of yesterday and today, when she throws you and Swain aside and announces that she is going to follow Silva—to become a priestess of Siva. Do you know what that means, Lester—to become a priestess of Siva?"

"No," I answered slowly, "I don't know. Silva said it was a great destiny, yes, and that it meant turning one's back on marriage."

"That is right," said Godfrey, in an indescribable tone, "there is no marriage. There are only revolting, abominable unspeakable rites and ceremonies. I ran across Professor Sutro, the orientalist, today, and had a talk with him about it. He says the worship of Siva is merely the worship of the reproductive principle, as it runs through all creation and that the details of this worship are inconceivably disgusting. That is the sort of destiny Miss Vaughan has chosen."

My hands were clammy with the horror of it.

"We must save her!" I said, hoarsely. "Of course she doesn't know—doesn't suspect! We must get her away from Silva!"

"Undoubtedly we must do something," Godfrey agreed. "I don't know how we can get her away from Silva, but we might get Silva away from her. Couldn't you arrest him on suspicion and keep him locked up for two or three days, Simmonds?"

"I might," Simmonds grunted.

"And while he's away, you can work with her, Lester, take Mrs. Royce to see her, give her a hint of what Saivaism really is—or get Mrs. Royce to. If that doesn't have any effect, we can get her away from Silva's influence for a few days, she will be all right again."

"I hope so," I agreed, "but I'm not at all certain. She didn't behave like a hypnotised person, Godfrey, she seemed to be acting of her own free will. I couldn't see that Silva was trying to influence her in any way. She said she was trying to carry out her father's wish. And it certainly was his wish—the will proves that. If anybody is hypnotising her, I should say it was he."

"Well, I can't arrest him," said Simmonds, with a grin.

"Her father's wishes may have had some weight with her at the outset," admitted Godfrey, "but they couldn't have driven her to the length to which she has gone. And about the will. If Vaughan had not been killed, if he had been found insane, the will would have been at once invalidated. Don't you get the glimmer of a motive for his murder there, Lester?"

"It can be invalidated now, if Miss Vaughan contests it," I pointed out.

"Yes, but unless she does contest it, it will stand. But if Vaughan had been declared insane, the will could never have been probated—no contest would have been necessary. Do you see the difference?"

"I see what you mean, but I don't think it amounts to much. Silva declares that if Miss Vaughan contests the will, he will not defend it."

"But he knows perfectly well that she will not contest it. The surest way to prevent a contest is by adopting just such an attitude. Besides, if we don't save her, he'll get her share, too. Vaughan's estate and Vaughan's daughter and everything else that was Vaughan's will disappear into his maw. Oh, he's playing for a big stake, Lester, and it looks to me as though he were going to win it!"

It looked so to me, too, and I fell into gloomy thought.

"You've got your men watching the house, I suppose?" I asked, at last, turning to Simmonds.

"Yes, and we managed to score one little point today."

"What was that?"

"I found out that Annie Crogan, the housemaid over there, had a cousin on the force, so I got him out here and he managed to have a talk with her. He didn't find out anything, he added, that is, anything we don't know, but she promised to leave the door of her bedroom open at night, and if anything happened, to show a light at the window."

"Splendid!" I said, "and of course she'll keep her eyes open all day time."

"Sure she will. She's a [illegible] girl. The only thing I'm afraid of is that the Hindu will get on [illegible] her. But she's been warned carefully. If they [illegible] maybe she'll have some [illegible] in a day or two."

"Perhaps she will," [illegible] drew a breath of relief [illegible] all these [illegible] and out, [illegible] last out[illegible] the accuracy of these instinctive feelings.

And Godfrey himself, I reflected, did not seem to be very clear in the matter. If Silva was merely a fakir and a charlatan, there was no reason why he should wish to initiate Miss Vaughan into the mysteries of a religion that he wore only as a cloak, to be dropped as soon as his plans were accomplished. On the other hand, if he was sincere and really wished to convert the girl, it was only reasonable to suppose he was sincere in other things as well.

"It reduces itself to this," I said finally to Godfrey. "If Silva is a charlatan, there is no reason why he should hypnotize Miss Vaughan, but if he really wishes to make a priestess of her, then, by the same token, he is sincere and not a charlatan at all."

Godfrey nodded.

"There's a twist there that I can't seem to get straight," he admitted. "Well, have to watch Silva a little longer to find out what his game really is. Of course, it's just possible that he'd be glad to get rid of the girl, but that she really is obsessed by the idea of carrying out her father's wish. If that's the case, Silva is rather up a tree."

"That's where we'd better be getting," broke in Simmonds, who had taken his watch and held it up to the light. "It's near 12 o'clock, and I don't want to miss the fireworks. Besides, you fellows don't gain anything by all this jawing. You've been at it for an hour and you're more tangled up now than when you started. My motto with a case of this kind is just to sit quiet and watch it, and pretty soon, the rat thinks the coast is clear, and pokes out his head, and you nab him."

"There's a good deal in that," agreed Godfrey, with a little laugh. "I admit that our arguing doesn't seem to lead anywhere. Come along," and he led the way out among the trees.

"Now take these fireworks," went on Simmonds, in a low tone, when we were sitting side by side on the limb. "I don't understand what they mean, but they must mean something. Am I laying awake nights worrying about them? Not me! I'm just going to keep on watching till I find out what the meaning is. I know you're a great fellow for theory and deduction, and all that sort of thing, Godfrey, and I know you've pulled off some mighty clever stunts, but, after all, there's nothing like patience."

"Yes—it's dogged as does it," agreed Godfrey. "Patience is a great thing. I only wish I had more of it."

"It would be a good thing," assented Simmonds, candidly; and then we fell silent, gazing out into the darkness.

"Surely," said Godfrey, at last, "it must be 12 o'clock."

Simmonds got out his watch and flashed upon it a ray from his electric torch.

"Yes," he said, "it's four minutes after."

I felt Godfrey's hand stiffen on my arm.

"Then there's something wrong," he whispered. "You remember Lester, what happened the other time that light failed to appear. A man was murdered!"

The darkness into which I stared seemed suddenly to grow threatening and sinister full of vague terrors. Even Simmonds grew uneasy, and I could feel his arm twitching.

Godfrey put his foot on the ladder and began to descend. Simmonds and I followed him silently.

"I'm going over the wall," he said, when we were on the ground. "Something's wrong, and we've got to find out what it is."

"How will we get down?" asked Simmonds. "There's no ladder there."

"We can stand on the top of the wall," he said at last, "and lift this ladder over. It won't be easy, but it can be done. Go ahead, Lester, and be careful of the glass."

I mounted the ladder, felt cautiously along the top of the wall and found a place where I could put my feet. Simmonds followed me, and then came Godfrey. His was the dificult part, to draw up the ladder and lower it again. As for me, it was all I could do to keep from falling. I felt absurdly as though I were standing on a tremulous tight rope high in the air; but Godfrey managed it somehow and started down.

And at that instant, there shrilled through the night the high, piercing note of a police whistle. It rose and fell, rose and fell, rose and fell, and then came poignant silence. The sound stabbed through me. Without hesitation or thought of peril, I let myself go and plunged downward into the darkness.

CHAPTER XXIII.

DEADLY PERIL.

There must be a providence which protects fools and madmen, for I landed in a heavy clump of shrubbery, and got to my feet with no injury more serious than some scratches on hands and face, which at the time I did not even feel. In a moment, I had found the path and was speeding toward the house. Ahead of me flitted a dark shadow which I knew to be Godfrey, and behind me came the pad-pad of heavy feet, which could only belong to Simmonds. And then, from the direction of the house, came the crash of broken glass.

Women Once Invalids

Now in Good Health Through Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Say it is Household Necessity. Doctor Called it a Miracle.

All women ought to know the wonderful effects of taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound even on those who seem hopelessly ill. Here are three actual cases:

Harrisburg, Penn.—"When I was single I suffered a great deal from female weakness because my work compelled me to stand all day. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for that and was made stronger by its use. After I was married I took the Compound again for a female trouble and after three months I passed what the doctor called a growth. He said it was a miracle that it came away as one generally goes under the knife to have them removed. I never want to be without your Compound in the house."—Mrs. Frank Knobl, 1642 Fulton St., Harrisburg, Penn.

Hardly Able to Move.

Albert Lea, Minn.—"For about a year I had sharp pains across my back and hips and was hardly able to move around the house. My head would ache and I was dizzy and had no appetite. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, I am feeling stronger than for years. I have a little boy eight months old and am doing my work all alone. I would not be without your remedies in the house as there are none like them."—Mrs. F. E. Yosr, 611 Water St., Albert Lea, Minn.

Three Doctors Gave Her Up.

Pittsburg, Penn.—"Your medicine has helped me wonderfully. When I was a girl 18 years old I was always sickly and delicate and suffered from irregularities. Three doctors gave me up and said I would go into consumption. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and with the third bottle began to feel better. I soon became regular and I got strong and shortly after I was married. Now I have two nice stout healthy children and am able to work hard every day."—Mrs. Clementina Duerring, 34 Gardner St., Troy Hill, Pittsburg, Penn.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

CHARACTER FROM THE EYE

Those Who Will Take the Trouble to Observe May Tell Much About Their Associates.

Beware of the shifting, faltering eyes that always look away from you.

Small eyes usually mean an alert mind.

If they look straight at you, steady and bright, like a squirrel's, you may expect the right sort of cleverness, a quick tongue and a gift for repartee.

But if the small eyes are more dim and do not look straight into yours, you may look for the wrong kind of cleverness, for little dishonesties and equivocations, and for a business sharpness that is willing to sacrifice too much for a little money.

Large, "tranquil," "cowlike" eyes, on the other hand, are less reponsive than the alert, bright little beady eyes, but, once stir them to their depths, and they will look infinitely more intense and meaningful than the more impulsive eyes.

Round, protruding eyes show an ambitious nature and a love of action.

The longer eyes show more the temperament of the dreamer.

The most beautiful eyes in the world are very clear (that indicates good health), and are set widely apart and rather deep. That width of setting always gives a certain expression of sweet spirituality.

MORE THAN EVER

Increased Capacity for Work Since Leaving Off Coffee.

Many formor coffee drinkers who have mental work to porform day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum instead of coffee. An Illinois woman writes:

"I had drank coffee for about twenty years, and finally had what the doctor called 'coffee heart.' I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left; had kidney trouble and constipation.

"The first noticeable benefit which followed the change from coffee to Postum was the improved action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steadier.

"Then I became less despondent, and the desire to be active again showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both forms are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

BLIND 50 YEARS

SIGHT RESTORED BY DR. WEBER

Mr J G Redinbaugh of Logan Iowa, an old soldier of the civil war, now 79 years old had an experience showing the help he received in an apparently hopeless case He says "About four years ago my right eye went blind with cataract I had lost the sight of my left eye during the war fifty years ago so I was helpless I went to Omaha to one of the best oculists and he operated on my right eye I stayed in the hospital for five weeks, had severest pains, but the result was a failure I returned home and was advised to go to Dr Weber, who often comes to Logan He examined my eyes and said the right eye could not be helped, but Dr Weber said he could help the left one that had been blind fifty years. This seemed almost too good to be true, but Dr Weber treated the eye and operated on it at the hotel and my wife took care of the eye afterward at home I had no pain and my sight is restored"

MONEY TO BURN

Over in Illinois, a farmer who had $2,650, for which he had no immediate use, hid it between the leaves of an old catalog. Last week, his wife did her house cleaning, and when she came across this old catalog, without looking into it, she threw it into the fire, and the $2 650 went up in smoke.

This is not the first time that a thing of this sort has happened, nor will it be the last. But it does seem such an inexcusable way of losing one's earnings. With the splendid banking facilities we have throughout the corn belt, there is no need for any farmer or any business man to keep more actual cash on hand than may be necessary to attend to very small items of expense. The bank not only affords a safe place for the deposit of money, but the method of paying bills by checks instead of by cash automatically brings the payer a receipt, and keeps for him in his check book a record of his expenditures.

FEMINA VICTRIX.

In the beginning a man's horse was his dearest possession. It would carry him everywhere, and it started from the seat, without cranking

But presently he ate something which gave him that feeling of fulness—that is to say, he discovered his stomach and opened up a new way to his heart.

Woman was not slow to sieze the advantage thus offered, and from that day forward she gained steadily in importance, while the horse has lost ground commensurately

Hence arose the natural enmity between women and horses Almost the worst you can say about a horse is that it is perfectly safe for a woman to drive

The Horse-Show exhibits are the last phase of the unequal contest. Here the horse is degraded to the merest pretext and woman is the whole thing.

'DARK HORSE' MAY WIN G. O. P. RACE

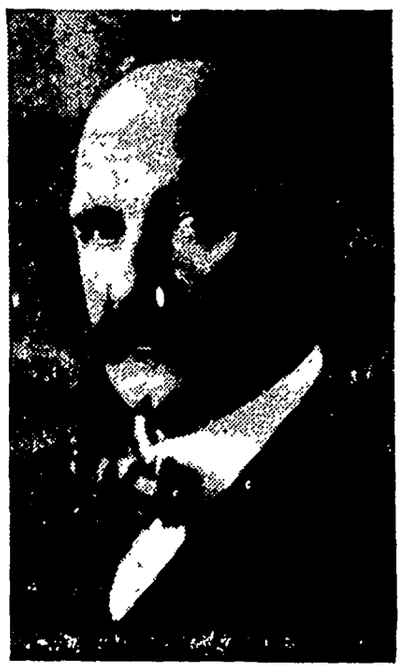
REPUBLICAN LEADERS LOOK FOR PRACTICAL BUSINESS MAN TO HEAD TICKET.

COLEMAN DU PONT NAMED AS LIKELY CANDIDATE

Delaware Man Has Splendid Reputation as a Self-Made Leader in Constructive Business.

With the Republican convention only a scant twelve weeks away, the most popular topic of conversation in political circles these days concerns the G. O. P.'s choice of a candidate to run against Wilson.

The Republicans will probably go back to old principles and look for a candidate who will command the support of the same army of voters who elected McKinley, when a wave of patriotic common sense swept the country, and business men by the hundreds of thousands marched the streets demanding a practical government. It is interesting to note that the name of General Coleman du Pont, of Delaware, has been repeatedly mentioned recently as the man eminently qualified for the nomination. To those who look upon the government as a big business concern demanding the supervision of a trained business man, the name of General du Pont carries a strong appeal, for there is no man more qualified to handle the big problems of today than this same self-made leader in constructive business. Moreover, both the public and private record of General du Pont will stand up well under the searchlight of political opposition.



GENERAL COLEMAN DU PONT.

Coleman du Pont was born in Kentucky and started his working life in the mines of the Blue Grass State. He stands today as one of the few successful men who have acquired their positions by methods that will stand scrutiny. He has been a producer—not a stock jobber He has never antagonized any class of people. Capital and Labor alike admire him.

Without self-advertisement he does more charity than do most men. He is an ardent advocate of good roads and believes that a really perfect system of highways will enhance the farmer's income and reduce the cost of living to the cities He has built roads and given them to his state, always with a sound business scheme to perpetuate them and save them from being a burden to the taxpayers.

He comes from a family more American than most—a family identified with the building of the nation since the Revolution His grandfather was Thomas Jefferson's most valued personal friend and advisor in the time of great need during the dark days of the Republic.

The great Powder Company with which he was formerly identified has supplied our government with all its powder at a price always named by our government officials themselves and never by the company

Because of his great executive ability and high standing in the business world, some of the shrewdest political minds in the country consider him as being one of the most likely "dark horses" for the Republican nomination. They point to the fact that his success in life would eliminate any need for a friendly Colonel House, or any other financial influence standing ever behind the presidential chair Nor would he be compelled to take orders from any man or group of men.

Another factor that the supporters of General du Pont are pointing to is his knowledge of military affairs. For sixteen years he has been identified with the soldiery of his state and is thoroughly alive to the necessity for preparedness. He has also had practical training in politics, having been a delegate to a number of State and National conventions, and serving as a member of the Republican National committee for many years.

It is the splendid business training of General du Pont that is pointing the way for him to the nomination. For it is conceded on all sides that the biggest problems of this country at the close of the European war will be business problems, and there are few men among those mentioned, who have had his experience in coping with such huge problems As a manager of constructive business and as a reorganizer, Coleman du Pont stands in a class by himself.

CHECKS LESS THAN $1.00 ARE LEGAL

Treasury Department Issues Statement Explaining The "Hitch"

Sometimes when a newspaper item gets started to make the rounds of the newspaper it is like a rumor in the hands of the public, they don't stop to investigate the truth. A considerable number of newspapers have repeated an item that checks and notes could not be written for a sum less than one dollar; that is it was unlawful to do so; the item was mildly exciting and like a piece of gossip they couldn't wait to learn if it was true but passed it to their readers The treasury department at Washington ought to be authority on this matter, in connection with their legal advisories and we wrote them for information,

They stated that in 1862, in order to quickly raise funds for war purposes a law was passed premitting postage stamps to be offered and accepted in payment of goods or debts of small amounts, taking the place as need be of small coins But it was important that this privilege shoul I not be interfered with or construe I so as to allow private parties to write their checks or give their notes for small sum and endeavor to circulate them as legal tender in a general way through a numerous hands A clause was therefore inserted in the law prohibiting the issuing of checks for a less sum than one dollar intended to circulate as money to be used in lieu of lawful money of the United States. The last part of the foregoing sentence shows the dividing line between lawful and unlawful intentions. A bank check is an order on a bank to pay a stated sum of money; it is not intended to be put into general circulation as a substitute for money and is therefore that reason not in conflict with this old law. The purpose of issuing checks for sums less than one dollar not being in violation of this old law, there is no need to repeal it and it still stands on the books but does not apply to the writing of checks as has been general reported in the newspapers the last few weeks,

Checks are not a legal tender medium of general circulation; in fact the holder of a check should present the order within a reasonable time for payment at the bank drawn upon, otherwise he may lose his money; that shows the difference between what Uncle Sam says is legal tender and good any time anywhere and how it differs from an order (check) drawn upon a certain bank which has its limitations as to circulations and length of time it may be good.— Ex.

RECOVERED HIS MONEY

People who do not patronize the banker resort to innumerable ways to hide away in supposed places of safety their ready cash Nick Neve adopted a novel method to hide away his ready cash while in town Tuesday. In unloading oats at the Farmers elevator his pocketbook accidentally slipped from his pocket and was dumped with the grain Mr Crapser noticed something going in with the oats and tried to grab the parcel, but failed to get it. Mr. Neve proceeded up town to make some purchases and on reaching in his pocket discovered the absence of his purse. However, he concluded he had left it home Arriving there he soon ascertained that he was in error in his conclusions Mr Crapser was phoned, and he advised Mr. Neve to come in and shovel the half carload of oats to the empty end of the car This he did Wednesday morning and was rewarded for his labor in the goodly sum of about $12 Thornton Enterprise.

HANSON FOR AUDITOR

In this week's issue will be found the announcement of E. P Hanson for auditor It is needless for to dwell on the many good qualities of our present auditor. He is giving the best satisfaction and caring for the office in a more satisfactory manner than it has ever been done before Everything he does is done right, even to the making up of the schedule of claims, even a child can make out what the bills are allowed for now, while before he took hold of the office it would take a Chinese president to cipher it out There is not any question but what he will be granted another term and likely many more, as the auditor's office is one where it takes efficiency and hustling and Hanson is the man.

The diamond ring and gold watch went to ladies in Corwith, the ladies mesh bag to the county recorder, Jennie Hammill, at Garner The third prize went to Kanawha and the fourth to Austin, Minn. There were 282 answers received up to Tuesday and on Wednesday several came too late to be counted. Mr. Welty is a firm believer in advertising and does it thoroughly as the results from this ad run two weeks will prove.—Britt News.

OUR NUTTY NOVELETTE

TOMMY AND SHE.

Imploringly she held out her hand. The diamond on the third finger flashed in the sunlight that streamed through the parlor window and made the old carpet look fairly decent.

"Tom!" she said despairingly, "don't—don't go without kissing me good-bye!"

He looked at her in silence, and his lip curled, which lip depenent saith not. The clock on the mantel struck four, so she judged it must be about a quarter to three.

"Tom!" she besought. "Tom! Don't you love me at all?" He would never know how great a blow to her pride his refusal had given her.

"I'm going," he said briefly, and strode to the door.

"Tom!" she cried loudly. "Tom! Tom!" She knew his name well.

"Ta-ta," he said, and was gone.

She sank to the sofa and buried her tears in the cushions.

Tommy was five years old and a perfect little devil when he got mad at his sister.

BUENA VISTA CITIZENS WANT PERMANENT ROADS

Storm Lake Ia, March 25 —The board of supervisors of Buena Vista county will grade and gravel the entire county road system within the three years and issue bonds upon the 20-year serial payment plan for the expense, as the result of a mass meeting held in this city Thursday in the Empire theater, which was crowded to the doors. D. W Morris, of Marshalltown, chairman of the better roads commission, presented the plan proposed by the supervisors, and it was indorsed by a vote of 309 to 110 The vote for bonding for bridges was even stronger, being 31 to 85. The law gives a county board the power to bond but the board preferred to submit the matter to a mass meeting referendum The retired farmer class was out in force to oppose the move, although the county board estimated that the bonds could be paid from present tax levies without any increase.

LIQUOR MEN TO ATTACK VALIDITY OF MULCH REPEAL

Des Moines, Ia, March 25.--As a preliminary to an attack on the repeal of the mulct law, the liquor interests of Davenport have employed Des Moines attorneys to aid in getting evidence concerning the validity of the statute The assault on the law is based in part on the contention that the code supplement of 1913, containing the mulct law, sought to be repealed, was never formally adopted as the law of Iowa

Local attorneys are examining the copy which was supplied to the state printer for the code supplement It is claimed that the members of the code commission did not sign the statement certifying that the laws contained in the supplement were the laws of the state The original copy will show whether the certification was proper, it is believed.

YOUTH NOW IN IOWA CLAIMS $400,000 ESTATE

Charles City, Ia, March 25 —Dr. C. M Palmer and Keith Dalrymple returned here yesterday after a trip east to lay claim to the $400,000 estate alleged to belong to young Dalrymple. They reached Port Allegheny, former Dalrymple home, just in time to stop legal proceedings to have young Dalrymple declared dead

Young Dalrymple, who is 19 years old, was missing several years, finally being located in a southern hospital by Dr Palmer, who is his uncle. Dr. Palmer has been declared the boys guardian

SERIOUS ILLNESS IS BAR TO MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

Des Moines Ia March 25 -The Iowa supreme court ruled that Nancy Bowle, of Carroll county is not entitled to $1,000 damages from the Oldfield estate by reason of the breach of promise to marry made by Edward A. Oldfied However, she was given $3,164 for services as his housekeeper from 1893 to 1910

Nancy Bowle became housekeeper for Oldfield in 1893 At his death she claimed $3,975 for services and $10,000 for refusal to carry out a marriage contract The evidence showed there was and agreement to marry, but later Oldfield became afflicted with pernicious anemia and was doomed to die within a few months He declined to marry on the ground that the disease was incurable and sure to be fatal

The court laid down this rule That persons when afflicted with a fatal or incurable malady and when marriage would hasten death are not bound to carry out the contract. In this case the estate is not liable for damages for such failure

MISSOURI VALLEY--Roadmaster Bollard, on the Iowa line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co, is assembling about 200 men whom he will employ in an important piece of improvement work ordered by the company The double track between here and Council Bluffs is to be rock ballasted, the depots and bridges raised and the line generally rebuilt. He has also had orders to lay 100-pound steel on the 50 miles between Dow City and Logan The work will cost about $250,000.

CUTS HIS DAUGHTER'S THROAT, THEN TRIES TO COMMIT SUICIDE

Deranged Iowan Runs Amuck In Family Circle Because of Business Worries.

Charlton, Ia., March 25 —W S Ginn, temporarily deranged by worry, cut the throat of his daughter, Helen, 18 years old, and tried to kill several other members of his family He was arrested while attempting to commit suicide His daughter is in a serious condition

Ginn's wife is in a Des Moines hospital She has been ill for several weeks The family formerly resided in Des Moines, but came here about 10 days ago They were living at the home of William Sull, Ginn's soninlaw

Helen Ginn was lying in bed when her father entered her room with an open razor He seized her slashed her throat, then ran into an adjoining room where he attempted to kill his grandchild. His wounded daughter, however, had strength enough left to follow him and rescue the child.

Ginn's family finally managed to eject him from the house and bolt the doors. Officers found him just in time to prevent his suicide.

ALLEN SEES DANGER IN APATHY ABOUT SUFFRAGE

Des Moines, Ia March 25 —If a state election was held today the woman suffrage amendment probably would be defeated and the "wets" would win control of the legislature.

Such is the opinion of J. H Allen, candidate for the republican nomination for governor and leader of the suffrage and "dry" forces of the state, who arrived in Des Moines, yesterday, fresh from a campaign tour. In the last few weeks he has visited every county in Iowa

"The state is in the same condition as Des Moines," he declared "The 'drys' are in the majority, but they are not cohesively organized.

"Apathy on the part of the proponents for suffrage is likely to knock out the suffrage amendment There is a formidable organization forming to fight suffrage. It is working steadily, while the suffrage workers are working spasmodically"

REAL ILLUSTRATION OF MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Waterloo, Ia., March 25 —On March 16 C A. Dickey, after several attempts, drove around Henry Menken on a country road A small incident, but see what has happened since

Dickey, when passing, twitted Menken with taking up too much of the road Menken at their destination tried to have Dickey retract There was a fistic encounter Dickey had Menken arrested for assault and Menken was fined $10

It developed in the testimony at Menken's trial that Dickey had driven to the right side in passing Menken Menken then had Dickey arrested for violating the road law Tuesday Dickey pleaded guilty and Judge Mullan imposed a fine of $1 and costs

The court could not repress a smile when the whole tragic story was unfolded by County Attorney Wenner

GLENWOOD—From the wild talk of a man picked up near here and found partially insane from exposure and possible assault, Sheriff Edwards deduced the stranger was from Pawhuska, Okla., and a wire to the sheriff there brought the man's wife His name is Charles Booth He's a merchant of Pawhuska, who recently went to Joplin, Mo. on a business trip and disappeared His money was all gone and his fine clothes had been exchanged for dirty overalls and jumper He soon recovered after the arrival of his wife and the two left for home

CEDAR RAPIDS—Many expressions of sorrow were tendered to Capt and Mrs S. W Rathbun, of Marion, because of the death at Perry of their only son, Don Rathbun The deceased man was 40 years old and for eight years was postmaster at Marion He also was associated for a time with his father in the publication of the Marion Register For the past five years he had been in the grocery business at Perry Death was the result of an operation for appendicitis.

FRAUD CHARGE RAISED IN DES MOINES PRIMARY CONTEST.

Des Moines Ia Mar h 24 Fraud that may invalidate the recent primary election in Des Moines has been discovered Out of 434 votes cast in the Third precinct of the Fourth ward, in which the police station is located it was found that 297 ballots were cast by nonresident voters Forty-two gave their address as 420 Court avenue a residence that could not possibly be occupied by more than a dozen persons Several registered from hotels, but the hotel proprietors do not know them

A committee headed by John B Hammond announced it would start an action to invalidate the election The committee asserts that 2 000 illegal votes were cast

The initial investigation that revealed the fraudulent votes was made by James Cavender secretary to Chief of Police Crawford, and City Treasurer Floyd Miles.

FINISHES SERVING MASS AFTER APOPLETIC STROKE

Cascade Ia March 24 Sunday morning while saying mass, Father L Roche, pastor of St Martins Catholic church, was suddenly stricken with an apoplectic stroke and fell backward from in front of the altar, striking the floor of the dais with a heavy thud

A physician, who was present, ran to the assistance of the fallen priest vaulting the chancel rail, and removed him to the vestry, and other physicians were called

After being revived, Father Roche insisted upon completing the mass and supported by physicians at both arms, he finished the remainder of the service.

AUTO BUSES COLLIDE ON BRIDGE; MINOR INJURIES

Clinton Ia, March 24 -- Eighteen passengers in a jitney bus collision on the high bridge between Lyons and Fulton narrowly escaped drowning in the Mississippi here shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon

The accident occurred when a big auto bus was struck by another machine trying to pass it from behind while the two cars were in the center of the bridge The bus, carrying 18 passengers was tilted into the railing, tearing away a part of the guard work and balancing on the edge of the planking ready to topple into the river 20 feet below An iron standard was the only thing which supported the machine and prevented it falling from the bridge

Aside from some slight bruises none of the passengers was injured.

WEBSTER CITY MANAGER TO ABOLISH ANOTHER OFFICE.

Webster City Ia, March 24 —With the approval of the city council, City Manager Vollmer has decided to add to his duties here the work formerly done by City Engineer Boudinot, and so Mr Boudinot's office has been abolished and the city manager has been instruct to buy such tools as are necessary in carrying on the work of the engineer

Before coming here as city manager, Mr Vollmer was city engineer at Burlington, so he is thoroughly familiar with that work It is figured that this change will save the city about $500 per year

DEFIANT COLORED YOUTH OUSTED FROM SCHOOL

Des Moines, Ia., March 22.—Hubert Eaves, 11-year-old colored boy, who refused to salute the flag, was ousted from the public school by Judge Dudley today. The boy was ordered sent to Eldora, but the court withheld sentence pending the promise of the father to place him where he can get an education as good as that in the public school.

Hubert claimed it was wrong to salute anyone but God.

REICHSTAG TO QUIT; SHUTS OFF DEBATES

Government Forces to Put Through Adjournment Resolution, Ending Disputes.

Berlin, March 23. (via London, March 25.)—It is understood that the reichstag will take a recess Friday or Saturday until near the end of April to give committees opportunity to discuss the budget and tax bills. This adjournment will postpone the expected speech of Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg on the nation's policy It also may mean the sidetracking of the debate on the submarine campaign.

It was evident at today's session that the conservatives were restive under the agreement to avoid discussion of the submarine issue in open session. Count Von Westarp said he was willing to adhere to the agreement on condition that the matter be discussed all the more thoroughly in committee. Another conservative speaker desired to mention the submarine question, but met with a shout from the house that it was against the agreement.

Even then he persisted, whereupon the president remarked bluntly "You may not proceed on that subject."

ARSENIC IN BODY HINTS AT MURDER

Dentist, Held For Crime, May Be Able to Face Court Today—Unable to Make Statement.

New York, March 25.---District Attorney Swann said today that he would arraign Dr Arthur Warren Waite for the murder of his fatherinlaw, John E. Peck, a millionaire druggist, of Grand Rapids, Mich., as soon as Waite's physical condition would permit bringing him to court. The young dentist is under arrest at his apartments and so far recovered from the effects of narcotics taken Wednesday and yesterday that the district attorney hoped to produce him in court today

The grand jury's investigation of the deaths of John E Peck and his wife, in Dr Waite's Riverside Drive home, under circumstances which led the authorities to believe they were victims of poison continued today

Since Wednesday, Dr Waite had been under the influence of drugs, taken he said, to induce sleep, and no coherent statement could be obtained from him Meanwhile, the discovery of arsenic in the body of Mr Peck led to the order for the dentist's arrest. Among the exhibits upon which the authorities are working are medical books taken from Dr Waite's library, containing marked passages describing the action of such poisons as that alleged to have been used in the death of Mr. Peck

Undertakers who prepared Mrs. Peck's body for shipment to Detroit recalled today that they were compelled to make great haste to place the body on board the train leaving here on the day of her death One of them said the body was still limp five hours after embalming, indicating to him that there was something present strong enough to counteract the effects of the embalming fluids. Dr Waite's standing as a sportsman and tennis player has increased the interest in the case here. He won the Metropolitan indoor championship here early in the season and defended the indoor championship when he was defeated by R. Lindlay Murray, who won the title.

Definite information has been obtained by the district attorney, it was announced at his office today, as to where the arsenic was procured with which Peck is alleged to have been poisoned This information was the fruit of a canvas made by detectives of drug stores in the vicinity of Waite's home, it was said

Dr Waite's condition improved today Having recovered from his state of coma. Dr Waite told his guards, according to reports they made to the district attorney that he would keep his lips sealed as to the identity of the woman with whom he lived at a hotel as Dr and Mrs. A W Walters.

"And I will stick to her," he was quoted as saying.

GENERAL OTIS IS VERY LOW WITH PNEUMONIA

Los Angeles, Cal., March 24.—Attending physicians said today that Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, editor of the Los Angeles Times, ill with pneumonia, was about the same. He passed a fair night, but it was thought advisable to give him a mild stimulant.

Yesterday he passed the day without taking any opiates. His condition was said not to have improved.

MINNESOTA MAN DOOMED.

Hibbing, Minn., March 24.—Edward Milner, a former resident of Hibbing, is in jail somewhere in Mexico, near the border, awaiting execution by the order of the Carranza authorities, according to a letter smuggled through to a friend in Tucson, and forwarded by the latter to J B. Connors, postmaster here. Milner, a former officer in Villa's army, had been given 30 days in which to arrange his affairs. The name of the town in which he is imprisoned was stricken from the letter, but he asked to be addressed as Captain Hastings, in care of Attorney Hughes, Tucson, Ariz.

Berlin Professes Confidence in Ability of Von Hindenburg to Hold Foes—Latest Forces Engaged

Berlin, March 2[illegible] via London, March 25.)—The important [illegible] around Verdun [illegible] interest in the contest [illegible] front, but the latest [illegible] that hard fighting is in progress [illegible] northern sector of the Russian

The Russian gun fire [illegible] on the evening of March [illegible] 50,000 shells, chiefly [illegible] fell over a small section [illegible] near Postavy. German [illegible] ments and the front [illegible] damaged by this fire

Attack in Thick Waves.

At night, the Russians attacked in thick waves. The first two waves were mowed down before they reached the entanglements. The third attacked the German position on a front of less than 100 yards and the assailants were ejected by a counter attack led in person by a regimental commander. At dawn the Russians made a fourth attack, but it was smothered in the initial stages by German artillery fire.

Four Russian divisions are reported to have participated in these movements. The Germans were compelled to use but few reserves Their losses were heavier than on the two preceding days of the fighting on account of the Russian fire, but it is asserted nevertheless, they were surprisingly small.

Heavy Losses Reported.

Comparative quiet prevailed on March 19 along the [illegible] Wiszniew and Narocz [illegible] a strong night attack [illegible] which was repulsed [illegible] tained by the Russians [illegible] counters are said to [illegible] heavy. Notwithstanding [illegible] of the actions, no [illegible] here The state of [illegible] expressed by a correspondent [illegible] "The people have no [illegible] they know Hindenburg [illegible]

Petrograd, (via London) [illegible] —The Russian drive [illegible] Lake Narocz, according [illegible] ceived here, has carried [illegible] three lines of German [illegible] Russians routed the Germans [illegible] onet fighting, capturing more [illegible] 1,000 prisoners and a dozen [illegible] guns.

Motive Is Not Yet Clear

While admitting that it is not [illegible] whether the fighting which is in progress south of Dvinsk signified a general advance of the Russians in this section or whether it was intended as a demonstration to attract German forces from the Franco-German front, the military critics lay emphasis on what they alludo to as the enormous successes of the attacks during the last few days, the victoriousness of which is pointed to as being sufficient to have made an impression upon the German general staff.

The Russian troops are operating in three groups covering a front [illegible] but the severest fighting is reported to have occurred in the vicinity of Lake Narocz, where the Russians [illegible] ried them through three lines of German trenches and heavy [illegible] by wire entanglements The Germans resorted to their favorite method of counter fighting, routing the Germans in spite of desperate resistance and capturing more than 1,000 men, including 17 officers, a dozen machine guns and other booty.

Germans Counter Attack

The Germans are invariably answering the Russian attacks by attacking at other sections of the line and from all appearances, according to military observers, the Teutonic forces lack coordination and it is evident that in spite of the recent concentration of additional troops in the region the Russians anticipated, their plans their adversaries may have had for a concerted offensive here

The German strength was estimated last autumn at eight corps of infantry and several cavalry divisions in the region, but these have since been considerably augmented

GERMANS GAIN AT VERDUN; REPULSE RUSSIAN ATTACKS

Berlin, (via London), March 24 Further successes have been won by the Germans in the vicinity of Verdun, the court, northwest of Verdun. The headquarters announced today that additional trenches having been occupied.

"On the Russian front the violent attacks on the German lines in the northern sector have been continued both northwest and south of Lake Narocz All the assaults broke down, the statement declares.

The text of the statement follows:

"The violence of the artillery fire increased considerably at times in Champagne, on the Somme-Py-Ave high road and in the Argonne, and in the Meuse district as far as the Moselle.

"Following up our success on Wednesday we occupied another couple of trenches west of Hausen On this occasion the number of prisoners increased to 32 officers and 1,000 men.

"Eastern theater. While during the day the Russians collected their forces only for a strong advance against the bridge head at Jacobstadt, east of Buschshof, they undertook during the night repeated attacks north of the Jacobstadt railroad and an attempt to take up by surprise south of Postawy and exhausted themselves in unbroken fierce storm attacks against the front north of Widzy All their attacks broke down with heavy losses in front of our position."

NO CHANGE AT VERDUN PARIS WAR OFFICE SAYS

Paris, March 24.—There has been no change in the situation around Verdun since yesterday, according to the war office announcement this afternoon.

West of the Meuse the night was calm. East of the river there were intermittent bombardments.

...STATEMENT ON USE OF U-BOATS

...Soon to Make Clear Position With Regard ...Submarines.

Washington, D. C., March 25.—The United ... soon will make for the information of the nations of the world a comprehensive statement of its position in regard to the conduct of submarine warfare and the arming of merchant ships for offensive purposes. It has not been definitely determined just what form the announcement will take, but it is considered not unlikely that a circular memorandum may be addressed to the powers.

Whatever the form of the declaration presented after careful consideration to all the claims mad by both sets of European belligerents, it will serve to guide the course of this government in future negotiations. The United States will stand unalterably upon the principles already laid down.

CARRANZA AND AMERICAN TROOPS SAID TO BE ENGAGING VILLISTAS IN BATTLE

HE SPOILS BRITISH SHIRKERS' PLANS TO ESCAPE WAR SERVICE

Sir William Robertson.

Sir William Robertson, Britain's hustling chief of the imperial general staff, is proving an evil genius t othe British shirkers. He is rounding them up for war duty, and it is likely they will be shown less consideration at the front than the men who volunteered freely and without compulsion.

Funston Headquarters Anxiously Awaiting Word From General Pershing Regarding Outcome of Reported Battle at El Oso Where Punitive Expedition, Supported By Carranza Troops, Is Reported to Have Come In Contact With Outlaw Band Yesterday.

CAPTURE OR DEATH OF VILLA NOT IMPROBABLE

If De Facto Government Troops Are Lending Real Support to United States Forces, Belief Prevails Cutthroat Gang Soon Will Be Forced to Make Last Stand—Border Has No Word Direct From Expeditionary Force, Though Mexicans Report Victory.

El Paso, Tex March 24.—At Fort Bliss and in other well informed circles the report that Villa had been definitely located at El Oso was generally credited It was pointed out, however, that this did not necessarily indicate the bandit's early capture as the character of the country would aid him in escaping if he wished to break up his command and avoid an actual engagement

Columbus, N. M., March 24.—A telegram from General Pershing later asserted that dust storms which have been raging have made it impossible for aviators to do scouting duty It is known also that the storms have interfered with troop movements. No mention was made of a battle in General Pershing's report.

Washington, March 24.—First advices from Tampico, where the situation has been causing alarm, came today to the state department, reporting conditions uncertain. The garrison seems in control of the situation. Some 2,000 Americans, the dispatch states, would pass through there if they left Mexico.

Douglas, Ariz., March 25.—Gen. P Elias Calles, military governor of Sonora, received a telegram today from General Enriquez, military governor of Chihuahua, stating that five columns of Carranze troops were closing in on Villa and his bandits near Namiquipa and that with the aid of the Americans it was believed that Villa would not be able to escape

Governor Enriquez also telegraphed that the reports concerning the revolt of General Herrera, were false and an effort by the "radicals" to cause trouble between the Carranza government and the United States.

Columbus, N. M., March 25—No word was received at the military bases here today from Gen J J Pershing's expeditionary command, either by wireless or courier A motor truck train which was expected to arrive early in the day failed to report, but it was believed it may have been delayed by the dust of a northerner

With the interruption which it was asserted was not due to a deflection in the wireless, numbers of rumors all with apparently little foundation became current here One had it that American troops were engaged in a battle with Villa in the vicinity of (deleted) south of Casas Grandes.

Another had it that the bandit and a small band were surrounded in the same vicinity by American cavalrymen who rapidly were closing in on him

The rumors could be neither confirmed nor denied by military authorities here because of the absence of dispatches Relief was expressed, however, that all was well with the American forces below Casas Grandes.

San Antonio, Tex March 25.—Reports from Mexican sources that Villa had been defeated by American and Mexican troops at El Oso near Namiquipa were declared by General Funston as probably true, although no confirmation from General Pershing had been received Improvement in the working of the wireless made it appear likely that General Pershing would break his fifth day of silence regarding operations south of Casas Grandes by rendering an account of the engagement at El Oso.

Keen interest was displayed at Fort Sam Houston in the report General Gavira announced that he had received from Casas Grandes, since, if true, it increases many times, in the opinion of officers there, the chances for capturing Villa or running him to a point where he must make his last fight.

Open Way for Pursuit.

Until now the operations against Villa have been nothing more than a campaign of location. Three cavalry detachments have been working southward along widely separated trails, but the opportunity for direct chase now is offered, it was indicated by staff officers, who have followed the details of the pursuit.

Here it was not believed that the Americans would allow Villa to get out of their sight again, and that his capture or death appeared more likely today than at any other time.

General Pershing, it was believed, would concentrate as many of his men as possible in the pursuing forces, relieving those who have been riding the country south of Casas Grandes.

El Paso, March 23.—Mexican Consul Garcia announced last night that he had received a telegram from General Bertani that Villa was surrounded at El Oso, five miles south of Namiquipa, by American and Mexican troops, and that a decisive battle was imminent. Bertani's message said the American troops came up following the defeat of Villa earlier in the day by the Carranza forces at Santa Gertrudes.

Closing In On Villa.

General Gavira, of the Juarez garrison received further advices regarding the battle between Pancho Villa and Colonel Cano, near Namiquipa last Monday. General Gavira said the Villa troops were routed and fled toward Namiquipa and that forces of General Luis Gutierrez went in pursuit to give Villa further battle. Forces were said to be advancing up on Villa in command of Colonel Cano, from Las Cruces, Colonel Salas from Babricora; Colonel Hernandez from Tepenuarez, General Garza, from Santa Clara and General Cavazos, from Temosacic, the telegram added

ANOTHER SUBMARINE OUT OF COMMISSION

Rammed By Tugboat, D-1 Has Cracked Shaft and Dented Plates.

New York, March 25.—The submarine D-1 is temporarily out of commission at the New York navy yard today with some of her plates dented and one of her armature shafts cracked The repairs cannot be completed for several weeks

The D-1 recently was rammed by a tugboat off New London, Conn. On the way to the navy yard, her cracked shaft was discovered. Five submarines now undergoing repairs here.

CONSIDER INCREASE IN TARIFF ON SUGAR

Senate Finance Committee Figures on Means of Raising More Revenue.

Washington, March 25.—Serious consideration was given by the Senate finance committee today to a proposal not only to repeal the free sugar clause of the tariff, but to increase the present tariff by ½ cent a pound and levy a production tax of 1 cent a pound on all sugar produced in the United States to raise emergency revenue.

MAINE DELEGATION IS NOT INSTRUCTED

Portland, Me., March 24.—Maine republicans in state and district conventions yesterday selected uninstructed delegates to the national convention

Presidential elector candidates were nominated and a platform for the state campaign next fall was adopted The platform arraigned the Washington administration for its Mexican policy, urged the need of national preparedness and advocated the establishment of a permanent tariff commission.

AMERICANS IMPORTING QUANTITIES OF VODKA

New York, March 24.—Russian vodka is being imported into this country in large quantities, according to the statement of the Russian industrial agent in New York. Although the sale of vodka is prohibited in the empire, a special export bureau in Petrograd was recently organized for the purpose of developing the export of Russian vodka and wines to the United States. The largest consumers of the Russian spirits are New York and Chicago, where vodka is being served in restaurants.

NAVAL OFFICER FOUND WITH BULLET IN HEAD

Seattle, Wash., March 24.—Junior Lieut. Ormand C. Pailthorpe, U. S. N., was found today, by officers of his ship, shot to death in his room on board the cruiser Saratoga.

Investigation showed that Lieutenant Pailthorp's wound was self inflicted. No cause for suicide is known. Pailthorp returned in February to the Puget Sound yard from the Asiatic station. He was engineer officer of the Saratoga.
